In view of the word 'may' used in clause (a) and the word 'shall' used in clause (b) of sub-s. (1) of S. 313 CrPC it is clear from the plain language that the Court is empowered by clause (a) to question the accused at any stage of the inquiry or trial while clause (b) obligates the Court to question the accused before he enters his defence on any circumstance appearing in the prosecution evidence against him. The section incorporates a rule of audi alteram partem and is actually intended for the benefit of the accused person. The mandate of S. 313(1)(b) demands that the accused person, if not a company or other juridical person, must be personally examined to explain the incriminating circumstances appearing against him in the prosecution evidence and the examination of his lawyer would not be sufficient compliance with the mandate of said provision. The newly added proviso is in the nature of an exception to clause (b) of sub-section (1) of S. 313 of the Code. It came to be added to sub-section (1) with a view to enabling the Court to dispense with the examination of the accused under clause (b) in a summons case if the Court has already dispensed with his personal attendance at an earlier point of time. Even in cases where the personal presence of the accused has been dispensed with under S. 205(1) or S. 317 of the Code the Magistrate can dispense with the mandatory requirement of clause (b) only in a summons case i.e. a case other than a warrant case. This is clear on a plain reading of the definitions of a summons case in S. 2(w) and a warrant case in S. 2(x) of the Code. Since an offence under S. 363 IPC is punishable with imprisonment for a term exceeding two years it is a warrant-case and not a summons case. Therefore, even in cases where the Court has dispensed with the personal attendance of the accused under S. 205(1) or S. 317 of the Code, the Court cannot dispense with the examination of the accused under clause (b) of S. 313 of the Code because such examination is mandatory. The submission that such a view will cause inconvenience and harassment to the accused cannot be accepted.

In the result the order impugned in the present appeal/writ petition of the Magistrate cannot be allowed to stand, more so in the instant case for the reason that the accused may raise the plea of violation of the due process clause if the order is sought to be executed in the foreign court. The order of the Magistrate is therefore, set aside and he is directed to pass appropriate orders in the light of this judgment in regard to the examination of the accused under S. 313(1)(b) of the Code. Usha K. Pillai v. Raj K. Srinivas, (1993) 3 SCC 208: 1993 SCC (Cri) 824: AIR 1993 SC 2090: (1993) 2 Crimes 336: 1993 Cri LJ 2669.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and S. Mohan, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-4-1993]

Overruled in Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740

[3336] — Ss. 313(3), 315(1) proviso (b) and 161(2) — Rule against adverse inference from silence of accused at trial — Held, the rule flows from combined reading of CrPC provisions and Art. 20(3) — Constitution of India — Art. 20(3) — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 114 Ill. (g)

Indian law incorporates the rule against adverse inferences from silence which is operative at trial stage. This position is embodied in a conjunctive reading of Article 20(3) of the Constitution and Sections 161(2), 313(3) and proviso (b) of Section 315(1) CrPC. Even though an accused is a competent witness in his/her own trial, he/she cannot be compelled to answer questions that could expose him/her to incrimination and the trial Judge cannot draw adverse inferences from refusal to do so. This position is cemented by prohibiting any of the parties from commenting on the failure of the accused to give evidence. (Para 141). Selvi v. State of Karnataka, (2010) 7 SCC 263.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and R.V. Raveendran and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision : 5-5-2010]

Woolmington v. Director of Public Prosecutions, 1935 AC 462: 1935 All ER Rep 1 (HL), relied on

180th Report of the Law Commission of India (May 2002), quoted

[3337] — S. 313(4) — Accused admitting possession of primary gold but disclaiming its acquisition or ownership — The answer being separable, the first part of the statement can be used against him — CrPC, 1898, S. 342(3). CCE v. V.P. Sayed Mohd., (1983) 1 SCC 370: 1983 SCC (Cri) 191: AIR 1983 SC 168: 1983 Cri LJ 225: (1983) 53 Comp Cas 377.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: E.S. Venkataramiah and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-1-1983]

— S. 314(3) See Ss. 309 and 314(3)

— S. 315 See also Ss. 342-A and 340, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1162 et seq. and pp. 1145 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 315 See also Ss. 311, 233, 243 and 315

[3338] — S. 315 — Accused appearing as defence witness — He cannot be denied the opportunity to produce the documents on which he relies merely because he did not produce them before his evidence was recorded — Matter remitted to the trial court to permit the appellant to produce the documents on which he relies. Gajendra Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (1998) 8 SCC 612: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1608.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and Sujata V. Manohar, J. [Date of decision: 9-2-1996]

[3339] — Ss. 315(1) proviso (b) and 313 — Burden of proof on accused — Mode of discharging — Held, an accused need not examine himself — He may discharge his burden on the basis of the materials already brought on record — Hence, view taken by the courts below that for proving the defence the accused is required to step into the witness box and unless he does so he would not be discharging his burden, held, not sustainable — Constitution of India — Art. 19(1)(a) — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 101, 103 and 3 — Constitution of India — Art. 20(3)

An accused for discharging the burden of proof placed upon him under a statute need not examine himself. He may discharge his burden on the basis of the materials already brought on record. An accused has a constitutional right to maintain silence. The courts below committed a serious error in proceeding on the basis that for proving the defence the accused is required to step into the witness box and unless he does so he would not be discharging his burden. Such an approach on the part of the courts is not correct. (Paras 32 and 31). Krishna Janardhan Bhat v. Dattatraya G. Hegde, (2008) 4 SCC 54: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 166: AIR 2008 SC 1325: (2008) 141 Comp Cas 665: (2008) 1 KLT 425: (2008) 4 Mah LJ 354.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-2008]

[3340] — S. 315(1)(b) — Defence — Even if accused has not entered the witness box, no adverse inference can be drawn against the defence

It is basic criminal jurisprudence that an accused cannot be compelled to be examined as a witness and no adverse inference can be drawn against the defence merely because an accused person has chosen to abstain from the witness box. In this case the High Court was also not right in criticising and discarding availability of plea of self-defence to the accused persons on the ground that the plea was not specifically taken by the accused in their statements under Section 313 CrPC and because the accused did not enter the witness box. (Para 24) . Kashiram v. State of M.P., (2002) 1 SCC 71: 2002 SCC (Cri) 68: AIR 2001 SC 2902.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and R.C. Lahoti and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-10-2001]

Vijayee Singh v. State of U.P., (1990) 3 SCC 190: 1990 SCC (Cri) 378, relied on

— S. 317 See also S. 540-A, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1300 in Vol. 2

— S. 317 See Ss. 205 and 317

See also Ss. 273 and 317

See also Ss. 313(1)(b) proviso and 2(w) & (x), 205(1) and 317

[3341] — S. 317 — Exemption from appearance of accused — Where Managers, Partners and Directors of a distillery company, accused of discharging polluted effluents into a river (Gomti in Lucknow), were alleged to be responsible for the actions of the company, held, if any of these persons applied for dispensing with personal appearance, trial court could exempt him, subject to conditions deemed fit by such court — Conditions may include: absent accused to be represented by counsel in court; he not to dispute his identity as a particular an accused; he to be present when his presence imperative — Environment (Protection) Act, 1986, S. 16 (Para 15). U.P. Pollution Control Board v. Mohan Meakins Ltd., (2000) 3 SCC 745: AIR 2000 SC 1456: 2000 Cri LJ 1799: 2000 All LJ 872.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-3-2000]

[3342] — Ss. 317 and 205 — Relief — Exemption from personal attendance — Simultaneous criminal cases against the same accused in different courts in different States — Relief of exemption from personal attendance in such cases, held, cannot be granted by Supreme Court — However, liberty granted to apply to the court concerned for such relief — Constitution of India — Arts. 32 and 21

The direction for exemption from personal appearance cannot be had from the Supreme Court since it is within the powers of the Magistrate and in his judicial discretion to dispense with the personal appearance of an accused and as such it would be open to the party to apply to the trial/Sessions Court concerned for such exemption and in the event of there being such an application, the same should be disposed of in accordance with the law. (Para 61). Narinderjit Singh Sahni v. Union of India, (2002) 2 SCC 210: AIR 2001 SC 3810.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik, U.C. Banerjee and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-10-2001]

[3343] — Ss. 317 and 273, 251 & 205 — Dispensing with personal attendance of an accused before criminal court in the interest of justice — In summons case, such as one involving offence under S. 138 of Negotiable Instruments Act, if it appears to the court that personal attendance may result in enormous hardship and cost to an accused, the court may dispense with his personal attendance either throughout or at any particular stage of the proceedings, after taking an undertaking from him that he would not dispute his identity as the particular accused in the case and that a counsel on his behalf would be present in court and he would have no objection in taking evidence in his absence — Main concern of the court is administration of criminal justice and for that purpose the court proceedings should register progress — However, discretion to dispense with the personal attendance should be exercised in rare cases due to distance or any physical disability or other good reason, in the interests of justice — Also, where counsel does not appear or cooperate, resort can be had to Ss. 205(2) and 317(1) — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138

It is clear from Section 273 CrPC that the normal rule is that the evidence shall be taken in the presence of the accused. However, even in the absence of the accused such evidence can be taken but then his counsel must be present in the court, provided the accused has been granted exemption from attending the court. The concern of the criminal court should primarily be the administration of criminal justice. For that purpose the proceedings of the court in the case should register progress. Presence of the accused in the court is not for marking his attendance just for the sake of seeing him in the court. It is to enable the court to proceed with the trial. If the progress of the trial can be achieved even in the absence of the accused the court can certainly take into account the magnitude of the sufferings which a particular accused person may have to bear with in order to make himself present in the court in that particular case. (Para 14)

Sections 251 and 205(1) make it clear that in appropriate cases the Magistrate can allow an accused to make even the first appearance through a counsel. The Magistrate is empowered to record the plea of the accused even when his counsel makes such plea on behalf of the accused in a case where the personal appearance of the accused is dispensed with. Section 317 of the Code has to be viewed in the above perspective as it empowers the court to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused (provided he is represented by a counsel in that case) even for proceeding with the further steps in the case. However, one precaution which the court should take in such a situation is that the said benefit need be granted only to an accused who gives an undertaking to the satisfaction of the court that he would not dispute his identity as the particular accused in the case, and that a counsel on his behalf would be present in court and that he has no objection in taking evidence in his absence. This precaution is necessary for the further progress of the proceedings including examination of the witnesses. (Para 17)

As regards the question as to what might happen if the counsel engaged by the accused (whose personal appearance is dispensed with) does not appear or that the counsel does not cooperate in proceeding with the case, the legislature has taken care of such eventualities. Section 205(2) says that the Magistrate can in his discretion direct the personal attendance of the accused at any stage of the proceedings. The last limb of Section 317(1) confers a discretion on the Magistrate to direct the personal attendance of the accused at any subsequent stage of the proceedings. He can even resort to other steps for enforcing such attendance. Thus it is within the powers of a Magistrate and in his judicial discretion to dispense with the personal appearance of an accused either throughout or at any particular stage of such proceedings in a summons case, if the Magistrate finds that insistence of his personal presence would itself inflict enormous suffering or tribulations on him, and the comparative advantage would be less. Such discretion need be exercised only in rare instances where due to the far distance at which the accused resides or carries on business or on account of any physical or other good reasons the Magistrate feels that dispensing with the personal attendance of the accused would only be in the interests of justice. However, the Magistrate who grants such benefit to the accused must take the precautions enumerated above, as a matter of course. When an accused makes an application to a Magistrate through his duly authorised counsel praying for affording the benefit of his personal presence being dispensed with the Magistrate can consider all aspects and pass appropriate orders thereon before proceeding further. (Para 19)

These are days when prosecutions for the offence under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act are galloping up in criminal courts. Due to the increase of inter-State transactions through facilities of the banks, it is not uncommon that when prosecutions are instituted in one State the accused might belong to a different State, sometimes a far distant State. Not very rarely, such accused would be ladies also. For prosecution under Section 138 of the NI Act the trial should be that of a summons case. When a Magistrate feels that insistence of personal attendance of the accused in a summons case, in a particular situation, would inflict enormous hardship and cost to a particular accused, it is open to the Magistrate to consider how he can relieve such an accused of the great hardships, without causing prejudice to the prosecution proceedings. (Para 15). Bhaskar Industries Ltd. v. Bhiwani Denim & Apparels Ltd., (2001) 7 SCC 401: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1254: AIR 2001 SC 3625.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-8-2001]

See also Kelkar: Criminal Procedure, 4th Edn., 2001, pp. 325-26

[3344] — S. 317(1) — Exemption from personal appearance — Where complaint under S. 498-A IPC had been filed before CJM lacking territorial jurisdiction and Supreme Court had directed that it ought to be transferred, held, that it was not necessary for the Supreme Court to decide the application of appellant-accused for exemption from personal appearance in court to which case transferred (Para 2). Bhudeb Chandra Karmakar v. State of W.B., (2001) 9 SCC 226: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1571.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-7-1996]

— S. 319 See Ss. 157, 160, 167, 170, 190 and 319

See also Ss. 161 & 162(1) proviso and 319

See also Ss. 167, 202(1), 204, 273 Expln. and 319

See also Ss. 173(8) & (2) and 319

See also Ss. 190, 204, 173(2), 154, 162 and 319

See also Ss. 190 and 319

See also Ss. 193, 209 and 319

See also Ss. 209, 319, 2(g), 227 and 228

See also Ss. 262 (Ch. XXI), 251, 254(1)(Ch. XX), 319 and 2(g)

See also Ss. 300 and 319

See also Ss. 300, 319, 202 and 203

See also Ss. 303, 300, 202 and 319

See also Ss. 401 and 319

See also Ss. 437 and 319

[3345] — S. 319 — Nature and scope

Section 319 empowers the court to proceed against persons not being the accused appearing to be guilty of offence. Sub-sections (1) and (2) of this section provide for a situation when a court hearing a case against certain accused person finds from the evidence that some person or persons, other than the accused before it is or are also connected in this very offence or any connected offence; and it empowers the court to proceed against such person or persons for the offence which he or they appears or appear to have committed and issue process for the purpose. It provides that the cognizance against newly added accused is deemed to have been taken in the same manner in which cognizance was first taken of the offence against the earlier accused. It naturally deals with a matter arising from the course of the proceeding already initiated. The scope of the section is wide enough to include cases instituted on private complaint. Sohan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (1990) 4 SCC 580: 1990 SCC (Cri) 650: AIR 1990 SC 2158: (1990) 3 Crimes 120.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.N. Saikia and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-8-1990]

[3346] — S. 319 — Addition of additional accused under — When warranted — Held, only when there is a reasonable prospect of case against such accused ending in their conviction — A fishing inquiry is not contemplated — It is not enough that it might be necessary to implead such accused to find out the real truth, even though there is no solid foundation of a case against them — Hence appellant-accused struck off from record. Palanisamy Gounder v. State, (2005) 12 SCC 327.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-2005]

Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609; Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 7 SCC 792: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2093, followed

[3347] — S. 319 — Addition of other persons as accused — "Evidence" — Meaning in the context — Cross-examination of the witness not necessary prior to addition of any other person as accused on the basis of evidence of such witness — Opportunity to cross-examine the witness would be available to such person at the time of trial — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 3

The father of the prosecutrix lodged an FIR alleging commission of offence under Sections 363, 366 and 376 IPC by the appellants and one P. According to the complainant his daughter was taken by the said three persons due to previous enmity with the object of committing rape. The girl and P were found in Noida. After investigation the police found that the appellants were not involved in the case and therefore, charges were framed only against P. PWs 1, 2, 3 and the prosecutrix were examined and when cross-examination had begun, the Public Prosecutor moved an application under Section 319 CrPC for arraigning the appellants as additional accused. The trial court added the appellants also as accused and summoned them to stand trial. Revision preferred by the appellants was dismissed by the High Court. The question involved in this case was — whether the statement of a prosecution witness without the said witness having been cross-examined, constituted "evidence" within the meaning of Section 319 CrPC, 1973.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The contention that the term "evidence" as used in Section 319 CrPC would mean evidence which is tested by cross-examination cannot be accepted. The question of testing the evidence by cross-examination would arise only after addition of the accused. There is no question of cross-examining the witness prior to adding such person as accused. The section does not contemplate an additional stage of first summoning the person and giving him an opportunity of cross-examining the witness who has deposed against him and thereafter deciding whether such person is to be added as accused or not. Once the Sessions Court records a statement of the witness it would be part of the evidence. There being no cross-examination, it would be a prima facie material which would enable the Sessions Court to decide whether powers under Section 319 should be exercised or not. The word "evidence" occurring in sub-section (1) is used in a comprehensive and broad sense which would also include the material collected by the investigating officer and the material or evidence which comes before the court and from which the court can prima facie conclude that the person not arraigned before it is involved in the commission of the crime. (Paras 13 and 10)

No doubt power under Section 319 is to be sparingly used. But that would not mean that when a prosecutrix names three persons who were involved in a serious crime, they are not to be added as accused by exercise of such power. (Para 14). Rakesh v. State of Haryana, (2001) 6 SCC 248: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1090: AIR 2001 SC 2521.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-7-2001]

Balvinder Singh v. State of Haryana, (1996) 3 RCR 231 (P&H); Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1999) 1 RCR 562 (P&H); Dharam Pal v. Hardial Singh, (1999) 2 RCR 165 (P&H); Rakesh Batra v. State of Haryana, (2000) 4 RCR 10 (P&H), overruled

State v. Kishori, (1999) 1 RCR 200 (Del); Chanan v. State of Punjab, (1999) 1 RCR 371 (P&H); Ram Gopal v. State of U.P., (1999) 2 RCR 534 (All), approved

State of H.P. v. Surinder Mohan, (2000) 2 SCC 396: 2000 SCC (Cri) 400; Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 1 SCC 345: 1979 SCC (Cri) 295; Ranjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (1998) 7 SCC 149: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1554, relied on

[3348] — S. 319 — Addition of other persons as accused on basis of "evidence" before trial court — Exercise of power as to, under S. 319 — Test and guidelines therefor — Word "evidence" occurring in S. 319 — Meaning and scope of — Acting under S. 319 on basis of statement of a witness made before trial court — Prerequisite for — Whether application under S. 319 is not maintainable unless the cross-examination of such witness is complete — Whether power under S. 319 can be exercised only if the court is satisfied that the accused summoned in all likelihood would be convicted — Considering that decision made by a two-Judge Bench in Mohd. Shafi case, (2007) 14 SCC 544 in relation to said issues was in conflict with relevant statutory provisions and previous decisions of Supreme Court particularly the decision made by a two-Judge Bench in Rakesh case, (2001) 6 SCC 248, matter referred to a three-Judge Bench for consideration afresh

Referring the matter to a three-Judge Bench,

Held :

Section 319 CrPC empowers a court to proceed against any person if it appears from the evidence that such person has also committed an offence for which he can be tried together with the other accused. (Para 26)

When an examination-in-chief of a witness is over, there being no cross-examination, it would be merely prima facie material. But it would enable the trial court to decide whether powers under Section 319 CrPC should be exercised or not. Once the trial court records a statement of a witness, it becomes a part of evidence. It is true that finally at the time of trial, the accused must be given an opportunity to cross-examine the witness to test truthfulness of such statement. But that stage would come only after the person is added as an accused. (Paras 49 and 48)

It is thus difficult to accept the contention that the term "evidence" used in Section 319(1) CrPC would mean evidence which is tested by cross-examination. The question of testing the evidence by cross-examination would arise only after addition of the accused. There is no question of cross-examining the witness prior to adding such person as accused. The section does not contemplate an additional stage of first summoning the person and giving him an opportunity of cross- examining the witness who has deposed against him and thereafter deciding whether such person should or should not be added as accused. The word "evidence" occurring in Section 319(1) CrPC is used in comprehensive and broad sense which would also include the material collected by the investigating officer and the evidence which comes before the court and from which the court is satisfied that person not arraigned before it is involved in the commission of the crime. (Para 51)

At the stage of issuing summons or process, a court has to see whether there is prima facie case against the person sought to be summoned or against whom process is sought to be issued. At that stage, there is no question of giving an opportunity of hearing to such person. The entire scheme of the CrPC is that an accused does not come into picture at all till process is issued. (Para 54)

Further, when a person who is not shown as an accused is sought to be added on the basis of evidence in exercise of power under Section 319 CrPC, he is not before the court. Other accused against whom the trial has commenced are very much before the court and generally they are represented by an advocate/advocates. In the evidence of a witness, when role of other person i.e. other than the accused is described by prosecution witnesses, normally, the accused who are already on record are not affected. Grant or rejection of application under Section 319 would generally not alter their position. Therefore, holding that unless the cross-examination of a witness by the accused who were already on record is over and complete, no power under Section 319 CrPC can be exercised, does not appear to be sound. (Para 56)

That apart, if the above view is taken, any question of prejudice to the added accused does not arise at all. The CrPC has taken care by sufficiently protecting and safeguarding the interest of such added accused. As per Section 319(4) CrPC, after exercise of power by the court under Section 319(1) CrPC, the added accused would be placed in the same position as other accused and will get all rights an accused can get under the CrPC. The proceedings against the added accused shall be commenced afresh and witnesses will be reheard. Their evidence, prior to addition of the accused cannot be used against the accused who was not there earlier. (Para 57)

Even in Rakesh case, (2001) 6 SCC 248 it was ruled that an application under Section 319 CrPC is maintainable even without completion of cross-examination of a witness. If the court is satisfied on the basis of examination-in-chief of a witness that a person not shown to be an accused appears to have committed an offence, it can exercise the power under Section 319 CrPC. However, in Mohd. Shafi case, (2007) 14 SCC 544 it was held that no such order can be passed by a court under Section 319 unless the cross-examination of the witness is complete. In Mohd. Shafi case it was also held that the jurisdiction under Section 319 CrPC can be exercised only if the court is satisfied that the accused summoned in all likelihood would be convicted. The said observations do not appear to be in consonance with statutory provisions or previous decisions of the Supreme Court. The test formulated in Mohd. Shafi case substantially curtails discretionary power of the court under Section 319(1) CrPC. (Paras 52, 70, 71 and 74)

The decisions in Rakesh case and Mohd. Shafi case were made by a two-Judge Bench. Whereas Rakesh case was decided in 2000, Mohd. Shafi case was decided in 2007. In Mohd. Shafi case, however, the attention of the Court was not invited to Rakesh case. In the light of the said conflicting decisions of coordinate Benches, the matter is referred to a three-Judge Bench for consideration of following questions:

(i) When the power under Section 319(1) CrPC of addition of the accused can be exercised by a court? Whether application under Section 319 is not maintainable unless the cross-examination of the witness is complete?

(ii) What is the test and what are the guidelines of exercising power under Section 319(1) CrPC? Whether such power can be exercised only if the court is satisfied that the accused summoned in all likelihood would be convicted? (Paras 52 and 75). Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 16 SCC 785.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-11-2008]

Mohd. Shafi v. Mohd. Rafiq, (2007) 14 SCC 544: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 889, doubted

[Ed.: The two-Judge Bench of the Supreme Court in this case has held that the word "evidence" occurring in Section 319(1) CrPC is used in a comprehensive and broad sense which would also include the material collected by the investigating officer and the evidence which comes before the court and from which the court is satisfied that person not arraigned before it is involved in the commission of the crime. However, a three-Judge Bench of the Supreme Court in Ranjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (1998) 7 SCC 149 had held that "evidence" envisaged in Section 319 CrPC is the evidence tendered during trial of the case if the offence is triable by a Court of Session and not the material placed before the commital court.

The decision in Ranjit Singh has however been doubted by a three-Judge Bench in Dharam Pal v. State of Haryana, (2004) 13 SCC 9. In Dharam Pal the Supreme Court referred the question of power of Sessions Court to take cognizance of offences against persons not charge-sheeted, whose complicity in the crime comes to light from material available on record at stage of committal of case to it, to a larger Bench.

Now in the present case the Court has referred similar questions, though their scope is much broader, to a larger Bench. However, it seems that neither Ranjit Singh, nor Dharam Pal, both three-Judge Bench decisions, were brought to the attention of the Court in the present case. It may be in the public interest if the questions referred to larger Benches by Dharam Pal and the present Bench were to be heard by the same Bench.]

[3349] — S. 319 — Evidence that may be considered for summoning other persons under — Court if must wait till cross-examination is over — This question having been referred to a larger Bench — Options before the current Bench — Observed, that the same would not mean that the current Bench should wait for the decision of the larger Bench — As cross-examination had taken place in present case, and this Bench is not required to decide the said question, it is assumed that in all cases the court may not wait till cross-examination is over for the purpose of exercising its jurisdiction under S. 319. Harbhajan Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 13 SCC 608: (2009) 82 AIC 29 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 4429.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-7-2009]

Rakesh v. State of Haryana, (2001) 6 SCC 248: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1090, relied on

Mohd. Shafi v. Mohd. Rafiq, (2007) 14 SCC 544: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 889, doubted

[3350] — S. 319 — Extraordinary nature of power under, stressed — Exercise of power under — Stage at which and person(s) against whom invocable — Person named in FIR but not charge-sheeted — Held, application under S. 319 is maintainable not only during pendency of inquiry/investigation but also in course of trial — Court is not denuded of its power under S. 319 only because person named as accused in FIR not charge-sheeted as a result whereof no cognizance taken against him — What is necessary for invoking S. 319 is that person concerned is not being tried as an accused before court, at that stage — A finding to that effect must be premised on the evidence that has been brought on record — A prima facie view would not be enough — Court must satisfy itself about existence of an extraordinary situation enabling it to exercise the extraordinary jurisdiction under S. 319 — Power under S. 319 must be exercised very sparingly and not as a matter of course (Paras 11 to 15 and 18). Ram Singh v. Ram Niwas, (2009) 14 SCC 25: (2009) 78 AIC 32 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2009]

Kailash v. State of Rajasthan, (2008) 14 SCC 51: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 1006; MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohatgi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115, followed

[3351] — S. 319 — Nature and scope of power under — Courts to whom available — Exercise of discretionary power under — Procedure discussed — Held, power under S. 319 CrPC should be exercised cautiously and not as a matter of routine

The discretion under Section 319 CrPC should be exercised cautiously and not as a matter of routine. (Para 28)

Section 319 CrPC applies to all the courts including the Sessions Court. It empowers the court to add any person, not being the accused before it, but against whom there appears during trial sufficient evidence indicating his involvement in the offence, as an accused and direct him to be tried along with other accused. If such person is not attending the court, he can be arrested or summoned. If he is attending the court, although not under arrest or upon a summons, he can be detained by such court for the purpose of inquiry into, or trial of the offence which he appears to have committed. Section 319(4) lays down that where the court proceeds against any person under Section 319(1), the proceedings in respect of such person shall be commenced afresh and witnesses reheard. (Para 16). Suman v. State of Rajasthan, (2010) 1 SCC 250.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-11-2009]

Anil Singh v. State of Bihar, (2006) 13 SCC 421: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 708; Mohd. Shafi v. Mohd. Rafiq, (2007) 14 SCC 544: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 889; Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609, relied on

41st Report of the Law Commission, relied on

[3352] — S. 319 — Nature, scope and applicability — Trial of persons not already arraigned as accused — Evidence on basis of which may be ordered — Relevant test for — Prima facie case if enough — Implication by first informant or any witness, if enough — Held, power under S. 319 is an extraordinary power which is required to be exercised sparingly and if compelling reasons exist for taking cognizance against persons against whom action has not been taken — Before an additional accused can be summoned for standing trial, nature of evidence should be such which would make out grounds for exercise of this extraordinary power — Materials brought before court must also be such which would satisfy court that it is one of those cases where its jurisdiction should be exercised — A higher standard for purpose of forming opinion to summon a person as additional accused is required to satisfy the ingredients thereof — An order under S. 319, should not be passed only because first informant or one of the witnesses seeks to implicate other person(s) — Sufficient and cogent reasons are required to be assigned by court so as to satisfy ingredients of S. 319 — Mere ipse dixit would not serve the purpose — Such evidence must be convincing, at least for purpose of exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction — For the aforementioned purpose, courts are required to apply stringent tests; one of the tests being whether evidence on record is such which would reasonably lead to conviction of the person sought to be summoned — Mere existence of a prima facie case may not serve the purpose — Impugned judgment set aside and matter remitted (Paras 18, 19 and 21 to 23). Sarabjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 16 SCC 46.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-5-2009]

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115; Lok Ram v. Nihal Singh, (2006) 10 SCC 192: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 532; Lal Suraj v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 2 SCC 696: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 844; Y. Saraba Reddy v. Puthur Rami Reddy, (2007) 4 SCC 773: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 412, followed

Gurdip Singh v. State of Punjab, Criminal Revision No. 2073 of 2006 decided on 12-10-2006 (P&H), reversed

Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710, distinguished

[3353] — S. 319 — Object and nature of power under — Stated

The primary object underlying Section 319 CrPC is that the whole case against all the accused should be tried and disposed of not only expeditiously but also simultaneously. Justice and convenience both require that cognizance against the newly added accused should be taken in the same case and in the same manner as against the original accused. The power under Section 319 CrPC must be conceded as incidental and ancillary to the main power to take cognizance as part of normal process in the administration of criminal justice. (Para 28). Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 16 SCC 785.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-11-2008]

[3354] — S. 319 — Power to summon a person as accused — Relevant considerations — Held, court to see as to whether there are sufficient grounds to proceed against the accused — In the present case, evidence of witnesses showing complicity of Respondent 1 with the crime — Hence held, High Court was not justified in setting aside trial court's order summoning the said respondent (Para 3). Golla Devavaram v. Karanam Balarama Krishna Murthy, (2007) 15 SCC 665.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-12-2005]

[3355] — S. 319 — Power to summon other persons appearing to be guilty — Material to be considered — Test to be applied — Relevance of defences raised by the persons summoned — Deceased committing suicide by consuming "sulphos" tablets after accused S had delivered nude photographs to her house and her paternal uncle's house and thereafter telephoned her that her father and uncle must have received his gifts — Alleged that prior to said incident, S always used to follow her despite her protests and when she refused his marriage proposal, S and appellants threatened and blackmailed her — However, charge-sheet filed only against S — When witnesses deposed before trial court that it was not only S but appellants also who had threatened to "defame" the deceased, and on perusing dying declaration wherein deceased had categorically named them as active participants in abetting her to commit suicide, trial court summoned them as additional accused in connection with FIR under Ss. 306/509/420/120-B/456 IPC — Sustainability — Held, only because no charge-sheet had been submitted against certain persons, same by itself, would not be a sufficient ground to decline to exercise jurisdiction to add other persons as accused on considering evidence adduced before court by prosecution — Dying declaration together with deposition of witnesses prima facie shows participation of appellants in alleged offence — It cannot be concluded that said evidence, even if given face value and taken to be correct in its entirety had not disclosed commission of an offence or on basis thereof judgment of conviction could not be recorded at all — Defences raised by appellants may or may not be accepted, but at present stage evidence adduced discloses some offence — Hence, summoning of appellants, upheld — Penal Code, 1860, S. 306 (Paras 9, 10, 15 to 18). Harbhajan Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 13 SCC 608: (2009) 82 AIC 29 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 4429.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-7-2009]

Mohd. Shafi v. Mohd. Rafiq, (2007) 14 SCC 544: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 889, distinguished

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115, considered and relied on

Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 1 SCC 345: 1979 SCC (Cri) 295; Lok Ram v. Nihal Singh, (2006) 10 SCC 192: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 532; Shashikant Singh v. Tarkeshwar Singh, (2002) 5 SCC 738: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1203; Kailash v. State of Rajasthan, (2008) 14 SCC 51: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 1006; Sarabjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 16 SCC 46, relied on [3356] — S. 319 — Trial of persons not already arraigned as accused — Existence of prima facie case — If sufficient for summoning such persons — Meaning of word "appears" in S. 319 — FIR alleging that nine persons attacked and assaulted wife, mother and father of Respondent 1 as a result whereof, the father expired — Charge-sheet filed only against four persons and final form was submitted in favour of appellants — Large number of witnesses examined and cross-examined on behalf of accused persons before trial court — Thereafter, application filed for summoning appellants as accused — Application allowed by High Court — Sustainability — Held, High Court seriously erred in proceeding on premise that mere existence of a prima facie case would be sufficient to exercise jurisdiction under S. 319 — Word "appears" in S. 319 makes it necessary for court to arrive at a satisfaction that the evidence adduced on behalf of prosecution, if unrebutted, would lead to conviction of persons sought to be added as accused — Discretionary jurisdiction under S. 319 can be exercised only after the legal evidence comes on record and from that evidence it appears that the person concerned has committed an offence — High Court furthermore seriously erred insofar as it failed to take into consideration that when order was passed, trial court was in a position to consider evidence brought on record including cross-examination of prosecution witnesses — High Court did not arrive at any finding that a case was made out for exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction under S. 319, which is required to be exercised very sparingly (Para 20). Ram Singh v. Ram Niwas, (2009) 14 SCC 25: (2009) 78 AIC 32 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2009]

[3357] — S. 319 — Applicability — Requirement of prima facie evidence for commission of offence under S. 498-A IPC — Whether satisfied — Complainant wife alleging that mother-in-law and appellant-accused (sister-in-law) castigating her for insufficient dowry and subjecting her to physical and mental harassment and that appellant-accused instigating complainant's husband to inflict physical torture, that only after about one week after marriage, mother-in-law and appellant telling her that in the marriage, items like scooter, fridge, air conditioner, etc. were not given and marriage party was not served well and that on instigations of mother-in-law and appellant, the husband gave beating with belan and appellant forcibly removed her rings — Complainant's allegations in FIR clearly corroborated in her S. 161 CrPC statement recorded by police and statement of witnesses — Effect — Held, there is prima facie evidence against appellant to proceed under S. 319 — Therefore, trial of appellant-accused should proceed — Penal Code, 1860, S. 498-A

Respondent 2 wife lodged a complaint under Section 498-A against her in-laws. However, the police after investigation filed a negative final report in respect of the appellant (accused sister-in-law). The Magistrate took cognizance against the accused sister-in-law under Section 319 CrPC.

Dismissing the appeal of the accused sister-in-law,

Held :

A reading of the plain language of Section 319(1) CrPC makes it clear that a person not already an accused in a case can be proceeded against if in the course of any inquiry into or trial of an offence it appears from the evidence that such person has also committed any offence and deserves to be tried with other accused. There is nothing in the language of Section 319(1) CrPC from which it can be inferred that a person who is named in the FIR or complaint but against whom charge-sheet is not filed by the police, cannot be proceeded against even though in the course of any inquiry into or trial of any offence the court finds that such person has committed any offence for which he could be tried together with the other accused. (Paras 17, 14 and 15)

The process issued against the appellant under Section 319 CrPC cannot be quashed only on the ground that even though she was named in the complaint, the police did not file charge-sheet against her. A person who is named in the FIR or complaint with the allegation that he/she has committed any particular crime or offence, but against whom the police does not launch prosecution or files charge-sheet or drops the case, can be proceeded against under Section 319 CrPC if from the evidence collected/produced in the course of any inquiry into or trial of an offence, the court is prima facie satisfied that such person has committed any offence for which he can be tried with other accused. (Paras 27 and 21)

The Magistrate had objectively considered the entire matter and judiciously exercised discretion under Section 319 CrPC for taking cognizance against the appellant. The issue of summons against the appellant was not an abuse of the process of the court. While deciding the application filed under Section 319 CrPC, the Magistrate noticed the allegations made by Respondent 2 in the complaint that her mother-in-law and sister-in-law had castigated her for insufficient dowry and subjected her to physical and mental harassment and that the sister-in-law had instigated the complainant's husband to inflict physical torture upon her, which were supported by the statements recorded by the police under Section 161 CrPC and by the Magistrate under Section 164 CrPC. In her complaint Respondent 2 alleged that after one week of the marriage, her mother-in-law and sister-in-law (the appellant) told her that in the marriage, items like scooter, fridge, air conditioner, etc. were not given and the marriage party was not served well and that on the instigations of the mother-in-law and the appellant sister-in-law, the husband gave beating with the belan and the appellant forcibly removed the rings. (Paras 35, 34 and 32)

The complainant clearly spelt out the role played by the appellant and made a specific mention about this in the letters written to her parents and the Magistrate opined that a prima facie case was made out for issuing process against the appellant. The father and mother of Respondent 2 and four other persons, whose statements were recorded under Section 161 CrPC, clearly spelt out the role played by the appellant in harassing Respondent 2 and instigating the complainant's husband to inflict torture upon her. Despite this, the police did not file charge-sheet against the appellant thinking that she had no occasion to make demand for dowry or harass Respondent 2 because the appellant was living with her husband. Therefore, the trial of the appellant should proceed and should be decided expeditiously. (Paras 35, 33 and 37)

The High Court broadly referred to the factual matrix of the case and held that the orders passed by the Magistrate and Sessions Judge did not suffer from any illegality or perversity warranting interference under Section 482 CrPC. The approach adopted by the High Court is in consonance with the settled law. Although at one stage, the Sessions Judge allowed the revision filed by the appellant and declared that in view of the bar of limitation contained in Section 468 CrPC, the Magistrate could not have taken cognizance against the appellant, the said order was set aside by the High Court and the matter was remitted for fresh disposal of the revision petition. In the post remand order passed by him, the Sessions Judge independently examined the entire record and held that prima facie case was made out for initiating proceedings against the appellant herein under Section 498-A IPC. (Paras 36 and 35). Suman v. State of Rajasthan, (2010) 1 SCC 250.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-11-2009]

Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 1 SCC 345: 1979 SCC (Cri) 295; MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115; Lok Ram v. Nihal Singh, (2006) 10 SCC 192: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 532; Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609; Anil Singh v. State of Bihar, (2006) 13 SCC 421: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 708; Mohd. Shafi v. Mohd. Rafiq, (2007) 14 SCC 544: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 889; State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335: 1992 SCC (Cri) 426; CBI v. Ravi Shankar Srivastava, (2006) 7 SCC 188: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 233; R. Kalyani v. Janak C. Mehta, (2009) 1 SCC 516: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 567; Mahesh Chaudhary v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 4 SCC 439: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 332, relied on

[3358] — Ss. 319 and 482 — Nature, scope and applicability of S. 319 — Quashment of process issued under S. 319 — When proper — Magistrate finding prima facie evidence and issuing process under S. 319 against appellant-accused named in FIR but police in its charge-sheet dropping charges against said accused — High Court not finding any illegality or perversity in issuance of process under S. 319 — Legality — Held, the process issued under S. 319 is legal and could not be quashed under S. 482 on ground that police did not file charge-sheet — Penal Code, 1860, S. 498-A — CrPC, 1898, S. 351

Respondent 2 wife lodged a complaint under Section 498-A against her in-laws. However, the police after investigation filed a negative final report in respect of the appellant (accused sister-in-law). The Magistrate took cognizance against the accused sister-in-law under Section 319 CrPC.

Dismissing the appeal of the accused sister-in-law,

Held :

A reading of the plain language of Section 319(1) CrPC makes it clear that a person not already an accused in a case can be proceeded against if in the course of any inquiry into or trial of an offence it appears from the evidence that such person has also committed any offence and deserves to be tried with other accused. There is nothing in the language of Section 319(1) CrPC from which it can be inferred that a person who is named in the FIR or complaint but against whom charge-sheet is not filed by the police, cannot be proceeded against even though in the course of any inquiry into or trial of any offence the court finds that such person has committed any offence for which he could be tried together with the other accused. (Paras 17, 14 and 15)

The process issued against the appellant under Section 319 CrPC cannot be quashed only on the ground that even though she was named in the complaint, the police did not file charge-sheet against her. A person who is named in the FIR or complaint with the allegation that he/she has committed any particular crime or offence, but against whom the police does not launch prosecution or files charge-sheet or drops the case, can be proceeded against under Section 319 CrPC if from the evidence collected/produced in the course of any inquiry into or trial of an offence, the court is prima facie satisfied that such person has committed any offence for which he can be tried with other accused. (Paras 27 and 21)

The Magistrate had objectively considered the entire matter and judiciously exercised discretion under Section 319 CrPC for taking cognizance against the appellant. The issue of summons against the appellant was not an abuse of the process of the court. While deciding the application filed under Section 319 CrPC, the Magistrate noticed the allegations made by Respondent 2 in the complaint that her mother- in-law and sister-in-law had castigated her for insufficient dowry and subjected her to physical and mental harassment and that the sister-in-law had instigated the complainant's husband to inflict physical torture upon her, which were supported by the statements recorded by the police under Section 161 CrPC and by the Magistrate under Section 164 CrPC. In her complaint Respondent 2 alleged that after one week of the marriage, her mother-in-law and sister-in-law (the appellant) told her that in the marriage, items like scooter, fridge, air conditioner, etc. were not given and the marriage party was not served well and that on the instigations of the mother-in-law and the appellant sister-in-law, the husband gave beating with the belan and the appellant forcibly removed the rings. (Paras 35, 34 and 32)

The complainant clearly spelt out the role played by the appellant and made a specific mention about this in the letters written to her parents and the Magistrate opined that a prima facie case was made out for issuing process against the appellant. The father and mother of Respondent 2 and four other persons, whose statements were recorded under Section 161 CrPC, clearly spelt out the role played by the appellant in harassing Respondent 2 and instigating the complainant's husband to inflict torture upon her. Despite this, the police did not file charge-sheet against the appellant thinking that she had no occasion to make demand for dowry or harass Respondent 2 because the appellant was living with her husband. Therefore, the trial of the appellant should proceed and should be decided expeditiously. (Paras 35, 33 and 37)

The High Court broadly referred to the factual matrix of the case and held that the orders passed by the Magistrate and Sessions Judge did not suffer from any illegality or perversity warranting interference under Section 482 CrPC. The approach adopted by the High Court is in consonance with the settled law. Although at one stage, the Sessions Judge allowed the revision filed by the appellant and declared that in view of the bar of limitation contained in Section 468 CrPC, the Magistrate could not have taken cognizance against the appellant, the said order was set aside by the High Court and the matter was remitted for fresh disposal of the revision petition. In the post remand order passed by him, the Sessions Judge independently examined the entire record and held that prima facie case was made out for initiating proceedings against the appellant herein under Section 498-A IPC. (Paras 36 and 35). Suman v. State of Rajasthan, (2010) 1 SCC 250.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and G.S. Singhvi, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-11-2009]

Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 1 SCC 345: 1979 SCC (Cri) 295; MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115; Lok Ram v. Nihal Singh, (2006) 10 SCC 192: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 532; Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609; Anil Singh v. State of Bihar, (2006) 13 SCC 421: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 708; Mohd. Shafi v. Mohd. Rafiq, (2007) 14 SCC 544: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 889; State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335: 1992 SCC (Cri) 426; CBI v. Ravi Shankar Srivastava, (2006) 7 SCC 188: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 233; R. Kalyani v. Janak C. Mehta, (2009) 1 SCC 516: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 567; Mahesh Chaudhary v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 4 SCC 439: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 332, relied on

[3359] — S. 319 — Applicability — Addition of other person as accused — When warranted — Held, such addition is warranted when it appears during trial/recording of evidence that such person has committed an offence which can be tried together with the accused — Magistrate then has power to summon such person as accused in the case

On 21-8-1986 an FIR was lodged against the appellant for commission of offences punishable under Sections 409, 420, 467, 468 and 471 IPC. The allegation in the FIR was that the appellant, a school clerk had forged signature of Respondent 2 (the Head Master-cum-Drawing and Disbursing Officer) and embezzled substantial amount of more than rupees one lakh between 1979 and 1986. As stated in the FIR, the said fact came to light when audit was carried out and report was submitted. Hence, the complaint.

According to the appellant, during the course of investigation, signatures of Respondent 2 were also taken and were sent for examination but the report of the said examination was never filed by the prosecution in the proceedings. It was only in the course of recording of prosecution evidence that certain witnesses deposed against Respondent 2 alleging that it was Respondent 2 who had withdrawn the amount and signatures purported to have been forged by the appellant really tallied with the specimen signatures of Respondent 2.

In view of the said fact, the appellant on 5-2-1994 and on 6-1-1996, filed applications under Section 319 CrPC in the Court of the Judicial Magistrate praying therein to add Respondent 2 as an accused and summon him being Head Master-cum-Drawing and Disbursing Officer who had prepared false and forged bills, misappropriated the amount and committed fraud on the Government. The Magistrate allowed the applications of the appellant and issued summons under Section 204 to Respondent 2 by joining him as accused. Though the order was passed on 22-1-1996, it was not challenged by Respondent 2. When the State challenged the order by filing a revision petition in the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge, it was dismissed vide an order dated 6-5-1996. After a gap of more than eight months from the order passed by the Magistrate summoning Respondent 2, he filed an application on 25-9-1996 to review/recall summoning order dated 22-1-1996. He also contended in a separate petition that he could not be prosecuted in absence of sanction as required by Section 197 CrPC. The Magistrate by an order dated 12-3-1997 dismissed the application of Respondent 2 holding it to be not maintainable in view of dismissal of revision of the State by the Additional Sessions Judge. Being aggrieved by the order passed by the Judicial Magistrate, Respondent 2 filed two revision petitions before the Additional Sessions Judge who allowed the revisions of Respondent 2 on 5-3-1998 and set aside the order dated 22-1-1996. The appellant challenged both the orders before the High Court but failed.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Section 319 CrPC empowers a court to proceed against any person not shown to be an accused if it appears from the evidence that such person has also committed an offence for which he can be tried together with the accused. Sometimes a Magistrate while hearing a case against one or more accused finds from the evidence that some person other than the accused before him is also involved in that very offence. It is only proper that a Magistrate should have power to summon by joining such person as an accused in the case. (Paras 20 and 21)

The primary object underlying Section 319 is that the whole case against all the accused should be tried and disposed of not only expeditiously but also simultaneously. Justice and convenience both require that cognizance against the newly added accused should be taken in the same case and in the same manner as against the original accused. The power must be regarded and conceded as incidental and ancillary to the main power to take cognizance as part of normal process in the administration of criminal justice. (Para 21). Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2008]

[3360] — S. 319 — Applicability — Addition of other person as accused — Appellant (school clerk) was accused of embezzling school funds by putting forged signatures of Respondent 2 (Head Master-cum-Drawing and Disbursing Officer) under Ss. 409, 420, 467, 468 and 471 IPC — Report of the signature expert though received by the prosecution was not produced before the court — When from the evidence of PWs 2, 14 and 11 it came to light that Respondent 2 might be involved in the crime, the Magistrate issued summons against Respondent 2 on an application made by the appellant — Cognizance by Magistrate, held, was not illegal or arbitrary — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 409, 420, 467, 468 and 471

Now, an application under Section 319 CrPC can only be made to a court and the court may exercise the power under the said section if it appears from evidence that any person other than the accused had also committed an offence for which he can be tried together with the accused. It was the case of the appellant that it was during the course of prosecution evidence that he came to know that signatures of Respondent 2 were sent for examination, some report was received by the prosecution which was not produced in court and on the basis of such evidence, the case was made out against Respondent 2. In these circumstances, there is no infirmity in the prayer granting applications under Section 319 CrPC. Therefore, even on merits, the order passed by the Magistrate issuing summons to Respondent 2 could not be said to be unlawful or even improper. The Magistrate issued summons taking into account evidence led by the prosecution, particularly, by PWs 2, 14 and 11. (Paras 62, 49 and 56). Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2008]

[3361] — S. 319 — Applicability — Addition of other persons as accused — Consideration of — Stage at which application to be filed — Effect of delay in progress of trial — Satisfaction of investigating/supervising officer — Weight to be given to — In a case of murder appellant complainant PW 1 lodging complaint with the police on which investigation taken up — On an application by the respondents, the matter was investigated by Dy SP and on the basis of his report the names of the respondents deleted from the array of accused — Charge-sheet filed on 7-11-1997 in which their names were not included — Case committed to Sessions Court on 10-11-1997 — There was delay in progress of trial — PW 1 examined on 7-7-2004 — Immediately thereafter, application under S. 319 filed for arraying respondents as accused, which was dismissed — Trial court rejecting the application primarily on the ground that the plea of alibi raised by the respondents was found to be correct in the investigation by the Dy SP — Assailing the same, both the State and appellant filed revisions before High Court which were dismissed holding, inter alia, that there was delay in making the application and that the silence for such a long period shows that the plea of alibi was true — Before Supreme Court appellant contending that the alleged occurrence took place on 26-7-1997; though the charge-sheet was filed on 7-11-1997 the charges were framed on 25-8-2003; PW 1 was examined on 7-7-2004 and immediately after his evidence, application under S. 319 was filed — Hence, there was no delay in making the application since till the charges were framed application under S. 319 could not have been filed — Considering the facts and circumstances, held, High Court failed to notice this fact — Order-sheet shows that delay could not be attributed to the complainant — There was basic fallacy in the approach of High Court — It called for the records from the IO for its satisfaction whether the enquiry conducted was to be preferred to the evidence of PW 1 — If the satisfaction of the investigating officer or supervising officer is to be treated as determinative, then, held, the very purpose of S. 319 would be frustrated — Whatever be the worth of evidence of PW 1 for the purposes of S. 319, was required to be analysed — The conclusion that the IO's satisfaction would be given primacy is unsustainable — Also, High Court not justified in holding that there was belated approach — Hence, High Court's order set aside with directions to the trial court for proceeding against respondents under S. 319 (Paras 2 to 5, 7 and 10). Y. Saraba Reddy v. Puthur Rami Reddy, (2007) 4 SCC 773: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 412: (2007) 54 AIC 27 (SC).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P.K. Balasubramanyan and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-5-2007]

Lok Ram v. Nihal Singh, (2006) 10 SCC 192: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 532, followed

Distinguished in Lal Suraj v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 2 SCC 696*

[3362] — S. 319 — Application — Procedural safeguards — Compliance with

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

It is not explained as to how the order of the High Court is prejudicial to the appellant. The High Court has directed all procedural safeguards to be followed. The High Court observed that the order of taking cognizance deserved to be set aside. The Magistrate was directed to consider the relevant materials as well as the earlier charge-sheet. It was directed that while taking note of the matter for fresh consideration a notice was required to be sent to the de facto complainant and giving the de facto complainant an opportunity of hearing which was to be done before the order was passed. The High Court also referred to applicability of Section 319 CrPC in appropriate cases. There is no infirmity in the High Court's order. (Paras 12 and 7 to 9). Chittaranjan Mirdha v. Dulal Ghosh, (2009) 6 SCC 661.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-5-2009]

Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 7 SCC 768: 2005 SCC (Cri) 404, relied on

Bhagwant Singh v. Commr. of Police, (1985) 2 SCC 537: 1985 SCC (Cri) 267; Abhinandan Jha v. Dinesh Mishra, AIR 1968 SC 117; India Carat (P) Ltd. v. State of Karnataka, (1989) 2 SCC 132: 1989 SCC (Cri) 306, cited

[3363] — S. 319 — Nature, scope and applicability — Power to summon persons as additional accused — When invocable — Matters to be considered — Held, power under S. 319 should only be invoked where it is imperative to meet ends of justice — Evidence adduced against such persons must be substantive evidence in order to summon them for trial, warranting their prosecution thereafter with good chance of conviction — In present case, there was no direct evidence of complicity of appellants in the incident — Hence, orders summoning them, set aside — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The common thread in most matters where the use of discretion is in issue is that in the exercise of such discretion each case has to be considered on its own set of facts and circumstances. In matters relating to invocation of powers under Section 319 CrPC, the court is not merely required to take note of the fact that the name of a person who has not been named as an accused in the FIR has surfaced during the trial, but the court is also required to consider whether such evidence would be sufficient to convict the person being summoned. Since issuance of summons under Section 319 CrPC entails a de novo trial and a large number of witnesses may have been examined and their re-examination could prejudice the prosecution and delay the trial, the trial court has to exercise such discretion with great care and perspicacity. (Para 25)

The power under Section 319 CrPC is to be invoked, not as a matter of course, but in circumstances where the invocation of such power is imperative to meet the ends of justice. The fulcrum on which the invocation of Section 319 CrPC rests is whether the summoning of persons other than the named accused would make such a difference to the prosecution as would enable it not only to prove its case but to also secure the conviction of the persons summoned. It is only logical that there must be substantive evidence against a person in order to summon him for trial, although he is not named in the charge-sheet or he has been discharged from the case, which would warrant his prosecution thereafter with a good chance of his conviction. (Paras 26, 27 and 29)

In the instant case, on the quality of the evidence adduced by the prosecution as far as the appellants are concerned, it is difficult to hold with any amount of certainty that the same would in all probability secure a conviction against the appellants. The evidence which seeks to connect the appellants with the commission of the offence is hearsay in nature. Since in the present case, except for a statement in the FIR that the complainant strongly believed that the murder of her father was preplanned and there were many conspirators involved, there is no direct evidence of the complicity of the appellants in the incident, it would not be proper to subject the appellants to trial by invoking the provisions of Section 319 CrPC. (Paras 28 and 30)

Therefore, the order passed by the trial court issuing summons to the appellants under Section 319 CrPC and the impugned order of the High Court directing the appellants to surrender before the trial court and to apply for bail, are set aside. (Para 31). Brindaban Das v. State of W.B., (2009) 3 SCC 329.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-1-2009]

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115, followed

Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609; Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 7 SCC 792: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2093; Kavuluri Vivekananda Reddy v. State of A.P., (2005) 12 SCC 432: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 324, relied on

Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710, considered

[3364] — S. 319 — Nature, scope and applicability — Trial of persons not already arraigned as accused — Evidence on basis of which may be ordered — Evidence of person not eyewitness and another a hearsay witness — Held, power under S. 319 is required to be exercised very sparingly — Before order summoning such persons is passed, trial court must form an opinion on the basis of evidence brought before it, that a case has been made out that such person could be tried together with the other accused — On facts, in a murder trial, indisputably, no charge-sheet was filed against the appellants, hence, no cognizance was taken against them — However, trial court, relying upon the evidence of PWs 6 and 7, allowed the application for summoning appellants, exercising power under S. 319 — Revision filed by appellants thereagainst dismissed by High Court — Sustainability — Held, both trial court and High Court relied on the deposition of PWs 6 and 7 — However, PW 6 was not an eyewitness to the occurrence and PW 7 was only a hearsay witness — Therefore, no evidence worth the name was brought on record to arrive at a satisfaction that there was a reasonable prospect of conviction of the appellants — Under S. 319, the court has to exercise its power on the basis of fresh evidence brought before it — Hence, on the basis of aforementioned evidence, there was no possibility of recording judgment of conviction against appellants — Thus, impugned orders set aside

There cannot be any doubt or dispute that although a person named in the FIR or another who was found to be involved in the commission of the offence may be summoned at a subsequent stage by the trial court, legality of an order summoning such an accused, however, would depend on the nature of evidence brought on record by the prosecution witnesses and other relevant factors. At that stage what is material is the evidence of prosecution witnesses and other materials which have been brought on record. (Para 9)

Section 319 CrPC is a special provision. It seeks to meet an extraordinary situation. It although confers a power of wide amplitude but is required to be exercised very sparingly. Before an order summoning an accused is passed, the trial court must form an opinion on the basis of the evidence brought before it that a case has been made out that such person could be tried together with the other accused. There is no dispute with the legal proposition that even if a person had not been charge-sheeted, he may come within the purview of the description of such a person as contained in Section 319. (Para 11)

PW 6 is not an eyewitness to the occurrence and PW 7 is only a hearsay witneSs. No evidence worth the name, therefore, had been brought on record to arrive at a satisfaction that there was a reasonable prospect of conviction of the appellants. (Paras 13 to 15)

The approach of the trial court was wholly incorrect. The principle of strong suspicion may be a criterion at the stage of framing of charge as all the materials brought during investigation were required to be taken into consideration, but, for the purpose of summoning a person, who did not figure as accused, a different legal principle is required to be applied. A court framing a charge would have before it all the materials on record which were required to be proved by the prosecution. In a case where, however, the court exercises its jurisdiction under Section 319 CrPC, the power has to be exercised on the basis of the fresh evidence brought before the court. There lies a fine but clear distinction. (Para 16)

Applying the legal principles to the fact of this case, the trial court as also the High Court committed a serious error in passing the impugned judgment. On the basis of the aforementioned evidence, there was no possibility of recording a judgment of conviction against the appellants at all. Thus, impugned orders are set aside. (Paras 21 and 22). Lal Suraj v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 2 SCC 696.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-12-2008]

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115; Guriya v. State of Bihar, (2007) 8 SCC 224: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 521; Mohd. Shafi v. Mohd. Rafiq, (2007) 14 SCC 544; Kailash v. State of Rajasthan, (2008) 14 SCC 51, relied on

Yuvaraj Ambar Mohite v. State of Maharashtra, (2006) 12 SCC 512: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 554, considered

Y. Saraba Reddy v. Puthur Rami Reddy, (2007) 4 SCC 773: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 412, distinguished

[3365] — S. 319 — Scope of — Relevant factors to be considered for exercising jurisdiction under, restated — Trial court dismissed the application under S. 319 after evaluating the statement of witnesses made to police as well as their statement made before the trial court which were improved versions — Even if additional accused was present, trial court concluded against his participation and found no justification to array him as an accused — High Court set aside the order of trial court — Held, order of High Court is erroneous — High Court was required to consider the evidence on record independently that whether there was any material in the evidence not only to connect the appellant but whether it was sufficient to justify the words "it appears that such person has committed the crime" — Words "it appears" in S. 319 are not to be read lightly — Reliance placed by High Court on Shashikant Singh case, (2002) 5 SCC 738 was misplaced

A written report came to be made at Police Station wherein RK complained that he was attacked by RP, K, PK, KK, C and M. Offences were registered under Sections 147, 148, 341, 452, 24/149, 323, 324/149 and 308/149 IPC. However, in the charge-sheet the present appellant K was not arrayed as an accused. During the course of trial when the prosecution witnesses were examined, the complainant moved an application under Section 319 CrPC to array K as an accused. The Sessions Judge took stock of the evidence which was led during the trial and came to the conclusion that even if K was presumed to be present at the place of occurrence, it was not proved that he took part in the assault and there was no justification for taking any cognizance against him.

When the revision petition against the said order was pending before the High Court, the trial concluded and some of the accused persons were acquitted while three of them came to be convicted for offences under Section 323 IPC. By its impugned order, the High Court allowed the revision and directed the trial court to rehear the application filed under Section 319 CrPC.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The key words in this section are "it appears from the evidence" ... "any person" ... "has committed any offence". It is not, therefore, that merely because some witnesses have mentioned the name of such person or that there is some material against that person, the discretion under Section 319 CrPC would be used by the court. This is apart from the fact that such person against whom such discretion is used, should be a person who could be tried together with the accused against whom the trial is already going on. The Supreme Court has, time and again, declared that the discretion under Section 319 CrPC has to be exercised very sparingly and with caution and only when the court concerned is satisfied that some offence has been committed by such person. This power has to be essentially exercised only on the basis of the evidence. It could, therefore, be used only after the legal evidence comes on record and from that evidence it appears that the person concerned has committed an offence. The words "it appears" are not to be read lightly. In that the court would have to be circumspect while exercising this power and would have to apply the caution which the language of the section demands. (Paras 9, 10 and 11)

The trial court found that all these witnesses were giving improved versions during their evidence in the court. Thus, it was clear that the trial court had come to a conclusion that there was no possibility of convicting K, the present appellant on the basis of the evidence led before it. The High Court merely relied on Shashikant Singh case, (2002) 5 SCC 738 where the question was entirely different. There the question was as to whether if the trial itself was over, could the Revisional Court direct the said person against whom the trial court had refused to exercise discretion under Section 319 CrPC to be tried afresh. In the present case also the conclusion of the trial was irrelevant insofar as the trial of the appellant is concerned. That by itself was no reason to try him with the aid of Section 319 CrPC. The High Court should have applied itself independently to the question as to whether there was any material in the evidence not only to connect the appellant but whether it was sufficient to justify the words "it appears that such person has committed the crime". No such effort is seen in the judgment of the High Court. On the other hand, the High Court has commented on the language of the judgment by the trial court while acquitting the other accused. That is an irrelevant consideration. (Paras 12 and 13). Kailash v. State of Rajasthan, (2008) 14 SCC 51.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2008]

Mohd. Shafi v. Mohd. Rafiq, (2007) 14 SCC 544; MCD v. Ram Krishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115; Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 7 SCC 792: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2093; Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609, followed

Shashikant Singh v. Tarkeshwar Singh, (2002) 5 SCC 738: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1203, distinguished

[3366] — S. 319 — Applicability — Addition of other persons as accused — Though named in the FIR, yet not charge-sheeted — FIR naming several persons as assailants of the deceased — Investigating officer excluding the names of some of such persons — Evidence of prosecution witnesses corroborating the alleged role of the excluded persons in the incident — In such circumstances, trial court's order summoning the excluded persons to stand trial under Ss. 147, 148, 149 and 302 IPC, held, did not suffer from any illegality or irregularity — High Court erred in holding that the court's power under S. 319 could not be invoked when a person named as an accused in FIR was not charge-sheeted — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 147, 148, 149 and 302 (Paras 7, 5 and 4). Rukhsana Khatoon v. Sakhawat Hussain, (2002) 10 SCC 661: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1153: AIR 2002 SC 2342: 2002 Cri LJ 2969.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2001]

Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, (1993) 2 SCC 16: 1993 SCC (Cri) 470; Girish Yadav v. State of M.P., (1996) 8 SCC 186: 1996 SCC (Cri) 552, relied on

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115, considered

[3367] — S. 319 — Applicability — Ceases to apply once a person is found to be accused in the case — S. 319 to be read in consonance with S. 398

There is need for caution in resorting to S. 319. Once a person is found to have been the accused in the case he goes out of the reach of S. 319. Whether he can be dealt with under any other provisions of the Code is a different question. In the case of the accused who has been discharged under the relevant provisions of the Code, the nature of finality to such order and the resultant protection of the persons discharged subject to revision under S. 398 of the Code may not be lost sight of. This should be so because the complainant's desire for vengeance has to be tempered with. Section 319 has to be read in consonance with S. 398. Sohan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (1990) 4 SCC 580: 1990 SCC (Cri) 650: AIR 1990 SC 2158: (1990) 3 Crimes 120.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.N. Saikia and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-8-1990]

[3368] — S. 319 — Applicability — Expression "any other person not being the accused" — Persons included under — An application under S. 319 for addition of other person as accused, reiterated, can be moved by the accused also

It is settled law that power under Section 319 CrPC can be exercised either on an application made to the court or by the court suo motu. It is in the discretion of the court to take an action under the said section and the court is expected to exercise the discretion judicially and judiciously having regard to the facts and circumstances of each case. In the instant case, an FIR was lodged against the appellant in August 1986. But it was during the course of trial that it came to light that signatures of Respondent 2 were also taken and were sent for examination and a report was received showing that the signatures on the basis of which amount was withdrawn tallied with the signatures of Respondent 2. The said report, however, was not filed by the prosecution. It was in these circumstances that the appellant made applications in 1994 and in 1996 under Section 319 CrPC requesting the Magistrate to join Respondent 2 as accused and to summon him. (Paras 22 and 23)

The Magistrate had power and jurisdiction to entertain applications filed by the appellant-accused under Section 319 CrPC and to issue summons to Respondent 2 by adding him as an accused. The said order could not be said to be illegal, unlawful or otherwise objectionable. Section 319 CrPC nowhere states that such an application can only be filed by a person other than the accused. (Paras 35, 25 and 27 to 29). Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2008]

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115; Shashikant Singh v. Tarkeshwar Singh, (2002) 5 SCC 738: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1203; Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 1 SCC 345: 1979 SCC (Cri) 295; Rakesh v. State of Haryana, (2001) 6 SCC 248: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1090; MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115; Lok Ram v. Nihal Singh, (2006) 10 SCC 192: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 532, relied on [3369] — S. 319 — Application — Manner of initiation/invocation of powers under and commencement of proceedings — Held, power under S. 319 CrPC can be exercised either on an application made to the court or by the court suo motu. Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2008]

[3370] — S. 319 — Applicability — Expression "any person not being the accused" — Scope — Power under S. 319(1) — Nature of — Said power when to be exercised — Person accused in another case, though in respect of the same occurrence but with different version, held, can be summoned under S. 319 — Petitioners not accused in complaint case summoned under S. 319 by the trial court in that case — But petitioners were accused in police case in respect of the same occur-

rence — Version of both the said cases different — Power under S. 319(1), held, discretionary in nature and is required to be used sparingly — On facts, said power, held, rightly exercised — Order of High Court upholding trial court's order and directing the said cases before the trial court to be decided at the same time, held, justified — No violation of Art. 20(2) of the Constitution

Power under Section 319 of the Code can be resorted to only when a person is not an accused before court and in the course of any inquiry into, or trial of, an offence, it appears from the evidence that such person has committed any offence for which he can be tried together with the accused. The court has discretion to proceed against such person for the offence which he appears to have committed. The inquiry into or trial is of "an offence" and not the offender. (Para 7)

Section 319 does not exclude from its purview a person who is not an accused before court in a case in which order for his summoning is passed despite the fact of such a person being an accused in another case though in respect of the same occurrence but with a different version. The words "any person not being the accused" in Section 319 would cover any person who is not already before the court in the case in which order under Section 319 is passed. It is the duty of the court to bring before it any person who appears to have committed an offence and to convict and pass an appropriate order of sentence on proof of such person having committed the offence. (Para 8)

The power of summoning under Section 319(1) is required to be sparingly used, it being a discretionary power but on facts of the present case, it cannot be held that the discretionary power has not been properly and legally used. The power is to be exercised to achieve criminal justice. Though the occurrence is the same but there are two versions — one in the police case and the other in the case in which the petitioners have been directed to be summoned. In case the petitioners are not before the Court as accused in the case in hand, the Court would not be in a position to convict and appropriately sentence them even if the version of the occurrence as given by Respondent 2 is accepted and held proved beyond reasonable doubt against the petitioners. (Para 15)

The High Court, while noticing that the police case and the complaint case are before the trial court, has observed that both cases must necessarily be decided at the same time. (Para 6)

The principles laid down in Harjinder Singh case, (1985) 1 SCC 422, are squarely applicable to the present case as well. The High Court in principle and in substance has adopted a similar course in the impugned order. The course adopted would not result in causing any prejudice to the accused-petitioners. It is the duty of the court to sift the grain from the chaff and punish the guilty while, at the same time, ensuring that there is no violation of Article 20(2) of the Constitution. The impugned order squarely satisfies all these requirements. (Para 14). Jarnail Singh v. State of Haryana, (2003) 9 SCC 328: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1814: AIR 2003 SC 4081: 2003 Cri LJ 2307.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-4-2003]

S.S. Khanna (Dr.) v. Chief Secy., Patna, (1983) 3 SCC 42: 1983 SCC (Cri) 562, distinguished and limited to its facts

Harjinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1985) 1 SCC 422: 1985 SCC (Cri) 93, applied

[3371] — S. 319 — Can be invoked by court having original jurisdiction as well as by court to which case committed for trial — Provision of S. 319 compared with S. 351 of the old Code

Section 319 corresponds to S. 351 of the repealed Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898. That section must be read in juxtaposition with S. 319 of the Code. The Law Commission suggested that S. 351 should be recast with a view to (i) empowering the court to summon a person not present in court to stand trial along with the named accused and (ii) enabling the court to take cognizance against the newly added accused by making it explicit that there will be no difference in the mode of taking cognizance against the added accused. Pursuant to the said recommendations made by the Law Commission S. 351 of the old Code was replaced by S. 319 in the present Code. Section 351 of the old Code empowered detention of any person attending a criminal court, although not under arrest or upon a summon, for the purpose of inquiry into or trial of any offence of which such court could take cognizance, if it appeared from the evidence so recorded that he may have committed an offence along with others. Sub-section (2) of S. 319 came to be inserted in response to the Law Commission's recommendation in paragraph 24.80 of its Report to enlarge the court's power to arrest or summon any person who appears to be involved in the commission of the crime along with others but who is not present in court. Next, it is significant to note that the words 'of which such court can take cognizance' have been omitted by the legislature. Instead the newly added sub-section (4)(b) expressly states that the case against the added accused may proceed as if such person had been an accused person when the court took cognizance of the offence. This takes care of the Law Commission's recommendation found in paragraph 24.81 extracted earlier. It is, therefore, manifest that S. 319 of the Code is an improved version of S. 351 of the old Code; the changes having been introduced therein on the suggestion of the Law Commission to make it comprehensive so that even persons not attending the court can be arrested or summoned as the circumstances of the case may require and by deleting the words 'of which such court can take cognizance' and by adding clause (b) it is clarified that the impleadment of a new person as an accused in the pending proceedings will not make any difference insofar as taking of cognizance is concerned. In other words it is made clear that cognizance against the added person would be deemed to have been taken as originally against the other co-accused. It is thus clear that the difficulty in regard to taking of cognizance which would have been experienced by the court has been done away with. The section comes into operation at the post-cognizance stage when it appears to the court from the evidence recorded at the trial that any person other than those named as offenders appears to have committed any offence in relation to the incident for which the co-accused are on trial. Section 319 can be invoked both by the Court having original jurisdiction as well as the Court to which the case has been committed or transferred for trial. Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, (1993) 2 SCC 16: 1993 SCC (Cri) 470: 1993 Cri LJ 1700: (1993) 1 Crimes 494: (1993) 1 BLJR 309.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-1993]

[3372] — S. 319 — Conviction of appellants who were summoned under S. 319 and arrayed as accused — Direction by High Court to try the appellants afresh — Propriety — Appellants arrayed after the entire evidence recorded, arguments heard and the judgment reserved — Further, after the appellants were summoned, the prosecution did not examine again all prosecution witnesses — Police papers also not supplied to them — In view of the facts, High Court concluding that serious prejudice had been caused to appellants — Hence, it setting aside the conviction and sentence and directing retrial of appellants — Incident in question occurred about 14 years back — Four other accused already convicted and their conviction attained finality — Considering the facts and circumstances, held, the direction by High Court regarding retrial of appellants was not sustainable — However, the part of High Court's judgment setting aside conviction of appellants, upheld (Paras 6 and 5). Prasanna Das v. State of Orissa, (2004) 13 SCC 30.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-8-2004]

Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609; Shashikant Singh v. Tarkeshwar Singh, (2002) 5 SCC 738: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1203, applied

[3373] — S. 319 — Court's power under, to proceed against others not arrayed as accused — Object of

Per Balasubramanyan, J.

The power under Section 319 CrPC is conferred on the court to ensure that justice is done to the society by bringing to book all those guilty of an offence. One of the aims and purposes of the criminal justice system is to maintain social order. It is necessary in that context to ensure that no one who appears to be guilty escapes a proper trial in relation to that guilt. There is also a duty to render justice to the victim of the offence. It is in recognition of this that CrPC has specifically conferred a power on the court to proceed against others not arrayed as accused in the circumstances set out by Section 319 CrPC. It is a salutary power enabling the discharge of a court's obligation to the society to bring to book all those guilty of a crime. (Para 20). Rajendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2007) 7 SCC 378: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 375: AIR 2007 SC 2786: (2007) 5 All LJ 485: (2007) 3 KLT 892: (2007) 57 AIC 69 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur[1] and P.K. Balasubramanyan[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 6-8-2007]

[3374] — S. 319 — 'Evidence' envisaged in — Meaning of — Material placed before the committal court cannot be treated as evidence during enquiry or trial — 'Evidence' under S. 319 is the evidence adduced during trial of the case if the offence is triable by a Court of Session

It is settled that "evidence" envisaged in Section 319 of the Code is the evidence tendered during trial of the case if the offence is triable by a Court of Session. The material placed before the committal court cannot be treated as evidence collected during enquiry or trial. Ranjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (1998) 7 SCC 149: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1554: AIR 1998 SC 3148.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, C.J. and K.T. Thomas and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-9-1998]

Raj Kishore Prasad v. State of Bihar, (1996) 4 SCC 495: 1996 SCC (Cri) 772, relied on [3375] — S. 319 — Expression "appears" occurring in — Connotation of — Held [Per

Balasubramanyan, J. (supplementing)], the said expression indicates an application of mind by the court to the evidence that has come before it and then taking a decision to proceed under S. 319 CrPC or not

Per Balasubramanyan, J. (supplementing)

For exercising jurisdiction under Section 319 CrPC, it need only appear to the court from the evidence that someone else has committed an offence. The court need not be satisfied that he has committed an offence. Even then, the court has a discretion not to proceed, since the expression used is "may" and not "shall". The legislature apparently wanted to leave that discretion to the trial court so as to enable it to exercise its jurisdiction under this section. The expression "appears" indicates an application of mind by the court to the evidence that has come before it and then taking a decision to proceed under Section 319 CrPC or not. Thus, exercise of power under Section 319 CrPC is left to the court trying the offence based on the evidence that comes before it. The court must be satisfied of the condition precedent for the exercise of power under Section 319. It cannot be assumed that a court trained in law would not exercise the power within the confines of the provision and decide whether it may proceed against such person or not. (Paras 16 and 21). Rajendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2007) 7 SCC 378: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 375: AIR 2007 SC 2786: (2007) 5 All LJ 485: (2007) 3 KLT 892: (2007) 57 AIC 69 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur[1] and P.K. Balasubramanyan[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 6-8-2007]

[3376] — S. 319 — Maintainability — Limitation — Held, there is no prescribed time-limit within which such application can be made

Section 319 CrPC does not prescribe any time-limit within which such application should be filed in the court. It was also urged that no applications by the appellant could have been entertained by the trial court after about 8 to 10 years from the date of filing of FIR. (Paras 25 and 62). Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2008]

[3377] — S. 319 — Power of court to proceed against other persons appearing to be guilty of offence — Police not filing charge-sheet against the four appellants — Evidence of eyewitnesses recorded by the court showing that there was enough involvement of those appellants in the commission of the offence — Held, the appellants could not be said to have been wrongly proceeded against as accused. Girish Yadav v. State of M.P., (1996) 8 SCC 186: 1996 SCC (Cri) 552: AIR 1996 SC 3098.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and S.B. Majmudar, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-3-1996]

[3378] — S. 319 — Power of trial court to issue summons against person appearing to be guilty — Scope — Held, may be invoked even where name of person summoned is in FIR yet no charge-sheet has been filed against him and no protest petition filed — High Court erred in quashing summons issued against respondent by trial court

Section 319 CrPC is intended to meet the situation where in course of trial, if materials come up against some other persons, who have not been arrayed as accused, and are not being tried, the court can summon them as accused. On the very face of it, the order of the High Court in interfering with the order issued by the trial Judge under Section 319 CrPC is erroneous. (Para 2). Geeta Ram v. Vedi Ram, (2002) 10 SCC 499.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-11-2001]

[3379] — S. 319 — Power to issue process against person not sent up for trial after investigation, but named in FIR — Nature and scope — Held, is limited and should be exercised cautiously and not mechanically — Court while issuing the process should arrive at a reasonable satisfaction that the prosecution would be able to prove the charges against whom the process is sought to be issued — Only because some evidence has been brought on record, the same by itself may not be a ground to issue process — Court, though not bound by the opinion of the investigating officer and forming only a prima facie opinion without enquiring into merits is required to maintain a balance and apply the tests on the touchstone of the materials brought on record

In the FIR the appellants were specifically named. However, upon investigation, the SP having come to the conclusion that they had been falsely implicated, a final form was filed in their favour. The said final form as against the appellants was accepted by the Magistrate but since a charge-sheet was filed against the other accused, cognizance was taken against them. The prosecution thereafter filed an application for summoning the appellants purported to be in terms of Section 319 CrPC, which was dismissed by the Second Addl. Sessions Judge inter alia holding that the appellants had been found to be innocent as there was doubt as regards their identity. However, the High Court in an application filed under Section 482 CrPC quashed the said order of the Additional Sessions Judge and directed the trial court to proceed in the matter in accordance with law. Hence, the instant appeal.

Held :

The trial court proceeded on a wrong premise in holding that as no charge-sheet was filed as against the appellants by the police the same was not sufficient to refuse to issue summons. The question, which was necessary to be posed in view of the propositions of law as laid down was as to whether any case has been made out for exercise of extraordinary jurisdiction by the court keeping in view the fact as to whether the prosecution would be able to bring home the charge. If the court comes to the conclusion having regard to the materials on record that the prosecution ultimately may not be able to bring home the charge as against the persons against whom processes were to be issued, it would decline to do so. (Para 20)

The High Court by the impugned judgment did not direct that the processes be issued. It merely directed the learned trial Judge to proceed in the matter in accordance with law. The same evidently did not mean that the High Court has already arrived at a conclusion that the processes must be issued. The High Court merely laid down a law as the learned trial Judge went wrong in formulating the correct question of law. The High Court, however, did not have any occasion to consider the merit of the matter. Hence, matter remitted to trial court for fresh consideration. (Para 22). Anil Singh v. State of Bihar, (2006) 13 SCC 421.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-10-2006]

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115; Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, (1993) 2 SCC 16: 1993 SCC (Cri) 470; Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609; Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 7 SCC 792: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2093; Kavuluri Vivekananda Reddy v. State of A.P., (2005) 12 SCC 432: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 324; Palanisamy Gounder v. State, (2005) 12 SCC 327: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 568; Rukhsana Khatoon v. Sakhawat Hussain, (2002) 10 SCC 661: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1153; Girish Yadav v. State of M.P., (1996) 8 SCC 186: 1996 SCC (Cri) 552, relied on [3380] — S. 319 — Power to proceed against other persons appearing to be guilty of an offence — Scope of — Condition for exercise of said power — Discretion of court in relation to that exercise — Held [Per Mathur, J. (for himself and Balasubramanyan, J.)], court can summon a person to face trial even though he may not have been charge-sheeted by the investigating agency or may have been discharged at an earlier stage — Per Balasubramanyan, J. (supplementing), in order to exercise jurisdiction under S. 319 CrPC, it must only "appear" to the court from the evidence that someone else has committed an offence — Court need not be "satisfied" about the commission of offence by that person — Decision to proceed or not to proceed against a person in terms of S. 319 CrPC is left to discretion of trial court — Said decision must be taken after applying mind to the evidence before the court — Power and discretion of court under S. 319 CrPC cannot be fettered either by calling it extraordinary or by stating that it will be exercised only in exceptional circumstances — It is intended to be used when the occasion envisaged by S. 319 arises

Per Mathur, J. (for himself and Balasubramanyan, J.)

If the evidence tendered in the course of any enquiry or trial shows that any person not being the accused has committed any offence for which he could be tried together with the accused, he can be summoned to face trial even though he may not have been charge-sheeted by the investigating agency or may have been discharged at an earlier stage. (Para 6)

Per Balasubramanyan, J. (supplementing)

For exercising jurisdiction under Section 319 CrPC, it need only appear to the court from the evidence that someone else has committed an offence. The court need not be satisfied that he has committed an offence. Even then, the court has a discretion not to proceed, since the expression used is "may" and not "shall". The legislature apparently wanted to leave that discretion to the trial court so as to enable it to exercise its jurisdiction under this section. The expression "appears" indicates an application of mind by the court to the evidence that has come before it and then taking a decision to proceed under Section 319 CrPC or not. Thus, exercise of power under Section 319 CrPC is left to the court trying the offence based on the evidence that comes before it. The court must be satisfied of the condition precedent for the exercise of power under Section 319. It cannot be assumed that a court trained in law would not exercise the power within the confines of the provision and decide whether it may proceed against such person or not. (Paras 16 and 21)

There is no reason to describe the power under Section 319 CrPC as an extraordinary power or to confine the exercise of it only if compelling reasons exist for taking cognizance against any other person against whom action has not been taken. The observations made in Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1 in this regard cannot be understood out of context. The said decision proceeded on its own peculiar facts. (Paras 16 and 17)

Section 319 CrPC only gives power to the court to ensure that all those apparently involved in the commission of an offence are tried together and none is left out. There is no reason to curtail this power of the court to do justice to the victim and to the society. There is no rationale in fettering that power and the discretion, either by calling it extraordinary or by stating that it will be exercised only in exceptional circumstances. It is intended to be used when the occasion envisaged by the section arises. (Paras 16 and 21). Rajendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2007) 7 SCC 378: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 375: AIR 2007 SC 2786: (2007) 5 All LJ 485: (2007) 3 KLT 892: (2007) 57 AIC 69 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur[1] and P.K. Balasubramanyan[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 6-8-2007]

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115; Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 1 SCC 345: 1979 SCC (Cri) 295: (1979) 2 SCR 306; Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, (1993) 2 SCC 16: 1993 SCC (Cri) 470, relied on

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115, explained and limited

[3381] — S. 319 — Power to summon a person as additional accused — Nature and scope of — Extraordinary and discretionary — Should be used sparingly — Court should not turn against another person whenever it comes across evidence connecting that other person also with the offence — In present case, only general statements made qua appellants by witnesses as to part played by appellants in instigating main accused — Appellants summoned 8 years after incident — Held, courts below committed serious illegality in proceeding to add appellants as accused under S. 319 (Para 6). Kavuluri Vivekananda Reddy v. State of A.P., (2005) 12 SCC 432.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-1-2005]

Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 7 SCC 792: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2093, relied on [3382] — S. 319 — Power under — When can be exercised

The power under Section 319(1) can be exercised only in those cases where involvement of persons other than those arraigned in the charge-sheet comes to light in the course of evidence recorded during the enquiry or trial. As that stage had not yet reached in the present case, the appellants could not have been summoned invoking Section 319 of the Code. (Para 8). Nisar v. State of U.P., (1995) 2 SCC 23: 1995 SCC (Cri) 306: 1995 Cri LJ 2118: (1995) 32 ACC 148.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-11-1994]

[3383] — S. 319 — Powers of court under — Addition of other persons as accused — Although power under S. 319 should be sparingly exercised but where PW names certain persons as being involved in a serious crime, their addition as accused in exercise of power would not be unwarranted

No doubt power under Section 319 is to be sparingly used. But that would not mean that when a prosecutrix names three persons who were involved in a serious crime, they are not to be added as accused by exercise of such power. (Para 14). Rakesh v. State of Haryana, (2001) 6 SCC 248: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1090: AIR 2001 SC 2521.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-7-2001]

[3384] — S. 319 — Powers of the court under, held, are circumscribed by limitations (Para 22). K.M. Mathew v. K.A. Abraham, (2002) 6 SCC 670: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1480: AIR 2002 SC 2989: (2002) 3 KLT 282.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: U.C. Banerjee and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-8-2002]

[3385] — S. 319 — Scope of operation of — Limited only to post-cognizance stage when complicity of persons, other than those named as offenders, comes to light from the evidence recorded in the course of inquiry or trial — Hence not exhaustive of the power to arraign more persons

The sweep of S. 319 is limited, in that, it is an enabling provision which covers the post-cognizance stage where in the course of an inquiry or trial the involvement or complicity of a person or persons not named by the investigating agency has surfaced which necessitates the exercise of the discretionary power conferred by the said provision. This may happen not merely in cases where despite the name of a person figuring in the course of investigation the investigating agency does not send him up for trial but even in cases where the complicity of such a person comes to light for the first time in the course of evidence recorded at the inquiry or trial. Thus S. 319 is not exhaustive of all post-cognizance situations and cannot be interpreted to be repository of all power for summoning such person or persons to stand trial along with others arraigned before the Court. Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, (1993) 2 SCC 16: 1993 SCC (Cri) 470: 1993 Cri LJ 1700: (1993) 1 Crimes 494: (1993) 1 BLJR 309.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-1993]

[3386] — Ss. 319, 154, 156, 173, 190, 204 and 209 — Power of court to summon additional accused dehors S. 319

There are two alternative modes in which the Criminal Law can be set in motion; by the filing of information with the police under S. 154 of the Code or upon receipt of a complaint or information by a Magistrate. The former would lead to investigation by the police and may culminate in a police report under S. 173 of the Code on the basis whereof cognizance may be taken by the Magistrate under S. 190(1)(b) of the Code. In the latter case, the Magistrate may either order investigation by the police under S. 156(3) of the Code or himself hold an inquiry under S. 202 before taking cognizance of the offence under S. 190(1)(a) or (c), as the case may be, read with S. 204 of the Code. Once the Magistrate takes cognizance of the offence he may proceed to try the offender (except where the case is transferred under S. 191) or commit him for trial under S. 209 of the Code if the offence is triable exclusively by a Court of Session. Once cognizance of an offence is taken it becomes the Court's duty 'to find out who the offenders really are' and if the Court finds 'that apart from the persons sent up by the police some other persons are involved, it is its duty to proceed against those persons' by summoning them because 'the summoning of the additional accused is part of the proceeding initiated by its taking cognizance of an offence'. Even after the present Code came into force, the legal position has not undergone a change. Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, (1993) 2 SCC 16: 1993 SCC (Cri) 470: 1993 Cri LJ 1700: (1993) 1 Crimes 494: (1993) 1 BLJR 309.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-1993]

[3387] — S. 319 — Trial court's order for impleading the appellant as co-accused for trial along with other accused, based on deposition of eyewitness about participation of the appellant in the crime — Held, justified. Mahant Amar Nath v. State of Haryana, (1983) 1 SCC 391: 1983 SCC (Cri) 211: AIR 1983 SC 288: 1983 Cri LJ 433.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-1-1983]

MCD v. Ram Krishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115, distinguished

[3388] — S. 319 — Trial of persons not already arraigned as accused — Absence of fresh material connecting such persons to the incident — Effect — Appellant not arrayed as accused — After closure of prosecution evidence statements of accused persons recorded under S. 313 — Application under S. 311 allowed and two more witnesses (PWs 3 and 4) examined but their evidence did not connect to the alleged incident — Other witnesses (PWs 1 to 3) who were examined earlier merely stated about the alleged presence of appellants but no definite role was ascribed to them — Subsequently, application filed under S. 319 stating that new evidence had surfaced which required trial of the appellants — No explanation given why application had not been filed earlier — Held, application under S. 319 wrongly allowed by High Court

There was no new material after examination of the accused persons under Section 313 CrPC, which threw any light on the incident. The evidence of PWs 4 and 5 is not the basis of the application under Section 319 CrPC as they have not spoken anything about the appellants. If really the complainant had any grievance about the appellants being not made accused, that could have, at the most, be done immediately after the recording of evidence of PWs 1, 2 and 3. That has apparently not been done. Additionally, after the charge-sheet was filed, a protest petition was filed by the complainant which was dismissed. No explanation whatsoever has been offered as to why the application in terms of Section 319 CrPC was not filed earlier. The Revisional Court did not deal with these aspects and came to an abrupt conclusion that all the PWs have stated that the appellants have committed overt acts and their names also find place in the protest petition. Undisputedly, no overt act has been attributed to the appellants by PWs 1, 2 and 3. Nothing has been stated about the appellants by PWs 4 and 5. There was mention of their names in the FIR. A protest petition was filed. Same was also rejected. These could not have formed the basis of accepting the prayer in terms of Section 319 CrPC. The High Court's order is bereft of any foundation. It merely states that there are materials against the petitioners before it. It also did not deal with various aspects highlighted above. (Paras 11 and 12). Guriya v. State of Bihar, (2007) 8 SCC 224: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 521.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-2007]

Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609; Shashikant Singh v. Tarkeshwar Singh, (2002) 5 SCC 738: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1203; Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 7 SCC 792: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2093, relied on

[3389] — S. 319 — When applies

Section 139 would come into operation in the course of any enquiry into or trial of an offence. In the present case, neither the Magistrate was holding enquiry as contemplated under Section 2(g) CrPC nor had the trial started. He was exercising his jurisdiction under Section 190 by taking cognizance of an offence and issuing process. There is no bar under Section 190 CrPC that once the process is issued against some accused, on the next date, the Magistrate cannot issue process to some other person against whom there is some material on record, but his name is not included as accused in the charge-sheet. (Paras 6 and 7). SWIL Ltd. v. State of Delhi, (2001) 6 SCC 670: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1205: AIR 2001 SC 2747.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-8-2001]

[3390] — S. 319 — Proceedings against other persons joined as accused — Nature and scope — De novo proceedings against person arrayed under S. 319 — Where court proceeds under S. 319(1) against any person not initially being an accused, it must commence de novo proceedings qua such person from stage of S. 244, and after witnesses are reheard, allow such accused person to cross-examine them before framing of charge — Newly joined accused person has a right of cross-examination of witnesses before framing of charge against him — Relevance of words "proceedings" and "commenced afresh" used in S. 319(4)(a) and effect of S. 319(4)(b), explained

A complaint was filed by the appellant against Respondents 2 to 4 for offences under Section 406 read with Section 114 IPC in the Court of the Metropolitan Magistrate. The trial court took cognizance of the offences in 1998 and issued process against the said respondents. It then proceeded to examine the witnesses before framing the charge. Cross-examination of the witnesses was completed in May 2007, whereafter charges were framed against the said respondents under Sections 403, 409 read with Section 34 IPC in November 2007. The appellant filed an application under Section 319 CrPC requesting to array Respondent 5 as co-accused in the said proceedings. The application was allowed and summons was issued to Respondent 5. An application was preferred by Respondent 5 before the trial court to commence the proceedings qua Respondent 5 from the stage of inquiry i.e. from the stage of Section 244 CrPC and to allow cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses at the stage of evidence before charge. The application was allowed. However, the trial court split the trial of Respondent 5 and Respondents 2 to 4. An application was filed by Respondents 2 to 4 with the prayer for quashing of the trial court's order for de novo proceedings against Respondent 5 from the stage of inquiry and for a direction to straightaway frame charge against Respondent 5 for the same offence with which Respondents 2 to 4 were charged. The High Court rejected the application holding that the court must commence de novo proceedings against Respondent 5 and that mere delay which might be caused to the complaint would be of no consequence. In appeal before the Supreme Court it was contended on behalf of the appellant that the High Court has erred in confirming the order of the trial court permitting the de novo proceedings against Respondent 5 in the sense that it allowed the further cross-examination of the witnesses who were already examined before framing the charge. It was urged that there would be no question of such a permission of the cross-examination of the witnesses who were examined before framing of the charge since firstly, the charge against the other accused persons has already been framed and secondly, there is no such right of cross-examination under Sections 244, 245 and 246 CrPC. It was further submitted that the term "evidence" as mentioned in Section 244 CrPC does not necessarily include the cross-examination of the witnesses who were examined at that stage and that Section 319(4) CrPC does not require a de novo inquiry as had been ordered by the trial court and affirmed by the High Court.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

Section 319(4) CrPC has to be interpreted to mean that the proceedings have to go back and have to be commenced afresh and the witnesses have also to be reheard. Once the provision is so interpreted, then the accused's right of cross-examination would be innate. Section 319(4)(a) is the basic provision and the use of the words "proceedings" and the term "commence afresh" has its own significance. If the legislature had intended that the newly joined accused should not get the right of cross-examining the witnesses examined before framing of the charge, it might have used the word "trial". The deliberate use of the word "proceedings" would then include not only the trial but also the inquiry which commences with Section 244 CrPC and ends with the framing of the charge under Section 246 CrPC. The terminology "commence afresh" has also its own force. It indicates that the whole inquiry which commences from Section 244 CrPC must begin afresh. The interpretation given to the words "proceedings" is buttressed by the language of Section 319(4)(b) CrPC. The plain language takes back the whole proceedings to the stage of taking cognizance. If the contention of the appellant is accepted, then Section 319(4)(b) would be rendered otiose. The language of Section 319 CrPC itself pushes the proceedings back to the stage of inquiry, once the order under Section 319(1) CrPC is passed by the court and a new accused is joined therein. (Paras 12 to 14, 21 and 28)

The right to cross-examine witnesses under Section 244 CrPC who are examined before framing of the charge is a very precious right because it is only by cross-examination that the accused can show to the court that there is no need of a trial against him. Before framing of the charge under Section 246, the Magistrate has to form an opinion about there being ground for presuming that the accused had committed the offence triable under the chapter. (Paras 17 and 18)

If it is accepted that the newly joined accused has no right of cross-examination, it would mean that on being joined under Section 319(1) CrPC, the only step that would be required would be framing of charge against him. In that, there would be a complete denial to such accused of an important right of cross-examination of the witnesses before the framing of the charge. It would only then mean that such accused would remain a mute spectator till the framing of the charge and the accused would have no opportunity to show to the Magistrate that the allegations are groundless and that there is no scope for framing a charge against him. Before summoning the accused under Section 319(1) CrPC there is no requirement of allowing such accused person to cross-examine the witnesses. That stage comes only after an accused is summoned under Section 319(1). Therefore, it would be a case where the newly added accused who has not had the advantage of hearing the evidence would be put to prejudice because firstly, he has not heard the evidence and secondly, he cannot even cross-examine those witnesses in the warrant trial based on a private complaint. (Paras 13 and 16)

There is one more angle and that is the angle of mischief. If the interpretation given by the appellant is to be accepted then a complainant, wherein it is a case of multiple accused, may mischievously join only few of them and after getting the charge framed, make an application under Section 319 CrPC to join some other accused persons who would then have no right of cross-examination of the witnesses and who would be required to be the mute spectators to the charge being framed against which they could have successfully resisted by cross-examining the witnesses. (Para 15)

Therefore, the situation is clear that under Section 244 CrPC the accused has a right to cross-examine the witnesses and in the matter of Section 319 CrPC when a new accused is summoned, he would have similar right to cross-examine the witness examined during the inquiry afresh. Again, the witnesses would have to be reheard and then there would be such a right. Merely presenting such witnesses for cross-examination would be of no consequence. (Para 20). Harinarayan G. Bajaj v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 11 SCC 520: (2010) 1 ECrN 920: (2010) 94 AIC 196 .

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-1-2010]

Ajoy Kumar Ghose v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 14 SCC 115: (2010) 1 SCC (Cri) 1301; Shashikant Singh v. Tarkeshwar Singh, (2002) 5 SCC 738: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1203, relied on

Shashikant Singh v. Tarkeshwar Singh, (2002) 5 SCC 738: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1203, explained and distinguished

Rakesh v. State of Haryana, (2001) 6 SCC 248: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1090; Ram Gopal v. State of U.P., 1999 Cri LJ 1865 (All); Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609; R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, (1986) 2 SCC 716: 1986 SCC (Cri) 256, distinguished

[3391] — S. 319 — When should court proceed against other persons — Essential conditions for exercise of power under S. 319 — Evidence should indicate reasonable prospect of conviction of such other person(s) — Mere suspicion of his/their involvement in the offence not enough — Power of court discretionary in nature — It should be exercised judicially having regard to various factors including the stage at which the trial has proceeded already, the quantum of evidence collected and time spent by court in collecting evidence — Where none of the 49 witnesses examined by the Magistrate making any allegation against the appellants and only the three remaining witnesses making reference about the role played by the appellants in the offence but such reference was insufficient to make out the offence against the appellants, held, there was no justification for proceeding against the appellants by recommencing the entire trial afresh — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 120-B, 420, 467, 468, 471

The appellants were Chief Managers of two branches of a Bank. A complaint was lodged with the police by the Deputy Manager of the Bank with the allegations that a huge amount, more than half a crore of rupees, had been defrauded by certain persons and the Bank was put to a great loss to the above extent. An FIR was registered on its basis for certain offences and after completion of the investigation the police laid two charge-sheets before the Metropolitan Magistrate arraigning 4 persons as the accused for offences under Sections 120-B, 420, 467, 468 and 471 IPC. CBI which conducted the investigation stated that the materials collected by them are insufficient to show the involvement of the appellants in the perpetration of the said crime. However CBI recommended to the Bank for initiating departmental actions against those officers. The trial which commenced as against the 4 accused persons progressed substantially. Until 49 witnesses were examined by the prosecution the trial Magistrate had no reason to feel the necessity to implead the appellants as according to the trial Magistrate "the first 49 witnesses did not utter a single word against any of them". But when evidence of the remaining 3 witnesses was recorded it appeared to the Magistrate that the appellants were also party to the conspiracy, cheating and forgery of valuable security. So he ordered the appellants also to be arrayed as accused. This order was challenged but the High Court dismissed the same. Allowing the appeal and directing the Magistrate to proceed with the trial with the existing accused arraigned before it,

Held :

The basic requirement of Section 319 CrPC is that the court must have reasonable satisfaction from the evidence already collected during trial or in the inquiry regarding two aspects: First, that some other person, who is not arraigned as an accused in that case has committed an offence. Second, that for such offence that other person could as well be tried along with the already arraigned accused. It is not enough that the court entertained some doubt, from the evidence, about the involvement of another person in the offence. (Para 11)

But even then, what is conferred on the court is only a discretion as could be discerned from the words "the court may proceed against such person". The discretionary power so conferred should be exercised only to achieve criminal justice. It is not that the court should turn against another person whenever it comes across evidence connecting that other person also with the offence. A judicial exercise is called for, keeping a conspectus of the case, including the stage at which the trial has proceeded already and the quantum of evidence collected till then, and also the amount of time which the court had spent for collecting such evidence. It must be remembered that there is no compelling duty on the court to proceed against other persons. (Para 12)

The court while deciding whether to invoke the power under Section 319 of the Code, must address itself about the other constraints imposed by the first limb of sub-section (4) of Section 319, namely, that proceedings in respect of newly- added persons shall be commenced afresh and the witnesses re- examined. The whole proceedings must be recommenced from the beginning of the trial, summon the witnesses once again and examine them and cross- examine them in order to reach the stage where it had reached earlier. If the witnesses already examined are quite large in number the court must seriously consider whether the objects sought to be achieved by such exercise are worth wasting the whole labour already undertaken. Unless the court is hopeful that there is a reasonable prospect of the case as against the newly-brought accused ending in being convicted of the offence concerned, the court should refrain from adopting such a course of action. (Para 14)

In the present case the prosecution has already examined quite a large number of witnesses and they were cross-examined by the defence. The Metropolitan Magistrate felt the need to start afresh only because the next three witnesses disclosed something against the appellants. No doubt the statement made by the three witnesses regarding the role played by the appellants may create some suspicion against the appellants. But suspicion is not sufficient to hold that there is a reasonable prospect of convicting the appellants of the offence of criminal conspiracy. If the order of the Magistrate is to sustain, the proceedings in respect of the newly-added persons are to be recommenced afresh, which means that the entire massive evidence thus far collected and the time which the Court has thus far spent for recording the evidence of such a large number of witnesses, besides the costs involved for all concerned to reach up to the present stage, would all become, for all practical purposes, a waste — a colossal waste. It is not so very necessary at this belated stage to bring such two more additions to the array of the accused at the cost of such a de novo trial. A situation has not reached as to waste the whole massive evidence already collected by the trial court thus far, against the 4 accused arraigned in the case. Hence the order of the trial court in exercise of Section 319 CrPC has to be interfered with for enabling the trial to proceed to its normal culmination. (Paras 15, 16, 1 and 17). Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609: AIR 2000 SC 1127: 2000 Cri LJ 1706.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and A.P. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-2-2000]

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115, relied on

Applied in Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 7 SCC 792

[3392] — S. 319 — Order passed under, summoning a person to face trial — Effect on, if trial of co-accused is concluded — Held, the said conclusion of trial cannot have the effect of nullifying or making the said order infructuous (Para 11). Rajendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2007) 7 SCC 378: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 375: AIR 2007 SC 2786: (2007) 5 All LJ 485: (2007) 3 KLT 892: (2007) 57 AIC 69 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur[1] and P.K. Balasubramanyan[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 6-8-2007]

Shashikant Singh v. Tarkeshwar Singh, (2002) 5 SCC 738: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1203, followed

[3393] — Ss. 319, 193 and 209 — Power of Sessions Court to add an accused — Held, Sessions Court is competent to issue process against a person who is not charge-sheeted under S. 193 after having begun the trial and having recorded some evidence of the prosecution (Paras 4 and 5). Tek Narayan Prasad Yadav v. State of Bihar, 1999 SCC (Cri) 356.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, C.J. and K.T. Thomas and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-1998]

Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, (1993) 2 SCC 16: 1993 SCC (Cri) 470; Nisar v. State of U.P., (1995) 2 SCC 23: 1995 SCC (Cri) 306; Raj Kishore Prasad v. State of Bihar, (1996) 4 SCC 495: 1996 SCC (Cri) 772, explained

[3394] — Ss. 319, 193 and 209 — Sessions Court has power to add any person for trial without there being a committal order against such person — Under the new Code, the "case" and not the "accused" are committed — Expression "any person not being the accused" in S. 319 does not exclude person dropped under S. 169 — CrPC, 1898 — Ss. 351(1), 190(1)(c), 193 and 207-A compared

The summoning of additional persons by the Sessions Court under S. 319 of those who appear to be involved in the crime from the evidence led during the trial and directing them to stand their trial along with those who have been committed, must be regarded as incidental to the cognizance under S. 193 and part of the normal process that follows it. Section 319(4)(b) enacts a deeming provision in that behalf dispensing with the formal committal order against the newly added accused.

The phrase "any person not being the accused" in S. 319 does not exclude from its operation an accused who has been released by the police under S. 169. Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 1 SCC 345: 1979 SCC (Cri) 295: AIR 1979 SC 339: 1979 Cri LJ 333: 1979 MLJ (Cri) 470: (1979) 16 ACC 43.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer, V.D. Tulzapurkar and R.S. Pathak, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-11-1978]

[3395] — Ss. 319, 386 and 482 — Power to proceed against any person other than the accused — Scope — It is discretionary power of trial court which should be exercised judicially, having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, on the basis of evidence adduced before it and not on the basis of material available in charge-sheet or case diary — Power can be exercised suo motu — Person named in FIR as having participated in the crime but not charge-sheeted, can also be added to face the trial — In complaint filed by deceased's father (respondent), it was alleged that deceased's husband, her brother-in-law and father-in-law (appellant) had poured kerosene on deceased and set her on fire — During investigation, appellant took the stand that at the time of the incident he was serving at a school — Appellant having not been charge-sheeted, complainant moved application under S. 319 during course of trial for proceeding against appellant — Application rejected by trial court on the basis that complainant was an interested witness and sufficient ground did not exist to proceed against appellant — Trial court convicted others under S. 304-B — Held, rejection of application under S. 319 was not based on relevant ground — Hence High Court was justified in directing trial court to proceed against appellant by summoning him

The trial court has undoubted jurisdiction under Section 319 CrPC to add any person not being the accused before it to face the trial along with the other accused persons, if the court is satisfied at any stage of the proceeding on the evidence adduced that the persons who have not been arrayed as accused should face the trial. Power under Section 319 of the Code can be exercised by the court suo motu or on an application by someone including the accused already before it. If it is satisfied that any person other than the accused has committed an offence he is to be tried together with the accused. Such person, even though had initially been named in the FIR as an accused, but not charge-sheeted, can also be added to face the trial. (Paras 10 and 11)

The word "evidence" in Section 319 CrPC contemplates the evidence of witnesses given in court. The trial court can take such a step to add such persons as accused only on the basis of evidence adduced before it and not on the basis of materials available in the charge-sheet or the case diary, because such materials contained in the charge-sheet or the case diary do not constitute evidence. Of course, an accused who has been discharged stands on a different footing. (Paras 11 and 10)

Under sub-section (4)(1)(b) of Section 319 CrPC, it is specifically made clear that it will be presumed that newly added person had been an accused person when the court took cognizance of the offence upon which the inquiry or trial was commenced. That would show that by virtue of sub-section (4)(1)(b) a legal fiction is created that cognizance would be presumed to have been taken so far as newly added accused is concerned. (Para 11)

The power is discretionary and such discretion must be exercised judicially having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case. Undisputedly, it is an extraordinary power which is conferred on the court and should be used very sparingly and only if compelling reasons exist for taking action against a person against whom action had not been taken earlier. (Para 11)

In the present case, the trial court rejected the application only on the ground that the complainant was an interested witness and, therefore, sufficient ground did not exist to take action against the accused persons. Though the power is extraordinary and is used only if compelling reasons exist, the factor which weighed with the trial court does not appear to be relevant and, therefore, the High Court has rightly interfered in the matter. (Para 12). Lok Ram v. Nihal Singh, (2006) 10 SCC 192: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 532: AIR 2006 SC 1892: 2006 Cri LJ 2366.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-2006]

Sohan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (1990) 4 SCC 580: 1990 SCC (Cri) 650; Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609; Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 7 SCC 792: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2093; Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 1 SCC 345: 1979 SCC (Cri) 295; MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115, relied on [3396] — Ss. 319, 482 and 161 — Power to proceed against persons appearing to be guilty of offence — Acting at the instance of a witness — Propriety — Maintainability of application under S. 482 — Held, before a court exercises its discretionary jurisdiction in terms of S. 319, it must arrive at the satisfaction that there exists a possibility that the accused so summoned in all likelihood would be convicted — Such satisfaction can be arrived at inter alia upon completion of the cross-examination of the said witness or if the court concerned may also like to consider other evidence — Respondent 1 was merely a witness and had no say in the matter — High Court could not have entertained his application at that stage — Sessions Judge's order rejecting his application in terms of S. 319 was not even an interim order affecting the rights of the parties — Even revision application thereagainst could not have been maintained at that stage — Trial Judge was required to arrive at his satisfaction Trial Judge correctly opined that the matter should receive his due consideration only after the cross-examination of the witnesses is over — No exception thereto could be taken, far less at the instance of a witness and when the State was not aggrieved by the same (Paras 2, 10 to 12). Mohd. Shafi v. Mohd. Rafiq, (2007) 14 SCC 544: AIR 2007 SC 1899: (2007) 53 AIC 56 (SC): (2007) 4 All LJ 317: 2007 Cri LJ 3198.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-4-2007]

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115; Yuvaraj Ambar Mohite v. State of Maharashtra, (2006) 12 SCC 512: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 554, relied on [3397] — Ss. 319 and 190, 193, 209 — Cognizance of offences against persons not charge-sheeted, whose complicity in the crime comes to light from material available on record — Power of Magistrate/Sessions Court to take such cognizance at stage of committal of case to Sessions Court — Held, following Ranjit Singh case, (1998) 7 SCC 149, Magistrate could not have issued process against those persons named in FIR as accused but not charge-sheeted — Such persons can be arrayed as "accused persons" in exercise of powers only under S. 319 when some evidence or materials are brought on record in course of trial, or when a reference is made either by Magistrate while passing an order of commitment or by Sessions Judge to High Court and High Court, on examining the materials comes to conclusion that sufficient materials exist against them even though they may not have been charge-sheeted by police — On facts, offence triable by Sessions Court — Appellants named in FIR but not charge-sheeted — Process issued against, by the Magistrate prior to stage of S. 319 — Revision against, allowed by Sessions Court on ground that the said order was without jurisdiction — In appeal, High Court interfering with order passed in revision — Held, neither of the contingencies for arraying appellants as accused persons had arisen in the present case — Hence, impugned order of High Court and Magistrate not sustainable — Order passed in revision upheld — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34, 324 and 448 — Arms Act, 1959 — S. 27 (Paras 9 to 11). Kishori Singh v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 11: AIR 2000 SC 3725: 2000 Cri LJ 123.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-1-2000]

Raj Kishore Prasad v. State of Bihar, (1996) 4 SCC 495: 1996 SCC (Cri) 772; Ranjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (1998) 7 SCC 149: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1554, followed

[3398] — Ss. 319 and 190, 193 & 209 — Trial of newly added accused on conclusion of main trial — Where during pendency of trial of an accused another person is summoned by trial court under S. 319 and if by the time the person summoned could be brought before the court the trial is concluded, held, the person summoned can be tried for the offence for which he was summoned — Requirement under sub-section (1) of S. 319 that the person summoned "could be tried together with the accused" is directory whereas requirement under sub-section (4) of S. 319 regarding de novo trial of such person is mandatory

A case under Sections 302/34 IPC and under Section 27 of the Arms Act for murder of one S was registered against five persons including Respondent 1 and one C. On completion of investigation, police submitted charge-sheet against C showing the other accused except the respondent, as absconders and showing investigation against the respondent as pending. The Court of Session framed charge under Sections 302/34 IPC and under Section 27 of the Arms Act against C. As from the evidence of the prosecution it appeared to the court that Respondent 1 and two others had also committed the offence of murder of S, warrants of arrest against those persons were directed to be issued so that they may be tried together with C. This order was challenged by the respondent by filing revision petition before the High Court. During pendency of the revision petition, the Sessions Judge concluded the trial against C and convicted him under Section 302 IPC and Section 27 of the Arms Act. In the revision it was contended on behalf of the respondent that since the trial in respect of C had already been concluded and no sessions trial was pending before the trial court, Section 319 would not be applicable as the said provision is applicable only when the trial against another accused is pending and in the absence of pendency of such a trial, the court is not competent to proceed against Respondent 1. The High Court accepted the contention and quashed the order of the Sessions Court.

The said order of the Sessions Court, when passed, was not without jurisdiction since at that stage, the trial against C was pending and Respondent 1, summoned under Section 319 CrPC could be tried together with him. However, as the trial against C concluded before the respondent could be brought before the Sessions Court, the question was could the respondent, after being summoned under Section 319, be tried in absence of trial pending against C. In other words the question for determination by the Supreme Court in appeal was whether the order of the Sessions Court passed under Section 319 directing issuance of warrant of arrest against the respondent would become ineffective and inoperative as a result of conclusion of trial against C before the respondent could be proceeded with for the offence for which warrants were issued against him.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The intention of Section 319 is that where in the course of any enquiry into, or trial of, an offence, it appears to the court from the evidence that any person not being the accused has committed any offence, the court may proceed against him for the offence which he appears to have committed. At that stage, the court would consider that such a person could be tried together with the accused who is already before the court facing the trial. The safeguard provided in respect of such person is that, the proceedings right from the beginning have mandatorily to be commenced afresh and the witnesses reheard. In short, there has to be a de novo trial against him. The provision of de novo trial is mandatory. It vitally affects the rights of a person so brought before the court. It would not be sufficient to only tender the witnesses for the cross-examination of such a person. They have to be examined afresh. Fresh examination-in-chief and not only their presentation for the purpose of the cross-examination of the newly added accused is the mandate of Section 319(4). The words "could be tried together with the accused" in Section 319(1), appear to be only directory. "Could be" cannot under these circumstances be held to be "must be". The provision cannot be interpreted to mean that since the trial in respect of a person who was before the court has concluded with the result that the newly added person cannot be tried together with the accused who was before the court when order under Section 319(1) was passed, the order would become ineffective and inoperative, nullifying the opinion earlier formed by the court on the basis of the evidence before it that the newly added person appears to have committed the offence resulting in an order for his being brought before the court. (Para 9)

Sections 190, 193 and 209 CrPC read with Section 319 make it clear that the words "could be tried together with the accused" in Section 319 are only for the purpose of finding out whether such a person could be put on trial for the offence. Once it is so found, sub-section (4) of Section 319 comes into play. On the Magistrate committing the case under Section 209 to the Court of Session, the bar of Section 193 is lifted thereby investing the Court of Session with complete and unfettered jurisdiction of court of original jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence which could include summoning of the person or persons whose complicity in the commission of crime can, prima facie, be gathered from the material on record. (Para 14)

On facts, the court could not have intended while concluding the trial against C, to nullify its earlier order directing issue of warrants against Respondent 1. The construction to be placed on a provision like this has to commend to justice and reason. It has to be a reasonable construction to promote the ends of justice. The words "could be tried together with the accused" in Section 319(1) cannot be said to be capable of only one construction. If it was so, approach to be adopted would be different since the intention of Parliament is to be respected despite the consequences of interpretation. There is, however, a scope for two possible constructions. That being the position, a reasonable and common sense approach deserves to be adopted and preferred rather than a construction that would lead to absurd results of Respondent 1 escaping the trial despite passing of an order against him on the court's satisfaction under Section 319(1) and despite the fact that the proceedings against him have to commence afresh. In this view, the fact that trial against C has already concluded is of no consequence insofar as Respondent 1 is concerned. (Para 12)

When a statute is passed for the purpose of enabling something to be done, and prescribes the way in which it is to be done, it may be either an absolute enactment or a directory enactment. The difference being that an absolute enactment must be obeyed or fulfilled exactly, but it is sufficient if a directory enactment be obeyed or fulfilled substantially. No universal rule can be laid down as to whether mandatory enactments shall be considered directory only or obligatory with an implied nullification for disobedience. It is the duty of courts of justice to try to get at the real intention of the legislature by carefully attending to the whole scope of the statute to be construed. (Para 8)

Where a statute does not consist merely of one enactment, but contains a number of different provisions regulating the manner in which something is to be done, it often happens that some of these provisions are to be treated as being directory only, while others are to be considered absolute and essential; that is to say, some of the provisions may be disregarded without rendering invalid the thing to be done, but others not. (Para 10). Shashikant Singh v. Tarkeshwar Singh, (2002) 5 SCC 738: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1203: AIR 2002 SC 2031: 2002 Cri LJ 2806.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: U.C. Banerjee and Y.K. Sabharwal, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-4-2002]

Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, (1993) 2 SCC 16: 1993 SCC (Cri) 470, relied on

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115; Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609, distinguished

Craies on Statute Law, 7th Edn., pp. 260-62, 266-67, relied on

See however Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 7 SCC 792

[3399] — Ss. 319 and 204 — Scope and manner of exercise of power under S. 319, stated — Expeditious and simultaneous disposal and parity in taking cognizance with the original accused, stressed

Section 319 CrPC empowers a court to proceed against any person not shown to be an accused if it appears from the evidence that such person has also committed an offence for which he can be tried together with the accused. Sometimes a Magistrate while hearing a case against one or more accused finds from the evidence that some person other than the accused before him is also involved in that very offence. It is only proper that a Magistrate should have power to summon by joining such person as an accused in the case. (Paras 20 and 21)

The primary object underlying Section 319 is that the whole case against all the accused should be tried and disposed of not only expeditiously but also simultaneously. Justice and convenience both require that cognizance against the newly added accused should be taken in the same case and in the same manner as against the original accused. The power must be regarded and conceded as incidental and ancillary to the main power to take cognizance as part of normal process in the administration of criminal justice. (Para 21). Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2008]

[3400] — Ss. 319 and 244 — Accused joined under S. 319 has a right of cross-examination of witnesses before framing of charge — Importance of right of cross-examination — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 137. Harinarayan G. Bajaj v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 11 SCC 520: (2010) 1 ECrN 920: (2010) 94 AIC 196 .

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-1-2010]

Ajoy Kumar Ghose v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 14 SCC 115: (2010) 1 SCC (Cri) 1301; Shashikant Singh v. Tarkeshwar Singh, (2002) 5 SCC 738: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1203, relied on

Shashikant Singh v. Tarkeshwar Singh, (2002) 5 SCC 738: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1203, explained and distinguished

Rakesh v. State of Haryana, (2001) 6 SCC 248: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1090; Ram Gopal v. State of U.P., 1999 Cri LJ 1865 (All); Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609; R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, (1986) 2 SCC 716: 1986 SCC (Cri) 256, distinguished [3401] — Ss. 319 and 395 — Order of Sessions Judge under, directing respondents to be tried together with the original accused under S. 302/34 IPC and non-bailable warrants against respondents — Single Judge of High Court quashing it on erroneous ground that S. 319(1) had no application to sessions trial and directing the Sessions Judge to proceed against original accused — Single Judge's order being contrary to the decision of Supreme Court in Joginder Singh case reference under S. 395 made by Sessions Judge before Division Bench of High Court — Division Bench having no jurisdiction to quash the order of Single Judge, rejecting the reference — Held, principle underlying S. 319 being well settled by the Supreme Court, order of Single Judge of the High Court quashed by invoking inherent jurisdiction of Supreme Court — However, occurrence having taken place 18 years ago, respondents at this length of time shall not be directed to face the trial of the Sessions case — Constitution of India, Art. 134. State of Assam v. Abdul Halim, 1993 Supp (1) SCC 505: 1993 SCC (Cri) 281: AIR 1992 SC 2068.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-4-1992]

[3402] — Ss. 319, 245 and 398 — Persons who have been discharged under S. 245 of all or some of the charges are 'accused' and hence cannot be proceeded against under S. 319 — However, power to order inquiry under S. 398 may be invoked

An FIR was lodged against the appellants. On completion of investigation police framed charges under Ss. 147, 323, 325, 336 and 427 IPC and forwarded the charge-sheet to the Judicial Magistrate under S. 173 CrPC. After taking cognizance and hearing the arguments, the Magistrate ordered discharge of appellants 4 and 5 of all the charges levelled against them and ordered the appellants 1, 2 and 3 to be charged only under S. 427 IPC. The APP thereafter submitted an application to the Magistrate under S. 216 CrPC signed by one of the victims praying that as on the basis of the entire evidence a prima facie case is made out under Ss. 147, 325 and 336 IPC, the charge be amended and the accused be charged in accordance with the evidence. After recording the plea of the accused, the prosecution led evidence and examined witnesses. The Magistrate after hearing the APP and the advocate of the accused and discussing the evidence observed that if any accused was discharged of any charge under any section then there would be no bar for taking fresh cognizance and reconsideration against him according to S. 216 CrPC and that the provision of S. 319 CrPC was also clear in that connection. Accordingly the Magistrate took cognizance for offences under Ss. 147, 427, 336, 323, 325 IPC against all the appellants by the impugned order. A revision petition against the order was dismissed by the High Court. Partly allowing the appeal

Held :

The necessity of making a further inquiry as envisaged in S. 398 cannot be obviated or circumvented by taking resort to S. 319. The word "discharge" in S. 398 means discharge of an offence relating to the charge within the meaning of Ss. 227, 239, 245 and 249. Refusing to proceed further after issue of process is discharge. The discharge has to be in substance and effect though there is no formal order. The language of the section does not indicate that the word "discharge" should be given a restricted meaning in the sense of absolute discharge where the accused is set at liberty after examination of the whole case.

In the present case after the police submitted charge-sheet against appellants 4 and 5, the order of discharge, it was contended, could not be taken to be one under S. 203 but under S. 245 which is included in Chap. XIX and deals with trial of warrant cases by the Magistrates. This submission has not been refuted. The cases of appellants 4 and 5 would be one of total discharge. But it could not be said that they were not some of the accused in the case, or that cognizance was not taken of the offences against them. A person may be accused of several offences and he may be discharged of some offences and proceeded against for trial in respect of other offences. This was the proposition regarding appellants 1, 2 and 3, who were partially discharged.

Thus the APP's application under S. 216, insofar as the appellants 1 to 3 were concerned, could be dealt with under S. 216. But they being accused in the case at the time of passing the impugned order by the Magistrate, S. 319 would not cover them. Appellants 4 and 5, however, could be dealt with neither under S. 216 nor under S. 319. Therefore, the impugned orders of the Magistrate as well as that of the High Court insofar as the appellants 4 and 5 are concerned, have to be set aside. Sohan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (1990) 4 SCC 580: 1990 SCC (Cri) 650: AIR 1990 SC 2158: (1990) 3 Crimes 120.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.N. Saikia and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-8-1990]

Saraswatiben v. Thakorlal Himatlal, AIR 1967 Guj 263: 1967 Cri LJ 1632; Amarjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 85 Punj LR 324, overruled

State v. Ganga Ram Kalita, AIR 1965 Ass & Nag 9: (1965) 1 Cri LJ 144, approved

Chandra Deo Singh v. Prokash Chandra Bose, AIR 1963 SC 1430: (1963) 2 Cri LJ 397; Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 1 SCC 345: 1979 SCC (Cri) 295; MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115; S.S. Khanna v. Chief Secretary, Patna, (1983) 3 SCC 42: 1983 SCC (Cri) 562, relied on [3403] — Ss. 319 and 401 — Power to proceed against person other than accused — Exercise of — Relevant factors for — During pendency of trial and after examination of material witnesses, application under S. 319 filed by complainant to include appellant as accused, on ground that during the course of trial appellant's participation in offence under Ss. 304/34 IPC had been established — Trial court rejecting the said application — Having regard to facts that apart from presence of the appellant no other overt act was attributed to him in the FIR, that prosecution did not send him for trial after investigation, and that evidence recorded at the time of trial and testimony of main witnesses also did not implicate him, held, trial court was justified in rejecting the application and High Court in revision erred in reversing the order of trial court without properly taking into consideration the relevant factors (Paras 3, 4 and 5). Kailash Dwivedi v. State of M.P., (2005) 11 SCC 182.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-2-2005]

Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 7 SCC 792: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2093, applied

[3404] — Ss. 319 and 401 — Power to summon a person as accused — Extraordinary and discretionary — Should be exercised sparingly — A person can be summoned even though proceedings had earlier been quashed qua him — However, in this case trial court not rejecting the State's application under S. 319 for summoning that person solely on ground of the proceedings having been quashed against him but mainly on ground based on examination of evidence that possibilities of his being convicted were remote — High Court in revision setting aside the order of trial court because some PWs had deposed about his presence on the date of the incident and about instigation made by him to other accused to commit the offence — Held on facts, trial court cannot be said to have exercised discretion under S. 319 illegally, hence High Court's interference in exercise of revisional jurisdiction was not called for

The appellant was arrayed as one of the accused along with others in a case before the trial Magistrate relating to an incident of the year 1993 which led to certain simple injuries and damage to some crops. The High Court quashed the case against the appellant in 1995 in a petition filed by him under Section 482 CrPC. The State filed an application under Section 319 CrPC before the Magistrate for summoning the appellant as an accused after conclusion of prosecution evidence examining 17 prosecution witnesses and recording of the statements of the accused under Section 313 CrPC by the trial Magistrate. The Magistrate by a detailed order, after examination of the evidence, dismissed the application, inter alia, on noticing that, on evidence, the possibilities of the appellant being convicted were remote. The Magistrate thereafter made a passing reference to the factum of the proceedings having been quashed in the year 1995. The High Court, in revision, set aside the order passed by the Magistrate, having come to the conclusion that some of the prosecution witnesses had deposed about the presence of the appellant on the date of the incident and also about the instigation made by him to the other accused persons to destroy the crops and trees grown by PW 1.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The power to summon an accused is an extraordinary power conferred on the court. It is discretionary and should be used very sparingly and only if compelling reasons exist for taking cognizance against the other person against whom action has not been taken. (Para 6)

Though an order under Section 319 CrPC summoning a person can be made on fulfilment of the conditions stipulated therein even when the proceedings had earlier been quashed, but in the present case the Magistrate did not dismiss the application merely on the ground of the proceedings having been quashed against the appellant. (Para 8)

The trial Magistrate was right in rejecting the application. The incident was of the year 1993. Seventeen witnesses had been examined. The statements of the accused under Section 313 CrPC had been recorded. The role attributed to the appellant, as per the impugned judgment of the High Court, was of instigation. Having regard to these facts coupled with the quashing of proceedings in the year 1995 against the appellant, it could not be held that the discretion was illegally exercised by the trial Magistrate. Thus the exercise of discretion by the Magistrate, in any event of the matter, did not call for interference by the High Court, having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case. Therefore, the question whether prima facie the evidence implicates the appellant or not and whether the possibility of his conviction is remote, or his presence and instigation stood established, need not be gone into. (Paras 10 and 7). Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 7 SCC 792: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2093: AIR 2004 SC 4298: (2004) 3 KLT 460.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-2004]

MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115, relied on

Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262: 2000 SCC (Cri) 609, applied

State of Karnataka v. Krishnappa, 2004 Cri LJ 2175 (Karn), reversed

[3405] — Ss. 319 and 482 — Recovery of coloured arrack from a lorry belonging to a firm — Prosecution of managing partner of firm quashed by High Court at initial stage — Held, in circumstances, no interference by Supreme Court called for — If at any subsequent stage some material comes before the trial court the managing partner can be arrayed as accused by invoking S. 319 CrPC — T.N. Prohibition Act, 1937 (10 of 1937), Ss. 4(1)(a) and 14-A. State of T.N. v. Saleem, 1994 SCC (Cri) 1151.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-11-1993]

[3406] — Ss. 319 and 482 — Inherent jurisdiction under S. 482 CrPC — Invocation of — Remedy against wrong cognizance/innocent person being joined as an accused — If an innocent person is joined as an accused which is totally uncalled for or ex facie bad in law, held, it is open to the aggrieved party to invoke jurisdiction of the High Court under S. 482 CrPC

It is clear and well settled that once an order is passed by a competent court issuing summons or process, it cannot be recalled. In absence of express provision in the Code, the court has no power to recall the process issued. In the instant case, the Magistrate ordered to join Respondent 2 as an accused on applications filed by the appellant and summons was issued to him. A revision filed by the State against that order was dismissed by the Additional Sessions Judge. The Judicial Magistrate, on the facts and in the circumstances, was right in dismissing recall application filed by Respondent 2. The Revisional Court, however, was not correct to hold that the Magistrate had power to recall the earlier order passed by him. The Additional Sessions Judge ought to have considered the material fact in its proper perspective that the order passed by the Magistrate was legal and proper and because of that, the revision filed against that order by the State was also dismissed by the Revisional Court. (Paras 41 and 44 to 46)

If the act of taking cognizance, issuance of process or joining of an innocent person as an accused is totally uncalled for or ex facie bad in law, it is open to the aggrieved party to invoke inherent jurisdiction of the High Court under Section 482 CrPC. If the High Court is satisfied that the order passed by the Magistrate was illegal, improper or arbitrary, it can exercise inherent powers and quash criminal proceedings initiated against the party. But that power is independent and has nothing to do with recalling of an earlier order by the court which passed it. (Para 48). Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2008]

Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1927; Nilamani Routray v. Bennett Coleman & Co. Ltd., (1998) 8 SCC 594: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1551; Subramanium Sethuraman v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 13 SCC 324: 2005 SCC (Cri) 242; N.K. Sharma v. Abhimanyu, (2005) 13 SCC 213: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 135; Everest Advertising (P) Ltd. v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2007) 5 SCC 54: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 444, followed

K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, (1992) 1 SCC 217: 1992 SCC (Cri) 88, overruled

[3407] — Ss. 319 and 482 — Scope of power under — Even if trial proceedings against some persons quashed under S. 482, court in proper cases can proceed against them under S. 319

Section 319 is really an extraordinary power which is conferred on the court and should be used very sparingly and only if compelling reasons exist for taking cognizance against the other person against whom action has not been taken. If the prosecution can at any stage produce evidence which satisfies the court that the other accused or those who have not been arrayed as accused against whom proceedings have been quashed have also committed the offence, the court can take cognizance against them and try them along with the other accused. The mere fact that the proceedings have been quashed under S. 482 against some of the accused persons (respondents 2 to 5) will not prevent the court from exercising its discretion if it is fully satisfied that a case for taking cognizance against them has been made out on the additional evidence led before it. MCD v. Ram Kishan Rohtagi, (1983) 1 SCC 1: 1983 SCC (Cri) 115: AIR 1983 SC 67: 1983 Cri LJ 159.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and E.S. Venkataramiah, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-12-1982]

Explained and limited in Rajendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2007) 7 SCC 378

[3408] — S. 319 and Ch. XVI — Nature of cognizance under — Powers of cognizance under S. 319, held, are incidental and ancillary to main power and part of the normal process (Para 21). Bholu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 9 SCC 140: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-8-2008]

[3409] — S. 319 read with Ss. 209 and 193, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231 and 482 — Power of Court of Session to array a new person or persons as accused under S. 319 — Held, cannot be invoked prior to evidence collection stage — There is no power except that in S. 319 by which Court of Session can array a new person as an accused — Hence there is no intermediary stage at which Court of Session can add to the array of accused — Till the stage of S. 230 is reached, Sessions Court can deal only with the accused referred to in S. 209 — But Court purporting to act under S. 319 need not wait till the entire evidence has been collected — Further held, if however the Sessions Judge notices from the materials produced the positive involvement of any person, he can invoke the inherent or revisional power of the High Court to summon such a person before the evidence stage — CrPC, 1898 — S. 351

According to the FIR, eight persons including the appellant, constituted an unlawful assembly; at the urging of appellant, one member of the assembly forcibly took the rifle of a gunman and fired at the deceased. The police carried out an investigation, at the end of which they exonerated the appellant completely. After committal of the case to the Court of Session by the Magistrate concerned, but before the evidence-collection stage, the Sessions Court, in response to a petition by the complainant alleging that the exoneration of the appellant by the police was improper, arraigned the appellant as an accused in the case. The Court of Session did so relying on the decision of a two-Judge Bench of the Supreme Court in Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, (1993) 2 SCC 16.

After dismissal of his appeal by the High Court, the appellant came before the Supreme Court. By then a two-Judge Bench of the Apex Court had in Raj Kishore Prasad v. State of Bihar, (1996) 4 SCC 495 (quorum: M.M. Punchhi and K.T. Thomas, JJ.) expressed reservations about the legal position as propounded in Kishun Singh case, (1993) 2 SCC 16. The question, whether the Court of Session has the power under Section 319 CrPC to arraign a new person, prior to the evidence-collection stage, was thus directed to be considered by a larger Bench; the present appeal came before a three-Judge Bench (quorum: M.M. Punchhi, C.J., K.T. Thomas and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ.).

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

With the committal order, the Sessions Court gets unfettered jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offences involved in the case. But the crucial question is whether such jurisdiction would envelop powers to summon any person as an accused other than those covered by the committal order. From the stage of committal till the Sessions Court reaches the stage of evidence collection indicated in Section 230 of the Code, that court can deal with only the accused referred to in Section 209 of the Code. There is no intermediary stage till then for the Sessions Court to add any other person to the array of the accused.

Once the Sessions Court takes cognizance of the offence pursuant to the committal order, the only other stage when the court is empowered to add any other person to the array of the accused is after reaching evidence collection when powers under Section 319 of the Code can be invoked. There is no other power for the Sessions Court to permit addition of new person or persons to the array of the accused. However, it is not necessary for the court to wait until the entire evidence is collected for exercising the said powers.

However, where all the materials produced by the investigating agency clearly show the positive involvement of a person who was not shown in the array of the accused due to some inadvertence or omission. The Sessions Court is not altogether powerless to deal with such situations to prevent a miscarriage of justice. It is then open to the Sessions Court to send a report to the High Court detailing the situation so that the High Court can in its inherent powers or revisional powers direct the committing Magistrate to rectify the committal order by issuing process to such left-out accused. But the said procedure need be resorted to only for rectifying or correcting grave mistakes. Ranjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (1998) 7 SCC 149: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1554: AIR 1998 SC 3148.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, C.J. and K.T. Thomas and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-9-1998]

Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 1 SCC 345: 1979 SCC (Cri) 295, followed

Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar, (1993) 2 SCC 16: 1993 SCC (Cri) 470, not followed

Nisar v. State of U.P., (1995) 2 SCC 23: 1995 SCC (Cri) 306, impliedly not followed

Doubted in Dharam Pal v. State of Haryana, (2004) 13 SCC 9

[3410] — S. 319 — Joint trial in respect of PFA Act offences — Magistrate has power to proceed against the manufacturer, distributor or dealer if during the course of trial evidence adduced before the court discloses that such manufacturer, distributor or dealer is also concerned with that offence — S. 319(3) CrPC is not a bar to such a joint trial — Fact that the person from whom the article of food was purchased is a dealer would not make the section non-operational — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, S. 20-A (as amended by Act 49 of 1964)

The concept of vendor and vendee is known to civil law and passing of the title in the goods is alien to the prosecution for an offence under the PF Act. It cannot, therefore, be introduced in a trial for the offence under this Act. The Act advisedly made a person who sells adulterated article of food liable to be prosecuted for the offence of adulteration of the article of food. During the trial when it comes to the notice of the Magistrate, from the evidence adduced, that the manufacturer, distributor or dealer of that article of food, which is the subject-matter of adulteration, is also concerned with the offence, then the court has been empowered to proceed against such manufacturer, distributor or dealer as if prosecution has initially been instituted against him under Section 20 of the Act. In fact, for general offences, Section 319(1) of the Code empowers the court where during the course of enquiry or trial of an offence, if it appears from the evidence that any person not being accused has committed any offence for which such person could be tried together with the accused, to proceed against such person for the offence which he appears to have committed. In view of the language of Section 20-A of the Act, whatever is contained in sub-section (3) of Section 319 of the Code, would not stand in the way of the Magistrate to proceed at a trial against any person, i.e., the original accused and against others mentioned in Section 20-A. In other words, joint trial for the same offence is permitted. The object appears to be that in a case where common evidence discloses that the manufacturer, distributor or dealer is also concerned with the offence for which the prosecution was launched against a person from whom the article of food was purchased, to avoid multiplicity of prosecution and also keeping in view the doctrine of autrefois acquit the Legislature introduced Section 20-A to have joint trial. (Para 7)

It cannot be said that the original accused being a dealer of the manufacturer, Section 20-A has no application, as it speak of trial of a person not being, inter alia, a dealer as the section has mentioned about trial of commission of the offence by any person; and, if that person be not the manufacturer, distributor or dealer, Section 20-A permits trial of such manufacturer, distributor or dealer also, along with the person already before the court. So, the fact that the person being tried is a dealer would not make the section non-operational. (Para 8). Delhi Cloth & General Mills Co. Ltd. v. State of M.P., (1995) 6 SCC 62: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1024: AIR 1996 SC 283.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K. Ramaswamy, B.P. Jeevan Reddy and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-9-1995]

[3411] — S. 319 — Applicability of S. 19, PC Act, 1988, where a person appearing to be guilty of offence is proceeded against under S. 319 CrPC — Finding of trial court that S. 319 CrPC has to get preference/primacy over S. 19, PC Act, 1988 — Propriety of — Held, was not proper in view of the decision made in Dilawar Singh, (2005) 12 SCC 709 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19 (Para 4). Paul Varghese v. State of Kerala, (2007) 14 SCC 783: AIR 2007 SC 2618: (2007) 2 KLT 529.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-2007]

Dilawar Singh v. Parvinder Singh, (2005) 12 SCC 709: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 727, followed [3412] — Ss. 319 and 190 — Sanction for prosecution — Requirement of, qua specific accused — Demand of illegal gratification by D (SHO) for releasing P (complainant), which was directed to be handed over to ASI J — Charge-sheet submitted only against J and D exonerated by the Investigating Officer — Sanction for prosecution of J obtained — P's application under S. 319 CrPC for summoning D as co-accused allowed by High Court in revision petition and D directed to be proceeded against — Submission by appellant D that in absence of valid sanction he could not be summoned to face trial — Held, S. 19(1) creates a complete bar on the power of court to take cognizance of offence alleged to have been committed by a public servant except with previous sanction of the competent authority — Sanction for prosecution is required to be obtained with respect to specific accused — Hence, submission that if sanction for prosecution has been granted qua one accused, any other public servant for whose prosecution no sanction has been granted, can also be summoned to face prosecution, unacceptable — Hence High Court's order summoning D wholly illegal and unsustainable — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — Ss. 19(1), 13(2), 7, 10, 11 and 15 (Paras 2 to 7). Dilawar Singh v. Parvinder Singh, (2005) 12 SCC 709.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.K. Sema and G.P. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-11-2005]

State v. Raj Kumar Jain, (1998) 6 SCC 551: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1485; Jaswant Singh v. State of Punjab, 1958 SCR 762: AIR 1958 SC 124: 1958 Cri LJ 265; State of Goa v. Babu Thomas, (2005) 8 SCC 130, relied on [3413] — S. 319(4) — Power to proceed against other persons appearing to be guilty of offence — One NS named in FIR but not charge-sheeted — PW 1 categorically stating the role played by him in causing death of H and injuries to PW 4 — Deposition of PW 1 recorded on 12-9-2000 — After summoning NS in terms of S. 319, charges framed afresh on 30-11-2001 and PW 1 chief-examined again on 5-9-2003 — Hence, submission that requirements of S. 319(4) had not been complied with rejected (Paras 17 to 19). Nishan Singh v. State of Punjab, (2008) 17 SCC 505: AIR 2008 SC 1661: (2008) 65 AIC 172 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-3-2008]

Shashikant Singh v. Tarkeshwar Singh, (2002) 5 SCC 738: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1203, distinguished [3414] — Ss. 319(4) and 465 — Power to proceed against other persons appearing to be guilty of offence — Held, S. 319(4) must be read with the residuary provision contained in S. 465 — Complaint in regard to non-compliance with statutory provisions must be made at the earliest opportunity — When a judgment is pronounced, a case must be made out that by reason of a procedural irregularity, failure of justice has occurred (Para 22). Nishan Singh v. State of Punjab, (2008) 17 SCC 505: AIR 2008 SC 1661: (2008) 65 AIC 172 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-3-2008]

State of M.P. v. Bhooraji, (2001) 7 SCC 679: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1373; M.C. Sulkunte (Dr.) v. State of Mysore, (1970) 3 SCC 513: 1971 SCC (Cri) 119; CBI v. V.K. Sehgal, (1999) 8 SCC 501: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1494; State of Haryana v. Ram Singh, (2002) 2 SCC 426: 2002 SCC (Cri) 350, relied on

— S. 320 See also S. 345, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1166 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 320 See Ss. 24, 25 and 320
See also Ss. 156(3) & 320 and 482 & 483
See also Ss. 190, 309, 320 and 482
See also Ss. 357, 320, 431 and 428
See also Ss. 362 and 320
See also Ss. 406, 257 and 320
See also Ss. 482 and 320

[3415] — S. 320 — Nature and scope of

Per Khalid and Natarajan, JJ.

Section 320 confers only a supervisory power on the court in the matter of compounding of offences, in the manner indicated therein, with this safeguard that the accused does not by unfair or deceitful means, secure a composition of the offence. For granting permission or giving consent under sub-section (4)(a) or (4)(b) for compounding of an offence, the court is not enjoined to make a serious detailed evaluation of the evidence or assessment of the case to be satisfied that the case would result in acquittal or conviction. It is necessary to bear in mind that an application for compounding of an offence can be made at any stage. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[3416] — S. 320 — Compounding of offence — Considerations for — Held, the same is linked to perceived seriousness of offence and nature of remedy provided — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 147 and 138 (Para 16). Damodar S. Prabhu v. Sayed Babalal H., (2010) 5 SCC 663.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and P. Sathasivam and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision : 3-5-2010]

K.N.C. Pillai: R.V. Kelkar's Criminal Procedure, Fifth Edn. (Lucknow: Eastern Book Company, 2008) at p. 444, relied on

[3417] — S. 320 — Compounding of offences — Civil dispute with certain criminal facets — Offences involved included non- comoundable offences — Compromise between the parties — Effect of — Whether criminal proceedings can be quashed under Art. 142 on the basis of compromise, even where non-compoundable offences are involved — Held, on overall view of facts on compromise between the parties, by which parties withdrew all claims and allegations against each other, technicality, held, should not be allowed to stand in the way of quashing of the criminal proceedings, since continuance of the same would be a futile exercise — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 120-B r/w Ss. 420, 467, 468 and 471 — CPC, 1908, Or. 23 R. 3 — Constitution of India, Art. 142

CBI filed a charge-sheet against five accused persons under Section 120-B read with Sections 420, 467, 468, 471 IPC read with Sections 5(2) and 5(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 and Section 13(2) read with Section 13(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. In the said charge-sheet, the appellant herein was made Accused 3 and the company N, in respect of which he was the former MD, was made Accused 4. The other three accused were officials of the bank A.

The company N was granted financial assistance by the bank A under various facilities. On account of default in repayment of the loans, the Bank filed a suit for recovery of the amount payable and in addition, on a complaint made by the GM and the Chief Vigilance Officer of the Bank, investigations were undertaken by CBI, which filed charge-sheet in the court. The allegations under the charge-sheet indicated that the accused persons conspired with each other in fraudulently diverting the funds of the Bank. Offences alleging forgery were also included in the charge-sheet.

The suit between the Company and the Bank, to which the appellant herein was also a party, was disposed of on a compromise arrived at between the parties which was reduced into writing, and was filed in the suit. On the basis of the consent terms, the suit was compromised upon the defendants agreeing to pay the amounts due as per the schedule mentioned in the consent terms.

Consequent upon the compromise of the suit and having regard to the contents of Clause 11 of the consent terms, which read that neither party had any claim against the other and parties were withdrawing all allegations and counter-allegations made against each other, the appellant herein filed an application for discharge from the criminal complaint, in respect of which charge-sheet had been filed by CBI. The said application was rejected by the court which came to be challenged by the appellant before the High Court. The High Court rejected the appellant's prayer for discharge from the criminal cases. Hence the present appeal.

Before the Supreme Court, it was urged by the respondents that all the ingredients of the offences committed under Sections 468 and 471 as also Section 420 IPC were made out in the charge-sheet, and hence, even if the matter was compromised between the parties, the criminal proceedings could not be compounded on that basis since the offences involved also included non-compoundable offences.

The appellant contended that B.S. Joshi case, (2003) 4 SCC 675, squarely covered the facts of the instant case since in exercise of inherent powers, the Supreme Court could transcend the limitation imposed under Section 320 CrPC and pass orders quashing criminal proceedings or FIR or complaint even where non-compoundable offences were involved.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The question which is required to be answered in this case is whether the power which independently lies with the Supreme Court to quash the criminal proceedings pursuant to the compromise arrived at, should at all be exercised? (Para 30)

The facts of the case warrant interference in these proceedings. (Para 27)

The basic intention of the accused in this case appears to have been to misrepresent the financial status of the company N, in order to avail of the credit facilities to an extent to which the Company was not entitled. In other words, the main intention of the Company and its officers was to cheat the Bank and induce it to part with additional amounts of credit to which the Company was not otherwise entitled. (Para 28)

Despite the ingredients and the factual content of an offence of cheating punishable under Section 420 IPC, the same has been made compoundable under Section 320(2) CrPC, with the leave of the court. However, forgery has not been included as one of the compoundable offences, but it is in such cases that the principle enunciated in B.S. Joshi case, (2003) 4 SCC 675, becomes relevant. (Para 29)

In the instant case, the disputes between the Company and the Bank have been set at rest on the basis of the compromise arrived at by them whereunder the dues of the Bank have been cleared and the Bank does not appear to have any further claim against the Company. What, however, remains is the fact that certain documents were alleged to have been created by the appellant herein in order to avail of credit facilities beyond the limit to which the Company was entitled. The dispute involved herein has overtones of a civil dispute with certain criminal facets. (Para 30)

On an overall view of the facts and keeping in mind the decision in B.S. Joshi case, (2003) 4 SCC 675, and the compromise arrived at between the Company and the Bank as also Clause 11 of the consent terms filed in the suit filed by the Bank, this is a fit case where technicality should not be allowed to stand in the way in the quashing of the criminal proceedings, since the continuance of the same after the compromise arrived at between the parties would be a futile exercise. (Para 31)

Therefore, the order passed by the High Court is set aside and the proceedings against the appellant is quashed. (Para 32). Nikhil Merchant v. CBI, (2008) 9 SCC 677: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 858: (2008) 3 KLT 769: (2008) 69 AIC 34 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-8-2008]

B.S. Joshi v. State of Haryana, (2003) 4 SCC 675: 2003 SCC (Cri) 848, followed

[3418] — S. 320 — Compromise in criminal proceedings — Application for quashing of FIR — Declined by High Court on grounds that offence under S. 406 IPC was not compoundable and case was already fixed for examination of prosecution witnesses — Sustainability of — Held, from a reading of FIR and the other documents on record it is seen that the dispute was purely a personal one between two contesting parties and that it arose out of extensive business dealings between them and that there was absolutely no public policy involved in the nature of the allegations made against the accused — No useful purpose would be served in continuing with the proceedings in the light of the compromise and also in the light of the fact that the complainant has passed away and the possibility of a conviction being recorded was thus to be ruled out — Judge has confused compounding of an offence with the quashing of proceedings — Outer limit of Rs 250 which has led to the dismissal of the application was an irrelevant factor in the case

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

From a reading of the FIR and the other documents on record it is seen that the dispute was purely a personal one between two contesting parties and that it arose out of extensive business dealings between them and that there was absolutely no public policy involved in the nature of the allegations made against the accused. Therefore no useful purpose would be served in continuing with the proceedings in the light of the compromise and also in the light of the fact that the complainant has passed away and the possibility of a conviction being recorded has thus to be ruled out. Judge has confused compounding of an offence with the quashing of proceedings. The outer limit of Rs 250 which has led to the dismissal of the application is an irrelevant factor in the case. (Paras 5 and 7). Madan Mohan Abbot v. State of Punjab, (2008) 4 SCC 582: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 464: AIR 2008 SC 1969: 2008 Cri LJ 2243: (2008) 3 KLT 19.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-3-2008]

[3419] — S. 320 — Compromise in criminal proceedings — Circumstances in which to be allowed — Approach to be adopted by courts — Explained — Held, it is perhaps advisable that in disputes where the question involved is of a purely personal nature, the court should ordinarily accept the terms of the compromise even in criminal proceedings since keeping the matter alive with no possibility of a result in favour of the prosecution is a luxury which the courts, grossly overburdened as they are, cannot afford and that the time so saved can be utilised in deciding more effective and meaningful litigation — This is a common sense approach to the matter based on ground of realities and bereft of the technicalities of the law

It needs to be emphasised that it is perhaps advisable that in disputes where the question involved is of a purely personal nature, the court should ordinarily accept the terms of the compromise even in criminal proceedings as keeping the matter alive with no possibility of a result in favour of the prosecution is a luxury which the courts, grossly overburdened as they are, cannot afford and that the time so saved can be utilised in deciding more effective and meaningful litigation. This is a common-sense approach to the matter based on ground of realities and bereft of the technicalities of the law. (Para 6). Madan Mohan Abbot v. State of Punjab, (2008) 4 SCC 582: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 464: AIR 2008 SC 1969: 2008 Cri LJ 2243: (2008) 3 KLT 19.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-3-2008]

[3420] — S. 320 — Pardon accorded to appellant-accused by family of victim and Panchayat — Effect, if any — Held, such crime is committed against society/State and not only against family — Therefore, held, such pardon has no significance in such a heinous crime — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 (Para 51). Paramjeet Singh v. State of Uttarakhand, (2010) 10 SCC 439.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P. Sathasivam and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-9-2010]

[3421] — S. 320 — Special leave granted for compounding offence under S. 323 IPC in the circumstances of the case — Court also taking a compassionate approach in respect of the other offence having regard to facts particularly that they had acted in a moment of aberration due to loss of self control and accordingly sentence reduced to the period already undergone. Madhusudan Sahu v. State of Orissa, 1987 Supp SCC 80: 1987 SCC (Cri) 626.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-2-1987]

[3422] — S. 320 — Conviction altered in appeal to an offence which was compoundable — Permission to compound granted to one set of accused — Held, must be granted to the co-accused as well. Mainuddin v. State of U.P., (1982) 3 SCC 367(2): 1983 SCC (Cri) 48(2).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and E.S. Venkataramiah, J. [Date of decision: 6-3-1981]

[3423] — S. 320 — Conviction for non-compoundable offence altered in appeal to that for a compoundable offence — Matter allowed to be compounded. Ram Shanker v. State of U.P., (1982) 3 SCC 388(1): 1983 SCC (Cri) 60.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-4-1981]

[3424] — S. 320 — Non-compoundable offence — Effect of compromise — Husband and wife — Offence under Ss. 307/34 IPC — Victim-wife and accused-husband patching up their differences and living happily with their children — Special leave on question of sentence alone granted and sentence altered to that already undergone. Salim v. State of M.P., 1995 Supp (4) SCC 631: 1996 SCC (Cri) 72.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and Yogeshwar Dayal, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-1-1994]

Ram Pujan v. State of U.P., (1973) 2 SCC 456: 1973 SCC (Cri) 870, followed

This decision should be deemed to be impliedly overruled by Surendra Nath Mohanty v. State of Orissa, (1999) 5 SCC 238

[3425] — S. 320 — Compounding of offence — Offences under Ss. 384 and 506 IPC — Held, are not compoundable — Hence, prayer therefor rejected (Para 16). Karipi Rasheed Ahmed v. State of A.P., (2009) 17 SCC 515.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: L.S. Panta and B. Sudershan Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-2-2009]

[3426] — S. 320 — Non-compoundable offence — In view of compromise, sentence of two accused reduced by High Court to that already undergone — Held, the sentence of other co-accused should also be similarly reduced. Malkiat Singh v. State of Punjab, (1982) 3 SCC 371(2): 1983 SCC (Cri) 52(2).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.C. Gupta and Baharul Islam, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-1-1981]

[3427] — S. 320 — Compounding of offences — Non-compoundable offences — Conviction under S. 326 IPC — Petitioners cannot be acquitted straightaway in spite of settlement between parties — Held, some of non-compoundable offences under Ss. 498-A, 326, etc. IPC can be made compoundable by introducing a suitable amendment in the statute — Law Commission of India could examine whether a suitable proposal can be sent to the Union Government in this regard — Penal Code, 1860, S. 326. Ramgopal v. State of M.P., (2010) 13 SCC 540.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Markandey Katju and T.S. Thakur, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-7-2010]

[3428] — S. 320 — Offence under S. 307 or S. 324 IPC — Compoundability — Parties wishing to compromise — In the present case the injuries were only skin deep and the circumstances under which the incident occurred would preclude any inference that the assault was launched with intent to murder — At best the case would fall within the scope of S. 324 IPC — But since the parties, who were neighbours, desired to compound the matter, the court permitted them to do so to ensure lasting peace — Accordingly the conviction and sentence imposed by the High Court under S. 307 IPC set aside and the appellants acquitted — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 307 and 324. Sanjay Kumar v. State of M.P., 1994 Supp (1) SCC 502: 1994 SCC (Cri) 586.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and S. Mohan, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-2-1993]

[3429] — S. 320 — Trespass to seek sexual favours, but not for causing any physical hurt or assault or wrongful restraint — Offence whether under S. 452 or S. 451 — Appellant-accused convicted under Ss. 354 and 452 by all courts below — In application for compounding of the offences, Supreme Court on finding that the appellant had entered the house to seek sexual favours, but not for causing any physical hurt or assault or wrongful restraint, converting conviction of accused to that under S. 451, and compounding both convictions — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 452, 451 and 354. Moreshwar v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 11 SCC 429.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ashok Bhan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-2005]

[3430] — S. 320 — Applicability — Case of alleged kidnapping of/elopement with a girl T, less than 16 years of age, and her subsequent rape — Defence of appellant-accused P that he got married to T — Photographs relating to so-called marriage produced — However, both appellant-accused convicted under S. 366 IPC by trial court and High Court — Before Supreme Court, three affidavits favouring appellants, filed — One by T, who swore that she had an affair with appellant P and wanted to marry him, but her parents got her married to another person, that she had no grudge or ill will against P, that she did not want any kind of action against appellants and that matter had been patched up — Other two affidavits sworn by different persons, giving a certificate of good character to P, certifying that he was a law-abiding citizen and had committed no offence — Only on basis of these affidavits, appellants praying for acquittal or alternatively some reduction in sentence (of 1+ years imposed by High Court) — Tenability — Held, S. 366 IPC is a non- compoundable offence — Therefore, argument of appellants about acquittal on basis of affidavits, unsustainable — Also, there is genuine doubt about affidavits — Again, under the circumstances, sentence is already on lenient side — Moreover, no contrition on part of accused for their crime — Hence, plea regarding sentence, also rejected — Penal Code, 1860, S. 366 (Paras 13 and 14). Parshotam Lal v. State of Punjab, (2010) 1 SCC 65.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-10-2009]

[3431] — S. 320 — Bigamy — Conviction upheld and two years' RI and Rs 500 fine awarded — But looking to the facts and circumstances, especially the fact of irretrievable breakdown of the first marriage, court persuading the complainant to compound the offence and accept Rs 40,000 as compensation — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 494. Narotam Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 4 SCC 505: 1980 SCC (Cri) 113: AIR 1978 SC 1542: 1978 Cri LJ 1612.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-1978]

[3432] — S. 320 — Compounding of offences — Divorce by mutual consent in transfer petitions — Decree passed considering comprehensive settlement of matrimonial discord — Settlement carried out through High Court's Mediation Centre — Litigating parties living separately for more than one year — Parties filing counter criminal cases/proceedings — All proceedings quashed as per terms of settlement — CPC, 1908, Ss. 89, 25 and Or. 32-A R. 3 & Or. 23 R. 3 — Constitution of India, Art. 142 — Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 — S. 13-B . Aviral Bhatla v. Bhawna Bhatla, (2009) 3 SCC 448.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-2-2009]

[3433] — S. 320 — Compounding of offences — Non-compoundable offence — Compromise between parties — Effect on sentence — Imposition of condition for reducing sentence according to peculiarity of the case — Held, even if an offence is not compoundable within the scope of S. 320, Court may, in view of the compromise arrived at between the parties, reduce the sentence imposed while maintaining the conviction — In the instant case, appellant convicted under Ss. 279 and 304-A IPC for causing death of a small girl due to his rash and negligent driving — What remained after revision by High Court was conviction of appellant under Ss. 279 and 304-A IPC with sentence of 6 months' simple imprisonment and fine of Rs 2000 — Compromise between parties during pendency of matter before Supreme Court — Effect — Held, herein, instead of confining appellant in prison, interest of justice would be better served if he is made to compensate family of the deceased on account of loss suffered by them — Accordingly, while maintaining appellant's conviction under Ss. 279 and 304-A IPC, notwithstanding agreement arrived at between parties, amount of fine increased from Rs 2000 to Rs 20,000, to be paid by appellant to the parents of deceased, and sentence reduced to the period already undergone, subject to payment of the fine — If no deposit is made appeal would stand dismissed — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 279 and 304-A — Constitution of India, Art. 142 (Paras 2, 5 and 12 to 14). Puttaswamy v. State of Karnataka, (2009) 1 SCC 711.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-12-2008]

Surendra Nath Mohanty v. State of Orissa, (1999) 5 SCC 238: 1999 SCC (Cri) 998; Ram Lal v. State of J&K, (1999) 2 SCC 213: 1999 SCC (Cri) 123; Bachhu Singh v. State of U.P., (2002) 10 SCC 313: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1124; Avinash Shetty v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 13 SCC 375: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 316; Y. Suresh Babu v. State of A.P., (2005) 1 SCC 347: 2005 SCC (Cri) 320, relied on [3434] — Ss. 320 and 321 — Compounding of offence under S. 302 IPC — Interlocutory applications for compromising matter in view of settlement arrived at between parties in panchayat, filed by appellants — Held, offence under S. 302 IPC is not compoundable — In violation of the statutory provisions, except in some marginal cases, the court shall not allow composition of offence — Appellants were prosecuted for committing two murders and injuring one — Maintenance of rule of law is the prime duty of the State — If parties have settled their disputes they may live in peace in future but the same by itself cannot be a ground to pass a judgment of acquittal — Supreme Court Rules, 1966, Or. 47 Rr. 1 & 6 (Para 41). Satbir Singh v. State of U.P., (2009) 13 SCC 790: AIR 2009 SC 2163: (2009) 3 All LJ 786: (2009) 76 AIC 120 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-2-2009]

Shivappa v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 11 SCC 337: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 143, considered and relied on

Modi's Medical Jurisprudence, p. 185, cited

[3435] — S. 320 — Compounding of offence — Offences under Ss. 406/420 IPC, compoundable with permission of the court — In view of compromise between the parties, Supreme Court directing them to file an application under S. 320 before the court concerned — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 406 and 420 (Para 2). Raja Ram Kashyap v. State of U.P., (2009) 14 SCC 248.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-4-2009]

[3436] — S. 320 — Non-compoundable offence — Modification of sentence — Effect of compromise regarding compoundable offence — During pendency of appeal, parties entering into compromise and as a result appellants acquitted of offence under S. 323 — Affidavit of complainant, ex-wife of Appellant 1, clearly stating that she had no wish to pursue the case and that she had remarried by then — Held, conviction under S. 498-A to be maintained, but sentence of imprisonment (1 year) to be reduced to period already undergone (Appellants 1 & 2, 8 months and 21/2 months respectively); Appellant 3 to be released on probation under Probation of Offenders Act, so that his job may not be jeopardised — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 498-A and 323 — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 — S. 4 (Para 6). Ramchandra Singh v. State of Bihar, (2003) 10 SCC 234.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and P. Venkatarama Reddi, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-3-2002]

[3437] — S. 320 — Punishment — Compromise — Husband suspecting wife of unchastity right from day of marriage and indulging in mud-slinging and character assassination thereafter and lodging false complaint of theft against her — Pursuant to complaint made by respondent-wife, appellant-husband convicted under S. 498-A IPC with fine of Rs 30,000 and under S. 500 with sentence of two months' simple imprisonment and fine of Rs 6000 by High Court — Before the Supreme Court settlement arrived at between the parties whereunder appellant agreeing to pay rupees one lakh to respondent in addition to payment of fine of Rs 6000 under S. 500 as also to pay fine of Rs 30,000 under S. 498-A as ordered by High Court and to file an unqualified apology before the Supreme Court for the mental strain and stress caused by him to the respondent — Appellants' brother also to file an undertaking before the Court to the effect that he will take no proceedings, civil or criminal, against the respondent for any averments, allegations or statements made by her in any proceedings — Respondent would be entitled to withdraw the amounts deposited by appellant — Compliance with the terms of the settlement would conclude all the proceedings — High Court was justified in taking serious view of appellant's conduct towards respondent — This should prove to be an eye opener to those who believe that they can get away by casting aspersions on a woman to serve their ends and to silence her — Criminal appeal — Compromise — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 498-A and 500. Mukund Martand Chitnis v. Madhuri Mukund Chitnis, 1991 Supp (2) SCC 359: AIR 1992 SC 1804.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, V. Ramaswami and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-4-1991]

[3438] — S. 320 — Offence under S. 324 read with S. 34, IPC allowed to be compounded. Ram Prasad v. State of U.P., (1982) 2 SCC 149: 1982 SCC (Cri) 375.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and E.S. Venkataramiah, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-4-1980]

[3439] — S. 320 — Supreme Court under Art. 136 allowing compounding of the offences where the parties were closely related — Conviction and order of sentence set aside and accused acquitted — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 324 & 325. Hindu Singh v. State of U.P., (1982) 3 SCC 368(2): 1983 SCC (Cri) 49(2).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and V.D. Tulzapurkar, J. [Date of decision: 29-1-1981]

[3440] — S. 320 — Compounding of offence from S. 307 to one under Ss. 324/34 IPC or release on probation of good conduct — Counsel contending that parties being close relatives compromising offence under S. 307 IPC — But complainant not having been identified in court but claming to be so and willing to compound — Effect — Instead of compounding the offence, release of offender on terms to be settled by trial court, held, would be proper — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4 — Applicability — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 307 or 324 and 34. Gaya Prasad v. State of M.P., (2009) 17 SCC 757.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-11-2009]

[3441] — S. 320 — Accused-appellants claimed to have compounded offences with the injured persons — Trial magistrate directed to verify from the injured persons, by calling them alone in his chamber, that they agreed to compounding of the offences voluntarily, willingly and without any pressure and submit a report to the Supreme Court — Constitution of India, Article 136. Madhusudan Sahu v. State of Orissa, 1987 Supp SCC 180: 1988 SCC (Cri) 54.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1986]

[3442] — S. 320 — Case allowed to be compounded at stage of appeal before Supreme Court where the complainant filed such application for compounding and State pressed no objection. Chiranji Lal v. State of U.P., (1982) 3 SCC 371(1): 1983 SCC (Cri) 52(1).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-2-1981]

[3443] — S. 320 — Composition granted — Offence under Ss. 323, 324 and 325 read with S. 34, Penal Code — Victim voluntarily entering into a composition to restore friendly and good neighbourly relations with the accused and rejecting compensation offer — In view of the chastened attitude of the accused and commendable attitude of the victim in order to restore harmony in society, composition acceptable. Ramji Lal v. State of Haryana, (1983) 1 SCC 368: 1983 SCC (Cri) 189.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.A. Desai and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-1982]

[3444] — S. 320 — Compoundable offence — Action constituting both civil and criminal wrong — Compromise in civil suit — Effect — Act constituting both civil and criminal wrong — Civil suits for recovery of dues compromised on receiving payments from the companies concerned — Even if offence of cheating is prima facie constituted, compromise decree passed in such suits would amount to compounding of offence of cheating. CBI v. Duncans Agro Industries Ltd., (1996) 5 SCC 591: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1045: AIR 1996 SC 2452.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-7-1996]

[3445] — S. 320 — Compoundable offences — Those offences which are not mentioned in S. 320, held, cannot be permitted to be compounded. B.S. Joshi v. State of Haryana, (2003) 4 SCC 675: 2003 SCC (Cri) 848: AIR 2003 SC 1386: (2003) 2 KLT 1062: 2003 Cri LJ 2028.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-3-2003]

[3446] — S. 320 — Compounding of compoundable offences — Ss. 325/149, 323/149 and 147 IPC — Where after conviction confirmed by High Court, appellant made an application for compounding before Supreme Court and such application was endorsed by complainant-informant, and occurrence dated back to 1987, in the interests of justice permission for compounding accorded; conviction and sentence set aside (Para 2). Ramphal v. State of M.P., (2000) 9 SCC 61: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1162.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-1-2000]

[3447] — S. 320 — Compounding of non-compoundable case at the instance of court — Offence under S. 307 IPC — Acquittal by trial court reversed by High Court — Prayer for compounding in appeal before Supreme Court allowed in view of fact that accused was a lawyer and counter case already compromised — Keeping in view of nature of case and circumstances under which offence committed trial court directed to accord permission to compound the offence. Mahesh Chand v. State of Rajasthan, 1990 Supp SCC 681: 1991 SCC (Cri) 159: AIR 1988 SC 2111: 1988 BLJR 468.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-3-1988]

Overruled in Surendra Nath Mohanty v. State of Orissa, (1999) 5 SCC 238

Held to have been decided per incuriam in Ram Lal v. State of J&K, (1999) 2 SCC 213: 1999 SCC (Cri) 123 and Bankat v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 1 SCC 343

[3448] — S. 320 — Compounding of offence — Parties entering into compromise outside the court and the injured compensated — Injury caused by accused to victim not proved to be grievous injury — Conviction altered from S. 326 to S. 324 IPC and permission to compound the offence granted — Accused acquitted. Bharat Singh v. State of M.P., 1990 Supp SCC 62: 1990 SCC (Cri) 617.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Natarajan and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-1989]

[3449] — S. 320 — Compounding of offence — Conviction under S. 325 IPC — Complainant reported to be dead — Son of complainant present in court — In order to restore good relationship between them, parties compromising the matter — Prayer for compounding the offence allowed — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 325 (Para 3). Pritam Singh v. State of Haryana, (2005) 11 SCC 566.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.M. Dharmadhikari and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-4-2005]

[3450] — S. 320 — Compounding of offence — Offences under Ss. 324/149, 323/149, 147 and 148 IPC — Conviction and sentence under — Since the incident took place in the year 1979 and subsequently the parties arrived at an amicable settlement, held on facts, it would be a fit case for reducing the sentence to the period already undergone — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 324/149, 323/149 and 148. Bachhu Singh v. State of U.P., (2002) 10 SCC 313.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.B. Shah and Ruma Pal, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-12-2000]

[3451] — S. 320 — Compounding of offence — How and by whom offence to be compounded — Occurrence took place a long time back and in the meantime one of the injured died — Appellant stood convicted under Ss. 324 and 323 r/w S. 34 IPC — Complainant volunteered to compound the case — Reasons for compounding offences found sufficient and genuine — Hence, compounding of offences granted — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 323, 324 and 34

The appellants stood convicted under Section 324 read with Section 34 and Section 323 read with Section 34 IPC.

Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

An application has been filed by the complainant and the accused persons stating that the occurrence took place nearly 25 years back and the parties are related to each other and therefore, they may be permitted to compound the offences. Complainant has volunteered to compound the offences with the appellants for sufficient and genuine reasons as stated in the affidavits and such compounding would be proper. So far as the offence under Section 323 is concerned, it is compoundable with the consent of the injured. So far as the offence under Section 324 is concerned, it is compoundable by the person to whom hurt is caused with the permission of the court, in terms of sub-section (2) of Section 320. (Paras 2 and 4). Mathura Singh v. State of U.P., (2009) 13 SCC 420.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2009]

Manoj v. State of M.P., (2008) 9 SCC 116: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 699, relied on [3452] — S. 320 — Compounding of offence — Purpose of — Held, the purpose of compounding of offence against payment of compounding amount is to prevent litigation and encourage early settlement of disputes — Customs (Compounding of Offences) Rules, 2005 (Para 6). Rajesh Kumar Sharma v. Union of India, (2007) 9 SCC 158: (2007) 51 AIC 17 (SC): (2007) 209 ELT 3: (2007) 138 DLT 121.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-2-2007]

[3453] — S. 320 — Compounding of offence committed under S. 324 IPC — Application for — Complainant having no objection to it — Offence permitted to be compounded — Conviction and sentence set aside — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 324 (Paras 7 and 8). Avinash Shetty v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 13 SCC 375.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-9-2004]

[3454] — S. 320 — Compounding of offence under S. 323 IPC — Conviction under S. 307 applying S. 34 — Propriety of — Appellant did not know that the other accused would be inflicting an injury on the victim with the intention of murdering him — Hence, conviction with the help of S. 34, held, was not proper — Appellant liable only for the offence committed by him under S. 323 — However, appellant acquitted of the offence under S. 323 due to the compounding of offence — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 34, 307 r/w Ss. 34 and 323. Sunderlal v. State of M.P., (2002) 9 SCC 564.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-9-2000]

[3455] — S. 320 — Proper stage for compounding — Offence under S. 138 of Negotiable Instruments Act — Compounding of the offence under, during final hearing before Supreme Court — Permissibility — Conviction upheld by all the three forums — Complainant having received the entire money, stating before Supreme Court that he had no objection if the conviction was set aside — State opposing the setting aside of the conviction on the ground that the parties could have entered into a compromise only during the pendency of the appeal and not at this stage — Despite some force in the State's contention, in view of the nature of the offence and the existence of a compromise, Supreme Court granting permission, in the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case to compound — Hence, conviction and sentence, held, necessarily stood annulled — Constitution of India, Art. 136 — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — S. 138 (Para 3). O.P. Dholakia v. State of Haryana, (2000) 1 SCC 762: 2000 SCC (Cri) 310.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-11-1999]

[3456] — S. 320 — Non obstante clause in S. 147 NI Act, gives S. 147 overriding effect over S. 320 CrPC — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 147

Once a person is allowed to compound a case as provided for under Section 147 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, the conviction under Section 138 of the said Act should also be set aside. As far as the non obstante clause included in Section 147 of the 1881 Act is concerned, the 1881 Act being a special statute, the provisions of Section 147 will have an overriding effect over the provisions of CrPC relating to compounding of offences. (Paras 9 to 13). K.M. Ibrahim v. K.P. Mohammed, (2010) 1 SCC 798.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2009]

[3457] — S. 320 — Compounding of offence under S. 138, NI Act — Consequential relief — Forums before/stage of proceedings at which application for compounding may be made — Offence under the Act (S. 138 in this case), if allowed to be compounded under S. 147, NI Act conviction and sentence therefor recorded by court deserve to be set aside — Application for compounding of offence under S. 147, NI Act can be made at appellate stage and even in a proceeding under Art. 136 of Constitution — If such applica- tion is made, Supreme Court is further empowered under Art. 142 to pass appropriate orders in consonance with S. 320(8) CrPC — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 147 and 138

A cheque for Rs 95,000 issued by the appellant to the first respondent, when presented to the bank, was dishonoured on account of insufficiency of funds in the account of the appellant. The respondent, thereupon, issued statutory notice to the appellant. Since the appellant failed to pay the amount in time, the respondent filed a complaint before CJM. The trial court found the appellant guilty of the offence under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act and sentenced him to one year's RI and a fine of Rs 1,05,000 and in default of payment thereof, to undergo further 3 months' RI. If, however, the fine was realised, directions were given that a sum of Rs 1,00,000 should be given to the respondent by way of compensation. In appeal filed by the appellant, the appellate court, while confirming the conviction, reduced the sentence. The order of the appellate court was challenged in revision before the High Court which decided the matter in the light of Section 357(3) CrPC and dismissed the revision. In the present appeal before the Supreme Court under Article 136 of the Constitution, at the very initial stage of the hearing, a question was raised on behalf of the appellant as to whether an offence under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act could be compounded under Section 147 of the Act read with Section 320 CrPC.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Once a person is allowed to compound a case as provided for under Section 147 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, the conviction under Section 138 of the said Act should also be set aside. As far as the non obstante clause included in Section 147 of the 1881 Act is concerned, the 1881 Act being a special statute, the provisions of Section 147 will have an overriding effect over the provisions of CrPC relating to compounding of offences. (Paras 9 to 13)

Apart from the above, the Supreme Court is further empowered under Article 142 of the Constitution to pass appropriate orders in line with sub-section (8) of Section 320 CrPC in an application under Section 147 of the aforesaid Act, in order to do justice to the parties. (Para 12)

It is true that the application under Section 147 of the Negotiable Instruments Act was made by the parties after the proceedings had been concluded before the appellate forum. However, Section 147 does not bar the parties from compounding an offence under Section 138 even at the appellate stage of the proceedings. Accordingly, there is no reason to reject the application under Section 147 of the aforesaid Act even in a proceeding under Article 136 of the Constitution. (Para 14)

Since the parties have settled their disputes, in keeping with the spirit of Section 147 of the Act, the parties are allowed to compound the offence, the judgments of the courts below are set aside and the appellant is acquitted of the charges against him. (Para 15). K.M. Ibrahim v. K.P. Mohammed, (2010) 1 SCC 798.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2009]

O.P. Dholakia v. State of Ilaryana, (2000) 1 SCC 762: 2000 SCC (Cri) 310; Anil Kumar Haritwal v. Alka Gupta, (2004) 4 SCC 366: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1084; B.C. Seshadri v. B.N. Suryanarayana Rao, (2004) 11 SCC 510: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 112; G. Sivarajan v. Little Flower Kuries & Enterprises Ltd., (2004) 11 SCC 400: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 103; Kishore Kumar v. J.K. Corpn. Ltd., (2004) 13 SCC 494: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 348; Sailesh Shyam Parsekar v. Baban, (2005) 4 SCC 162: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1321; K. Gyansagar v. Ganesh Gupta, (2005) 7 SCC 54: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1593; K.J.B.L. Rama Reddy v. Annapurna Seeds, (2005) 10 SCC 632: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1652; Sayeed Ishaque Memon v. Ansari Naseer Ahmed, (2005) 12 SCC 140: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 533; Vinay Devanna Nayak v. Ryot Sewa Sahakari Bank Ltd., (2008) 2 SCC 305: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 351; Sudheer Kumar v. Manakkandi M.K. Kunhiraman, (2008) 1 KLJ 203, relied on [3458] — Ss. 320 and 357(1) — Compounding of offence under NI Act, 1881, before Supreme Court — High Court directing appellant-accused to deposit a fine of Rs 2 lakhs as compensation under S. 357(1) CrPC — During the pendency of appeal before Supreme Court, parties entered into a compromise and in terms of the said compromise, entire amount was received by the respondent complainant — Appeal disposed of on the basis of settlement between the parties and appellant acquitted — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Ss. 138 and 147 (Para 4). Rajendran v. N. Mohanan, (2009) 14 SCC 399: (2009) 77 AIC 71 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.K. Jain and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-4-2009]

[3459] — S. 320 — Compounding of offences — Settlement between parties — Prayer by the appellant to withdraw appeal against acquittal since disputes and grievances settled between the parties and good relationship restored — Held, offences enumerated in S. 320 CrPC can only be compounded and not brutal murder — Further held, where prima facie, acquittal by the High Court appears to be erroneous such a prayer cannot be granted at this stage — Hence, further hearing of the appeal directed — Prosecution by the prosecutor is not as empty formality which can be permitted to be withdrawn after the appellant has withdrawn his appeal (Para 3). Kamma Otukunta Ram Naidu v. Chereddy Pedda Subba Reddy, (2003) 12 SCC 723.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-7-2003]

[Ed.: Matter finally disposed of in (2003) 11 SCC 293: 2004 SCC (Cri) 155]

[3460] — S. 320 — Joint petition of compromise — Filing of, in a non-compoundable offence i.e. offence under S. 307 IPC — Relief — Held, compromise cannot be recorded in such a case — But, while awarding sentence the effect of compromise can be taken into consideration — Thus, on facts, sentence of imprisonment reduced by High Court to six years was further reduced to period already undergone i.e. about 14 months — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 307 r/w S. 34 (Para 4). Badrilal v. State of M.P., (2005) 7 SCC 55: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1597.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-7-2005]

Distinguished in Dhananjay v. State of Bihar, (2007) 14 SCC 768

[3461] — S. 320 — Non-compoundable offence — Compromise — Relevance of — Held, factor of compromise cannot be recorded in such a case but the effect of compromise can be taken into consideration for reducing the sentence — Appellants convicted under S. 313 r/w S. 34 IPC i.e. offence of causing miscarriage without woman's consent and sentenced to 5 years' RI and fine of Rs 7000 — Sentence reduced by the High Court to 3 years' RI and fine of Rs 5000 — Appellant Hasi Mohan having an affair with the complainant and due to intimate relationship the complainant becoming pregnant — Appellant's refusal to marry the complainant and causing miscarriage despite her protest — During the pendency of the case complainant marrying the appellant and filing an affidavit to this effect in the Court that she has entered into a compromise with the appellants and wants the criminal case to be withdrawn as they are living peacefully — Supreme Court reducing the sentence of appellants to the one already undergone i.e. about 10 months — However, conviction of appellants under S. 313 IPC maintained — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 313. Hasi Mohan Barman v. State of Assam, (2008) 1 SCC 184: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 161: AIR 2008 SC 388.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.P. Mathur and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-11-2007]

Ram Pujan v. State of U.P., (1973) 2 SCC 456: 1973 SCC (Cri) 870; Surendra Nath Mohanty v. State of Orissa, (1999) 5 SCC 238: 1999 SCC (Cri) 998, followed

Bankat v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 1 SCC 343: 2005 SCC (Cri) 316; Badrilal v. State of M.P., (2005) 7 SCC 55: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1597; Jetha Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2006) 9 SCC 255: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 561, relied on [3462] — S. 320 — Non-compoundable offence — Filing of petition for compounding of — Effect — Held, effect of compounding can be taken into account while awarding sentence — Compounding of offence involving S. 457 IPC, which is a non-compoundable offence — Considering the said fact, sentence liable to be reduced to period already undergone i.e. three months — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 457 and 354 (Para 4). Sanjit Datta v. State of Tripura, (2006) 13 SCC 294: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 172.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-11-2005]

[3463] — S. 320 — Compounding of non-compoundable offence — Effect on sentence — On facts, as affidavit for compromise filed, though offence not compoundable, held, sentence imposed on appellant reduced and modified to the period already undergone (Para 1). Ishwarlal v. State of M.P., (2008) 15 SCC 671: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1156.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Sabyasachi Mukharji and K.N. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-4-1988]

Ram Pujan v. State of U.P., (1973) 2 SCC 456: 1973 SCC (Cri) 870, relied on [3464] — S. 320 — Sentence — Period already undergone — Mitigating circumstances — Appellant-accused convicted under S. 436 IPC and sentenced to RI for 3 years — In order to live in peace and tranquillity, appellant and widow of complainant entering into compromise on intervention of local elders whereunder an amount of Rs 1 lakh was given by appellant to the widow aged about 61 years as solatium — Appellant was a young married man having small children, only earning member of the family, and had spend more than seven months in jail — Held, offence punishable under S. 436 being non-compoundable, the same cannot be compounded on basis of compromise entered into between the parties — However, having regard to the circumstances interest of justice would be met if sentence is reduced to period already undergone (Paras 7 to 10). Amar Nath Shukla v. State of Uttaranchal, (2009) 9 SCC 390: (2009) 82 AIC 14 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and B. Sudershan Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-8-2009]

[3465] — S. 320 — Compounding of non-compoundable offence — Permissibility — Effect on sentence — On facts, appellant- accused convicted under S. 307 IPC and sentenced to three years' RI with fine and default stipulation — During pendency of appeal before Supreme Court mutual compromise arrived at between accused and com-

plainant victim — Separate affidavits were also filed by both in respect thereof — Joint prayer of parties that accused may be released, treating sentence already undergone as sufficient — Held, offence punishable under S. 307 IPC is not a compoundable offence — S. 320 CrPC expressly states that no offence shall be compounded if it is not compoundable under CrPC — However, Supreme Court may consider compromise between the parties for the purpose of reduction of sentence — Hence, considering the totality of facts and circumstances, conviction maintained but sentence reduced to that already undergone — However, sentence of payment of fine not disturbed — Penal Code, 1860, S. 307

It cannot be gainsaid that an offence punishable under Section 307 IPC is not a compoundable offence. Section 320 CrPC expressly states that no offence shall be compounded if it is not compoundable under CrPC. At the same time, however, while dealing with such matters, the Supreme Court may take into account a relevant and important consideration about compromise between the parties for the purpose of reduction of sentence. (Para 12)

It would not be appropriate to order compounding of an offence not compoundable under CrPC, ignoring and keeping aside statutory provisions. However, limited submission of the appellant deserves consideration that while imposing substantive sentence, the factum of compromise between the parties is indeed a relevant circumstance which the Court may keep in mind. (Para 14)

In the instant case, the incident took place before more than fifteen years; the parties are residing in one and the same village and they are also relatives. The appellant was about 20 years of age at the time of commission of crime. It was his first offence. After conviction, the petitioner was taken into custody. During the pendency of appeal before the High Court, he was enlarged on bail but, after the decision of the High Court, he again surrendered. Though he had applied for bail, the prayer was not granted and he was not released on bail. Considering the totality of facts and circumstances, ends of justice would be met if the sentence of imprisonment awarded to the appellant is reduced to the period already undergone. (Para 15). Ishwar Singh v. State of M.P., (2008) 15 SCC 667: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1153: AIR 2009 SC 675: (2008) 72 AIC 140 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-10-2008]

Jetha Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2006) 9 SCC 255: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 561; Murugesan v. Ganapathy Velar, (2001) 10 SCC 504: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1032; Ishwarlal v. State of M.P., (2008) 15 SCC 671, relied on

[Ed.: See also in this regard (2008) 1 SCC 184: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 161; (1995) 5 SCC 238: 1999 SCC (Cri) 998.]

[3466] — S. 320 — Non-compoundable offence — Settlement between parties — Held, conviction would stand, sentence reduced to that already undergone and accused directed to pay compensation to the complainant — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 326. Shah Noor v. State of A.P., (1982) 3 SCC 511: 1983 SCC (Cri) 107.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-7-1981]

[3467] — S. 320 — Offence under Ss. 323 and 325 IPC — Parties willingly and voluntarily settling the dispute with the intervention of Mohalla people and relatives — With a view to maintain good relations between the parties permission to compound the offence granted. Mohd. Rafi v. State of U.P., 1998 SCC (Cri) 891.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-3-1998]

[3468] — S. 320 — Offence under Ss. 324 and 324/149, IPC resulting out of quarrel between college students allowed to be compounded before the Supreme Court — Conviction and sentence set aside — Compensation amount directed to be paid out of fines already paid. Bhupendra Singh v. State of M.P., 1980 Supp SCC 352: 1981 SCC (Cri) 280: AIR 1981 SC 1240: 1981 Cri LJ 751.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and D.A. Desai, J. [Date of decision: 17-12-1980]

[3469] — S. 320 — Offence under S. 324, IPC — Application for permission to compound the offence on terms already agreed upon with complainant — Complainant not present before Supreme Court — Trial court directed to verify genuineness of compromise and accord permission after recording its satisfaction — Fine imposed upon petitioner directed to be paid to complainant — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 324. Tanveer Aquil v. State of M.P., 1990 Supp SCC 63: 1990 SCC (Cri) 618.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jagannatha Shetty and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-2-1989]

[3470] — S. 320 — Offence under S. 324 IPC (voluntarily causing hurt by dangerous weapon) — Compoundability of — Matters to be considered by court — Held, amendment made in the Table under S. 320 CrPC, by means of the CrPC (Amendment) Act, 2005, against S. 324 IPC, has not yet been brought into force — Offence under S. 324 IPC is therefore still compoundable with court's permission — In present case compounding of offence found to be complainant's voluntary act inasmuch as the complainant and appellants were residents of the same village and compromise was brought about by intervention of village panchayat — The complainant and appellants categorically stating in their affidavits filed in the Supreme Court that after the incident, they had developed family relations and wished to live peacefully in the village without any kind of disruption in their future lives — Compounding allowed by the Supreme Court — Conviction set aside and appellants who were in prison, set free — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 324 — Compounding of offence under — Matters to be considered by court (Paras 14 to 17). Manoj v. State of M.P., (2008) 9 SCC 116: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 699.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-9-2008]

[3471] — S. 320 — Offence under S. 326 IPC amicably settled — On prayer and submissions of both parties, Supreme Court allowing the compounding of the offence under S. 326 IPC even though such compounding not permitted by S. 320, on the condition that the accused pay the respondent Rs 10,000 as compensation — Case, however, directed not to be treated as precedent — Constitution of India — Arts. 142 & 141 — Decision by Supreme Court intending to do complete justice — Provisions of statute not strictly followed — Directions passed not to treat the decision as a precedent. Y. Suresh Babu v. State of A.P., (2005) 1 SCC 347: 2005 SCC (Cri) 320.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-1987]

Held to have been decided per incuriam in Surendra Nath Mohanty v. State of Orissa, (1999) 5 SCC 238: 1999 SCC (Cri) 998 and Bankat v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 1 SCC 343*

[Ed.: It is interesting to note that despite the direction not to treat the case as a precedent the same has been cited at the Bar and discussed in at least three later decisions, namely, (1999) 2 SCC 213, (1999) 5 SCC 238 and (2005) 1 SCC 343.]

[3472] — S. 320 — Offence under S. 326 IPC, held, is not compoundable under S. 320 CrPC — However, having regard to the facts of the case that the occurrence had taken place on 24-12-1979 on a trivial issue and that the complainant and the accused are close relations who are now living amicably, the sentence of 18 months' rigorous imprisonment reduced to the period already undergone by appellant — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 326 — Compounding of offence under. Jalaluddin v. State of U.P., (2002) 9 SCC 561: 2001 Cri LJ 4944.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Saghir Ahmad and Doraiswamy Raju, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-4-2000]

[3473] — S. 320 — S. 494 r/w S. 109 IPC — Consent regarding compounding of offence — Where consent given by complainant wife appeared to be free and genuine, and the compromise seemed on the face of it reasonable and in the interest of wife, and wife was an educated person, held, on facts, it was a fit case deserving permission for compounding of the offence of bigamy. Parameswari v. Vennila, (2000) 10 SCC 348.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-8-1999]

[3474] — S. 320 — Settlement in respect of offence under S. 326 IPC — Sentence under — Reduction of — Settlement arrived at between parties — On facts, sentence reduced to period of about 4 months already undergone — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 326. Ram Ekbal Upadhya v. State of Bihar, (2001) 10 SCC 233.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-11-2000]

[3475] — S. 320 — SLP for compounding before Supreme Court of offences under Ss. 448 and 506 Part II, IPC — Compounding permitted on the condition that the accused contribute Rs 3000 to the Prime Minister's Relief Fund — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 448 and 506 Part II. Devender Kumar Sharma v. State of M.P., 1994 SCC (Cri) 145.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Ramaswamy and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-4-1993]

[3476] — Ss. 320, 239 and 482 — Compounding of offence — Compromise between the parties — Sustainability of — On an FIR, charge-sheet filed after investigation against the appellant for an offence under Ss. 323, 384, 504 r/w S. 34 IPC — Prior business relations between informant and accused — An application for discharge filed by the appellant under S. 239 CrPC, inter alia, on the ground that the dispute between the parties has been settled, rejected by the Judicial Magistrate on the ground that S. 384 IPC being non-compoundable, the said application was not sustainable — Application filed under S. 482 CrPC before the High Court also dismissed — Held, there was no allegation that money was paid by the informant having been put in fear of injury or putting him in such fear by the appellant was intentional — First informant, admittedly, had also not delivered any property or valuable security to the appellant — Hence, held, no case under S. 384 IPC was made out for proceeding against the appellant — Therefore, there was no reason to reject the settlement arrived at between the parties, as the same would not come within the purview of S. 320(9) CrPC — Hence, held, charge framed under S. 384 IPC quashed with the direction to the Magistrate to consider the maintainability of the compromise petition between the parties — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 323, 384, 504 r/w S. 34 — Compounding of

A written report was lodged by the second respondent alleging that some unknown persons came to his room and asked him to make payment of Rs 1500 due from him. On his reply that he would make the payment only of the amount due from him as per settled accounts, abusive language was used and he was slapped by one G. A sum of Rs 1580 was said to have been taken away from his upper pocket. An FIR was lodged on the basis of the report. However, the parties arrived at an amicable settlement of their dispute. A charge-sheet was filed on completion of investigation against the appellant for an offence under Sections 323, 384, 504 read with Section 34 IPC. Application filed by the appellant for discharge under Section 239 CrPC, inter alia, on the premise that the disputes between the parties had been settled, was rejected by the Judicial Magistrate on the ground that Section 384 IPC being non-compoundable, the said application was not sustainable. An application filed by the appellant under Section 482 CrPC before the High Court was dismissed by reason of the impugned judgment. Hence this present appeal.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

No case has been made out for proceeding against the appellant under Section 384 IPC. In that view of the matter, there was absolutely no reason as to why the settlement arrived at by and between the parties could not have been accepted, as the same would not come within the purview of sub-section (9) of Section 320 CrPC. (Para 16)

For the reasons aforementioned, while quashing the charge framed under Section 384 IPC, the learned Magistrate is directed to proceed to consider the question in regard to the maintainability of the compromise petition between the parties in accordance with law. (Para 17). Dhananjay v. State of Bihar, (2007) 14 SCC 768: (2007) 51 AIC 54 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 1440: (2007) 2 KLJ 294 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-2-2007]

Bankat v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 1 SCC 343: 2005 SCC (Cri) 316; Badrilal v. State of M.P., (2005) 7 SCC 55: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1597, distinguished [3477] — Ss. 320 and 4 — Complaint regarding dishonour of cheque — Compromise petition in terms of S. 147 — When binding on the party — Authority of advocate to enter into settlement — Permissibility — Filing of affidavit affirmed by complainant/accused while arriving at settlement, whether required — Consideration of — Appellant contending that consent terms were filed by the counsel without any instructions from appellant — Validity — Held, NI Act is a special Act — S. 147 provides for a non obstante clause — Indisputably, provisions of CrPC would be applicable to the proceedings pending before courts for trial of offences under NI Act — Stricto sensu, however, the table appended to S. 320 CrPC is not attracted as the provisions mentioned therein refer only to provisions of IPC and none other — In such a situation, a settlement could be arrived at by and between complainant and accused — While a settlement is arrived at, it is not necessary under provisions of NI Act and/or CrPC to file any affidavit affirmed by complainant or accused — By reason of authority granted by a litigant in favour of his advocate which, inter alia, empowers the latter to enter into a settlement, any settlement arrived at, on behalf of a party to a lis would be binding on the parties thereto — In the instant case, settlement made was permissible in law — Ex facie, it did not violate any public policy and was not otherwise inequitable — Hence, no case made out for interference — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — Ss. 138 and 147 — CPC, 1908, Or. 23 R. 3 (Paras 12, 13, 17 and 18). R. Rajeshwari v. H.N. Jagadish, (2008) 4 SCC 82: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 186: (2008) 5 Mah LJ 404: (2008) 3 Guj LR 2286: (2008) 64 AIC 29 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-3-2008]

Manoharbahal Colliery v. K.N. Mishra, (1975) 2 SCC 244, relied on [3478] — S. 320 — Compounding of the offence — When proper — Accused and the complainant settling matter amicably and memo of settlement produced before the Supreme Court — In view of this, conviction and sentence set aside — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — S. 138 (Para 4). Kishore Kumar v. J.K. Corpn. Ltd., (2004) 13 SCC 494.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-9-2004]

[3479] — S. 320 — Compounding of offence — Conviction under S. 138 of Negotiable Instruments Act and sentence of three months' SI and fine of Rs 5000 — Offence stated to have been compounded by paying the entire dues to complainant by accused-appellant — Joint application filed seeking permission for compounding the offence — Since S. 147 of the NI Act, as amended, makes the offence compoundable prayer for compounding the offence allowed — Sentence of imprisonment set aside while that of fine maintained — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — Ss. 138 and 147 (as amended). Cochin Hotels Co. (P) Ltd. v. Kairali Granites, (2005) 12 SCC 234.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.M. Dharmadhikari and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-2-2005]

[3480] — S. 320 — Compounding of offences — Offences under S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 and S. 420 IPC — Both the parties filing joint petition for compromise before the Supreme Court — Held, said compromise was lawful — Hence, permission granted to compromise the disputes — Convictions and sentences awarded against appellant, set aside — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — S. 138 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 420 (Paras 4 and 5). Sayeed Ishaque Memon v. Ansari Naseer Ahmed, (2005) 12 SCC 140.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-4-2005]

[3481] — Ss. 320 and 321 — Compounding of offence — Factors to be considered — Non-compoundable offence — Submission that 21 years had elapsed since the date of occurrence, a settlement had been arrived at by and between the parties and in fact the cousin of the deceased was married to appellant whereafter an application for compromise had also been filed, hence conviction under S. 304-B, Penal Code, may be condoned — Held, an offence under S. 304-B of the Penal Code is not compoundable — Why and under what circumstances the cousin of the deceased, if any, had been married to appellant not known — Only because such a marriage had allegedly taken place, the same by itself cannot be a ground for rejecting the prosecution story — Said grounds also do not entail imposition of lesser sentence than the minimum statutory sentence of 7 years' RI — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 304-B (Paras 30 and 31). Rameshwar Dass v. State of Punjab, (2007) 14 SCC 696: AIR 2008 SC 890: 2008 Cri LJ 1400: (2008) 62 AIC 242 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-12-2007]

[3482] — Ss. 320 and 354 — Non-compoundable offence — Compromise in — Relevance of — Held, though compromise cannot be recorded in such a case, but the effect of compromise can be taken into consideration while awarding the sentence — Appellants convicted under S. 326 IPC and sentenced to two years' RI — Compromise petition filed — Appellants in custody for about five months — Held, ends of justice would be met if sentence reduced to period already undergone — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 326 (Para 4). Jetha Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2006) 9 SCC 255: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 561.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-7-2005]

[3483] — Ss. 320 and 357 — Offences under Ss. 323/343/355 and 365 IPC — Compromise between the parties — Maintaining the conviction of appellants under the said sections, sentence reduced to the period already undergone — Sentence of fine and imprisonment in default of payment of fine not interfered with — Out of the fine paid, Rs 25,000 directed to be paid to each of the two injured persons — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 323/343/355 and 365 — Reduction of sentence due to compromise between the parties. Murugesan v. Ganapathy Velar, (2001) 10 SCC 504.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and R.C. Lahoti and Brijesh Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-11-2000]

[3484] — Ss. 320 and 482 — Quashing of criminal proceedings — Abuse of process of law — Parties entering into compromise and complainant not interested in continuing the proceedings — But alleged offence under S. 498-A IPC not liable to compromise — Having regard to peculiar facts and circumstances of the case, held, continuation of the proceedings would amount to abuse of process of law — Hence proceedings liable to be quashed under Art. 142 — Constitution of India, Art. 142

Criminal complaints were filed by Respondent 2 wife against the appellants viz. her husband, father-in-law and mother-in-law as a counterblast to divorce petition filed by the appellant husband. Subsequently, decree of divorce by mutual consent was granted by the Civil Judge. But the appellants were convicted under Section 498-A IPC and sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment and fine of Rs 100 each with default stipulation. During pendency of appeal thereagainst, the parties sorted out their differences and filed petitions for compromise in the criminal proceedings. The appellate court rejected the compromise on the ground that offence under Section 498-A IPC could not be compromised. The appellants filed petitions under Section 482 CrPC for quashing the criminal proceedings but the High Court declined to interfere. In the appeal before the Supreme Court, Respondent 2 submitted that she was not interested in prosecuting the appellants.

Disposing of the appeal,

Held :

Having regard to the facts that the parties belonged to cultured families, parents of the appellant husband were suffering from multiple ailments because of advanced age, parties have compromised and Respondent 2 was not interested in prosecuting the appellants, and even otherwise also, in the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case and in the interest of justice, continuation of criminal proceedings would be an abuse of the process of law. Therefore, in exercise of Supreme Court's power under Article 142, it is deemed proper to quash the criminal proceedings pending against the appellants emanating from FIR lodged under Section 498-A IPC. (Paras 9 and 10). Arvind Barsaul (Dr.) v. State of M.P., (2008) 5 SCC 794: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 88: (2008) 66 AIC 1 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Tarun Chatterjee and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-5-2008]

[3485] — Ss. 320(1), (2) & (8) — Compounding of offences — Accused charged under Ss. 325 and 323 r/w S. 34 IPC — Causing simple hurt falling under S. 323 IPC compoundable at the instance of person hurt — Causing grievous hurt under S. 325 IPC compoundable with permission of court — Compromise deed stating that parties were neighbours, their houses adjacent to each other, and that they were living peacefully for last many years and there was no dispute between them; hence to continue sweet relationship and harmony, the complainant side does not want to take any action against the accused — In view of same necessary permission to compound offence granted and consequently accused acquitted — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 325 and 323 — Compounding of offences under (Paras 3, 10, 12, 13 and 15). Khursheed v. State of U.P., (2007) 12 SCC 68: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 218: (2007) 6 All LJ 625: (2007) 59 AIC 265 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-2007]

[3486] — Ss. 320(1), Table and 320(8) — Compounding of offences — Voluntarily causing hurt by dangerous weapons or means (Penal Code, 1860 — S. 324) — Offence committed on 15-6-1995 i.e. prior to the date (23-6-2006) when offence made non-compoundable — Offence allowed to compounded and held, appellants entitled to acquittal under S. 320(8) — Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Act, 2005 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 324 (Paras 16 to 19). Mohd. Abdul Sufan Laskar v. State of Assam, (2008) 9 SCC 333: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 770: (2008) 70 AIC 129 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-2008]

Vinay Devanna Nayak v. Ryot Sewa Sahakari Bank Ltd., (2008) 2 SCC 305: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 351, relied on

— S. 320(2) See also Ss. 320(1), (2) & (8)

[3487] — S. 320(2) — Offence under S. 325 IPC allowed to be compounded on the basis of affidavit of the injured person in that regard — But conviction and sentence under Ss. 120 and 121, Indian Railways Act, 1890 (9 of 1890) maintained — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 325. Abdul Sattar v. State of M.P., (1981) 3 SCC 73: 1981 SCC (Cri) 633: AIR 1981 SC 1775 (2): 1981 Cri LJ 1705(1).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.D. Koshal and E.S. Venkataramiah, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-3-1981]

[3488] — S. 320(2) — Offence committed by appellant under S. 324, IPC allowed to be compounded, having regard to his amicable settlement of dispute with the victims and desire of the parties to maintain good relations between them. Shakil Ahmed v. State of U. P., 1988 Supp SCC 438: 1988 SCC (Cri) 863.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-9-1987]

[3489] — S. 320(2) — Offence under S. 324 IPC allowed to be compounded subject to payment of Rs 1000 each to the victims as compensation in view of the fact that parties were neighbours and wanted to bear good relations and maintain peace. Nazidalishah v. State of M.P., 1988 Supp SCC 427: 1988 SCC (Cri) 853.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-12-1987]

[3490] — S. 320(2) — Offence under S. 325 IPC allowed to be compounded all the more since the incident occurred between neighbours some 16 years back. Ganga Prasad v. State of U.P., (1987) 2 SCC 232: 1987 SCC (Cri) 345.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and M.M. Dutt, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-1-1987]

[3491] — Ss. 320(2) and (5) — Offence under Ss. 324 r/w 325, IPC committed by accused-appellants allowed to be compounded. Fahimuddin v. State of U.P., (1982) 2 SCC 174 (2): 1982 SCC (Cri) 378(2): AIR 1981 SC 2008(3).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria and E.S. Venkataramiah, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-1-1981]

[3492] — Ss. 320(2) [prior to coming into force of CrPC (Amendment) Act, 2005 w.e.f. 23-6- 2006] and (8) — Amendment not applicable to offences committed prior to 23-6-2006 — Offence under S. 324 IPC, committed on 23-7-1986 i.e. prior to coming into effect of Amendment Act, 2005, held, compoundable with permission of court — Penal Code, 1860, S. 324 — Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Act, 2005, S. 28(a) (Paras 5 to 7). Hirabhai Jhaverbhai v. State of Gujarat, (2010) 6 SCC 688.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : J.M. Panchal and S.S. Nijjar, JJ. [Date of decision : 9-4-2010]

[3493] — Ss. 320(2) & (8) and 386 — Permission to compound offence of S. 325, Indian Penal Code granted by Supreme Court under S. 320(2), Criminal Procedure Code resulting in acquittal of the accused for that offence in view of S. 320(8), Criminal Procedure Code — Offence under S. 452, IPC being non- compoundable, conviction under that provision maintained but sentence reduced to the period already undergone. Rajinder Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), 1980 Supp SCC 337: 1981 SCC (Cri) 277: AIR 1980 SC 1200.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N.L. Untwalia and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-5-1980]

[3494] — Ss. 320(4)(a), 330(2), 335(1)(b) and 339 — Writ petition by third party as 'next friend' on ground that the person aggrieved was under a disability — Writ petition challenging conviction and sentence of death awarded to two assassinators of Gen. Vaidya by Designated Court and confirmed by Supreme Court — Held, writ petition filed by a third party as a next friend, instead of the convicts themselves, not maintainable. Karamjeet Singh v. Union of India, (1992) 4 SCC 666: 1993 SCC (Cri) 17: AIR 1993 SC 284.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-10-1992]

[3495] — Ss. 320(4)(a), 330(2) r/w Ss. 335(1)(b) and 339 — Minority or insanity as grounds to waive usual rule for locus standi — PIL — Locus standi/Standing — Standing of third party to challenge the sentence and conviction (in this case the pending death sentence) — Legal disability sufficient to permit relaxation of the general rule granting standing only to the aggrieved party — Whether a mere obsession based on religious belief or any other personal philosophy can be regarded as such a disability — Seriousness of consequences that may ensue from relaxation of the rule — Constitution of India, Arts. 32 and 21

This petition under Article 32 of the Constitution was filed purportedly in public interest. The prayer in the writ petition was to the effect that the death sentence imposed on one D by the Sessions Court, affirmed by the Calcutta High Court and the Supreme Court, needed to be converted to a life sentence because there had been no execution of the death sentence for a long time.

According to the petitioner, he saw a news item on a TV channel wherein it was shown that the authorities were unaware of the non-execution of the death sentence and, therefore, the condemned prisoner, the accused, had suffered a great degree of mental torture and that itself was a ground for conversion of his death sentence to a life sentence on the basis of the ratio in Triveniben case, (1989) 1 SCC 678. It was noted that the prayer for conversion of death sentence to life sentence had already been turned down by the Governor of West Bengal and the President of India in February 1994 and June 1994 respectively.

Dismissing the petition,

Held :

Ordinarily, only the aggrieved party has the right to seek redress under Article 32. Unless the aggrieved party is a minor or insane or one who is suffering from any other disability which the law recognizes as sufficient to permit another person e.g. next friend, to move the court on his behalf, for example, see Sections 320(4)(a), 330(2) read with Sections 335(1)(b) and 339 CrPC, a third party would not be permitted to initiate proceedings under Article 32. (Para 30)

A mere obsession based on religious belief or any other personal philosophy cannot be regarded as a legal disability of the type recognized by the Code of 1973 or any other law, which would permit initiation of proceedings under Article 32 by a third party, be he a friend. It must be remembered that the repercussions of permitting such a third party to challenge the findings of the court can be serious e.g. any co-accused who may have been acquitted and whose acquittal may have been confirmed would run the risk of a fresh trial and a possible conviction. (Paras 30, 31, 33 and 34)

Neither under the provisions of the Code of 1973 nor under any other statute is a third-party stranger permitted to question the correctness of the conviction and sentence. It has not been shown as to how and in what manner the accused condemned prisoner is handicapped in not seeking relief, if any, as available in law. (Paras 34, 35 and 17). Ashok Kumar Pandey v. State of W.B., (2004) 3 SCC 349: AIR 2004 SC 280.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-11-2003]

— S. 320(5) See also Ss. 320(2) and (5)

[3496] — S. 320(5) — Compounding of offence under S. 500 IPC — Defamation — Compromise reached between parties and offence allowed to be compounded — Directions passed as to the payment of the settlement money. K. Kandasamy v. K.P.M.V.P. Chandrasekaran, (2005) 4 SCC 349: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1024: AIR 2005 SC 2485: 2005 Cri LJ 2597.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Singh and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-4-2005]

— S. 320(8) See Ss. 320(1), (2) & (8)
See also Ss. 320(1), Table and 320(8)

[3497] — S. 320(9) — Compounding of non-compoundable offence — Non- compoundable offences falling outside the two tables in S. 320 — Held, cannot be compounded even with the permission of the court — Conviction of first appellant for offence under S. 326 IPC which is non-compoundable — Considering the facts that the parties have come to a settlement and the accused has already undergone a period of imprisonment of about six months his sentence reduced to the period already undergone — Second appellant who was convicted under S. 324 IPC permitted to compound the offence

Section 320 which deals with "compounding of offences" provides two Tables therein, one containing descriptions of offences which can be compounded by the person mentioned in it, and the other containing descriptions of offences which can be compounded with the permission of the court by the persons indicated therein. Only such offences as are included in the said two Tables can be compounded and none else. Sub-section (9) of Section 320 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 imposes a legislative ban on compounding except as provided in the section. Ram Lal v. State of J&K, (1999) 2 SCC 213: 1999 SCC (Cri) 123: AIR 1999 SC 895: 1999 Cri LJ 1342.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-1-1999]

Y. Suresh Babu v. State of A.P., JT (1987) 2 SC 361; Mahesh Chand v. State of Rajasthan, 1990 Supp SCC 681: 1991 SCC (Cri) 159, held, per incuriam

[3498] — S. 320(9) — Compounding of non-compoundable offence — Not permissible — Offence under S. 326 IPC — Considering the fact that parties have settled their dispute and 10 years have elapsed from the date of the incident and further fact that the appellants have already undergone 3 months' imprisonment, sentence reduced to the period already undergone with fine of Rs 5000 on each accused. Surendra Nath Mohanty v. State of Orissa, (1999) 5 SCC 238: 1999 SCC (Cri) 998: AIR 1999 SC 2181: 1999 Cri LJ 3496.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, M.B. Shah and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-5-1999]

Ram Lal v. State of J&K, (1999) 2 SCC 213: 1999 SCC (Cri) 123, followed

Ram Pujan v. State of U.P., (1973) 2 SCC 456: 1973 SCC (Cri) 870; Mahesh Chand v. State of Rajasthan, 1990 Supp SCC 681: 1991 SCC (Cri) 159, overruled

Y. Suresh Babu v. State of A.P., JT (1987) 2 SC 361, held per incuriam

See also Bankat v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 1 SCC 343*

[3499] — S. 320(9) — Compounding of offence — Offence under S. 326 IPC, held, not compoundable — High Court rightly refused to grant permission to compound the same — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 326

Sub-section (9) of Section 320 specifically provides that "no offence shall be compounded except as provided by this section". In view of the aforesaid legislative mandate, only the offences which are covered by Table 1 or Table 2 provided under Section 320 can be compounded and the rest of the offences punishable under IPC cannot be compounded. (Para 11). Bankat v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 1 SCC 343: 2005 SCC (Cri) 316: AIR 2005 SC 368: 2005 Cri LJ 646: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 707.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-11-2004]

Ram Lal v. State of J&K, (1999) 2 SCC 213: 1999 SCC (Cri) 123; Surendra Nath Mohanty v. State of Orissa, (1999) 5 SCC 238: 1999 SCC (Cri) 998, followed

Mahesh Chand v. State of Rajasthan, 1990 Supp SCC 681: 1991 SCC (Cri) 159; Y. Suresh Babu v. State of A.P., (2005) 1 SCC 347, held, per incuriam

Ram Pujan v. State of U.P., (1973) 2 SCC 456: 1973 SCC (Cri) 870, distinguished

Distinguished in Dhananjay v. State of Bihar, (2007) 14 SCC 768*

[3500] — S. 320(9) — Compounding of offence under Acts other than IPC — Complaint under — Compromise — Relief — Complaint for dishonour of cheque culminating in sentence of six months' simple imprisonment — Thereafter, parties reaching a compromise and the convict paying a certain amount in full and final settlement to the complainant who receiving the same — Receipt filed before Supreme Court and complainant raising no objection to dismissal of the complaint or modification of the sentence — In such circumstances, Supreme Court commuting the sentence of six months' imprisonment to one of a fine of Rs 1000 — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — S. 138 (Paras 4 and 3). Sivasankaran v. State of Kerala, (2002) 8 SCC 164: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1872.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: B.N. Kirpal, C.J. and K.G. Balakrishnan and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-2002]

[3501] — S. 320(9) — Applicability of principles of administrative law to criminal jurisprudence — Power conferred by criminal law should not be absolute, unfettered and uncanalised

Per Bhagwati, C.J.

The entire development of administrative law is characterised by a consistent series of decisions controlling and structuring the discretion conferred on the State and its officers. The law always frowns on uncanalised and unfettered discretion conferred on any instrumentality of the State and it is the glory of administrative law that such discretion has been through judicial decisions structured and regulated. This Court has therefore, despite fluctuating opinions delivered in different cases, laid down the broad principle and consistently acted upon it, namely, that the power to apply for withdrawal from the prosecution can be exercised only in furtherance of justice. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

— S. 321 See also S. 494, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1268 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 321 See Ss. 24, 25 and 321
See also Ss. 24, 225 and 321
See also Ss. 24 and 321
See also Ss. 307 and 321
See also Ss. 320 and 321
See also Ss. 397, 401 and 321
See also Ss. 452, 457 and 321
See also Ss. 482 and 321

[3502] — S. 321 — Misappropriation of public funds by appellant (an MLA) — State trying to protect appellant from being prosecuted under Ss. 420, 463, 468 and 471 r/w S. 120-B IPC, by issuing consecutive G.Os. and tampering with course of justice by getting filed consecutive petitions to withdraw prosecution under S. 321 CrPC — Impropriety — Respondents 3 and 4 herein levelling charges of misappropriation of public funds against appellant on premise that he obtained huge amount on basis of false and fabricated medical bills — Appellant, being an MLA, matter referred to Ethics Committee of State Legislature, which accepted apology tendered by him and having regard to the fact that amount was refunded by him to Government, recommended for withdrawal of the criminal case — State issuing G.O. for directions to Public Prosecutor to withdraw case — Application filed under S. 321 CrPC by Public Prosecutor for withdrawal of case, rejected — Revisions filed thereagainst by State and appellant, dismissed, while writ of Respondents 3 and 4 allowed by High Court — Sustainability — Held, Ethics Committee was empowered to deal with disciplinary action — So criminal case against an MLA, ordinarily, should be allowed to be continued on its own merit — Action of State on basis of recommendations of Ethics Committee, vitiated in law — Recommendations being unauthorised, action of State would attract doctrine of malice in law — Even otherwise, action of State suffers from malice on fact as well — State being protector of law, when it deals with a public fund, it must act in terms of procedure established by law — In respect of public fund, doctrine of public trust would also be applicable so far as State and its officers are concerned — Herein, State was not acting in public interest — It showed unusual interest in appellant, which is not expected of an executive which believes in good governance — Therefore, impugned judgment, held, unassailable — However, clarified that High Court committed error in entering into merit of the matter — In the circumstances, Magistrate directed to proceed with the matter independently — Also, in the peculiar facts and circumstances of instant case, State directed to pay Rs 1,00,000 to State Legal Services Authority — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420, 463, 468 and 471 r/w S. 120-B — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13

Dismissing the appeals,

Held :

The Ethics Committee of the legislature of the State was empowered to deal with the disciplinary action or otherwise which may be taken against the Members of the Legislative Assembly. A criminal case against a Member of the Legislative Assembly, ordinarily, should be allowed to be continued on its own merit, particularly, in the light of the facts of the present matter wherein the High Court had refused to interfere at the earlier stages of the proceedings. The High Court, in fact, had not only been monitoring the investigation, but also directed the trial court to complete the trial within a period of three months. The action on the part of the State to issue the said government order despite the earlier orders of the High Court must be considered keeping in view the said factual matrix. (Para 15)

The government order was issued even according to the State in terms of the recommendations made by the Ethics Committee alone. The Ethics Committee had no jurisdiction to make such recommendations. If the State had acted on the basis of recommendations made by a body who had no role to play, its action would be vitiated in law. The recommendations of the Ethics Committee being unauthorised, the action of the State would attract the doctrine of malice in law. (Para 18)

Even otherwise, the action on the part of the State suffers from malice on fact as well. The State is the protector of law. When it deals with a public fund, it must act in terms of the procedure established by law. In respect of public fund, the doctrine of public trust would also be applicable so far as the State and its officers are concerned. It could not, save and except very strong and cogent reasons, have issued the said government order despite the orders of the High Court. (Para 19)

The State was not acting in public interest but in private interest. The State has shown unusual interest in the appellant which is not expected of an executive which believes in good governance. It is really a matter of great surprise that the State independently filed a revision application before the High Court. It did not stop at that. It has also filed a special leave petition before the Supreme Court against the judgment of the High Court. The Supreme Court has times without number noticed the unusual interest shown and unusual orders passed by the State Governments to protect its own Ministers and Members of Legislative Assembly. (Para 20)

Therefore, the impugned judgment is unassailable. However, there cannot be any doubt whatsoever that the High Court committed an error in entering into the merit of the matter. It is directed that the Magistrate shall proceed to deal with the matter independently. However, in the peculiar facts and circumstances of this case, the State is directed to pay a sum of Rs 1,00,000 to the State Legal Services Authority. (Paras 21 and 22). Yerneni Raja Ramchandar v. State of A.P., (2009) 15 SCC 604: (2009) 81 AIC 107 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-8-2009]

Govt. Branch Press v. D.B. Belliappa, (1979) 1 SCC 477: 1979 SCC (L&S) 39; M.P. State Coop. Dairy Federation Ltd. v. Rajnesh Kumar Jamindar, (2009) 15 SCC 221; Swaran Singh Chand v. Punjab SEB, (2009) 13 SCC 758; Epuru Sudhakar v. Govt. of A.P., (2006) 8 SCC 161: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 438; M.P. Special Police Establishment v. State of M.P., (2004) 8 SCC 788: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1; Vijaykumar Baldev Mishra v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 12 SCC 687: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 362, relied on

[3503] — S. 321 — Permission to withdraw from prosecution — When should not be refused — CrPC, 1898 — S. 494

As a part of an overall settlement between the Central Government and the employees of the P & T Department, the State Government took a policy decision that in all cases which did not involve acts of serious personal violence or material destruction of State property, the prosecutions against the employees of the P & T Department who went on one day's token strike should be withdrawn. The applications under S. 494, CrPC, 1898 moved by the Public Prosecutor in accordance therewith were allowed by the Magistrates and the respondent-employees were acquitted. But the High Court set aside the orders of acquittal. Allowing the appeals Supreme Court,

Held :

It would certainly not subserve the interests of justice to direct retrial of the respondents despite the settlement arrived at, after a lapse of nearly 18 years. Such a course would give rise to unnecessary industrial unrest for no reason whatever.

The Public Prosecutor may withdraw from the prosecution of a case not merely on the ground of paucity of evidence but also in order to further the broad ends of public justice which may include appropriate social, economic and political purposes. The ultimate guiding consideration while granting a permission to withdraw from the prosecution must always be the interest of administration of justice. The court must satisfy itself that the executive function of the Public Prosecutor has not been improperly exercised or that it is not an attempt to interfere with the normal course of justice for illegitimate reasons or purposes. State of Punjab v. Union of India, (1986) 4 SCC 335: 1986 SCC (Cri) 441: AIR 1987 SC 188.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-9-1986]

[3504] — S. 321 — Discretion of court in granting consent for withdrawal from prosecution — Nature of — How to be exercised

Per Khalid and Natarajan, JJ.

Having regard to the provisions of Ss. 493 and 333 of the old Code, the difference in scheme between Ss. 203, 227, 254, 257 and 258 and S. 321 of the new Code and taking colour from the immediately proceeding S. 320, it is clear that the court while granting or refusing consent under S. 321 performs supervisory and not adjudicatory function. It is not necessary for the court to assess the evidence to discover whether the case would end in conviction or acquittal. The acquittal or discharge orders under S. 321 are not the same as the normal final orders in criminal cases. The conclusion will not be backed by a detailed discussion of the evidence in the case of acquittal or absence of prima facie case or groundlessness in the case of discharge. All that the court has to see is whether the application is made in good faith, in the interest of public policy and justice and not to thwart or stifle the process of law. The court, after considering these facets of the case, will have to see whether the application suffers from such improprieties or illegalities as to cause manifest injustice if consent is given. The section should not be construed to mean that the court has to give a detailed reasoned order when it gives consent. If on a reading of the order giving consent, a higher court is satisfied that such consent was given on an overall consideration of the materials available, the order giving consent has necessarily to be upheld.

Per Venkataramiah, J.

I respectfully agree with the legal position flowing from S. 321 as explained in Rajender Kumar Jain case [(1980) 3 SCC 435].

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J. (minority view)

The function which the court exercises in arriving at its decision as to whether to grant consent to withdrawal from prosecution or not, is a judicial function. The Court has to exercise its judicial discretion with reference to such material as is then available to it and has to satisfy itself not only that the grounds are germane or relevant to the advancement of public justice but also whether the grounds in fact are satisfactorily established. The ultimate test which must be applied by the court in order to determine the validity of the grounds in a particular case is that the requirement of public justice outweighs the legal justice of that case so that withdrawal from the prosecution could be permitted in the large interest of public justice. It is however, not possible to provide an exclusive definition of what may be regarded as falling within the imperative of public justice nor is it possible to place the concept of public justice in a strait-jacket formula. Some of those grounds which bring the case within the rubric of public justice have already been indicated.

The discretion has not to be exercised by the court mechanically and the consent applied for has not to be granted as a matter of formality or for the mere asking. The court must not accept the ipse dixit of the Public Prosecutor and content itself by merely examining whether the Public Prosecutor has applied an independent mind. The same considerations which are applicable while determining what are the legitimate grounds on which an application may be made by the Public Prosecutor for withdrawal from the prosecution must also apply in guiding the court as to whether consent for withdrawal of the prosecution should be granted or not. Every case must depend on its peculiar facts and circumstances. The paramount consideration must be the requirement of public justice. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[3505] — S. 321 — Nature and scope of, discussed

Per Dalveer Bhandari, J. (concurring)

While Section 321 CrPC itself does not apply to POTA, the principle of judicial review embodied therein does. In other words, Section 321 CrPC is a codified version of judicial review. At the trial court level, Section 321 CrPC ensures that the judiciary makes the final decision by approving the Public Prosecutor's decision to withdraw a case. Even if Section 321 CrPC is made inapplicable by a special law like POTA (Repeal), 2004 or POTA, 2002, judicial review still applies. Section 321 CrPC is a general provision that can be subjected to special laws. (Paras 65 and 63). Mahmadhusen Abdulrahim Kalota Shaikh (2) v. Union of India, (2009) 2 SCC 1.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J.[1] and R.V. Raveendran[1] and Dalveer Bhandari[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 21-10-2008]

[3506] — S. 321 — Grounds for seeking court's consent for withdrawal from prosecution

Per Khalid and Natarajan, JJ.

Section 321 clothes the Public Prosecutor to withdrawal from the prosecution of any person, accused of an offence both when no evidence is taken or even if entire evidence has been taken. The outer limit for the exercise of this power is "at any time before the judgment is pronounced".

The section gives no indication as to the grounds on which the Public Prosecutor may make the application, or the considerations on which the court is to grant its consent.

Since S. 321 does not give any guidelines regarding the grounds on which a withdrawal application can be made, such guidelines have to be ascertained with reference to decided cases under this section as well as its predecessor S. 494.

In the judgments rendered by various High Courts, public policy, interests of the administration, inexpediency to proceed with the prosecution for reasons of State and paucity of evidence were considered good grounds for withdrawal in many cases and not good grounds for withdrawal in certain other cases depending upon the peculiar facts and circumstances of the cases in those decisions.

Ram Naresh Pandey case (AIR 1957 SC 389) is a landmark case which has laid down the law on the point with precision and certainty. In this decision the functions of the court and the Public Prosecutor have been correctly outlined. While discussing the role of the court, this Court observed:

"His discretion in such matters has necessarily to be exercised with reference to such material as is by then available and it is not a prima facie judicial determination of any specific issue. The Magistrate's functions in these matters are not only supplementary, at a higher level, to those of the executive but are intended to prevent abuse. Section 494 requiring the consent of the court for withdrawal by the Public Prosecutor is more in line with this scheme, than with the provisions of the Code relating to inquiries and trials by court. It cannot be taken to place on the court the responsibility for a prima facie determination of a triable issue. For instance the discharge that results therefrom need not always conform to the standard of "no prima facie case" under Ss. 209(1) and 253(1) or of 'groundlessness' under Ss. 209(2) and 253(2). This is not to say that a consent is to be lightly given on the application of the Public Prosecutor, without a careful and proper scrutiny of the grounds on which the application for consent is made."

This decision was approved by this Court in M.N. Sankarayarayanan Nair v. P.V. Balakrishnan, [(1972) 1 SCC 318: (1972) 2 SCR 599] as is seen at page 606: (SCC p. 324, para 7)

"In the State of Bihar v. Ram Naresh Pandey it was pointed out by this Court that though the section does not give any indication as to the ground on which the Public Prosecutor may make an application on the consideration of which the court is to grant its consent, it must nonetheless satisfy itself that the executive function of the Public Prosecutor has not been improperly exercised and that it is not an attempt to interfere with the normal course of justice for illegitimate reasons or purposes."

Per Vankataramiah, J.

There is no need to differ from the legal position expounded in Ram Naresh Pandey and Rajender Kumar Jain [(1980) 3 SCC 435] cases.

Chinnappa Reddy, J. has summarised the true legal position thus: (SCC p. 445, paras 14 and 15)

(1) Under the scheme of the Code prosecution of an offender for a serious offence is primarily the responsibility of the executive.

(2) The withdrawal from the prosecution is an executive function of the Public Prosecutor.

(3) The discretion to withdraw from the prosecution is that of the Public Prosecutor and none else, and so, he cannot surrender that discretion to someone else.

(4) The Government may suggest to the Public Prosecutor that he may withdraw from the prosecution but none can compel him to do so.

(5) The Public Prosecutor may withdraw from the prosecution not merely on the ground of paucity of evidence but on other relevant grounds as well in order to further the broad ends of public justice, public order and peace. The broad ends of public justice will certainly include appropriate social, economic and, we add political purposes sans Tammary Hall enterprises.

(6) The Public Prosecutor is an officer of the court and responsible to the court.

(7) The court performs a supervisory function in granting its consent to the withdrawal.

(8) The court's duty is not to reappreciate the grounds which led the Public Prosecutor to request withdrawal from the prosecution but to consider whether the Public Prosecutor applied his mind as a free agent, uninfluenced by irrelevant and extraneous considerations. The court has a special duty in this regard as it is the ultimate repository of legislative confidence in granting or withholding its consent to withdrawal from the prosecution.

We may add it shall be the duty of the Public Prosecutor to inform the court and it shall be the duty of the court to apprise itself of the reasons which prompt the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from the prosecution. The court has a responsibility and a stake in the administration of criminal justice and so has the Public Prosecutor, its 'Minister of Justice'. Both have a duty to protect the administration of criminal justice against possible abuse or misuse by the executive by resort to the provisions of S. 321, Criminal Procedure Code. The independence of the judiciary requires that once the case has travelled to the court, the court and its officers alone must have control over the case and decide what is to be done in each case.

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J.

The paramount consideration must always be the interest of administration of justice. That is the touchstone on which the question must be determined whether an application for withdrawal of the prosecution can be sustained. Supreme Court tried to formulate several instances where the cause of public justice would be served better by withdrawal from the prosecution. It was observed by Supreme Court in M.N. Sankarayarayanan v. P.V. Balakrishnan that an application for withdrawal from the prosecution may be made on the ground that (SCC p. 332, para 5) " it will not be possible to produce sufficient evidence to sustain the charge or that subsequent information before prosecuting agency would falsify the prosecution evidence or any other similar circumstance which it is difficult to predicate as they are dependent entirely on the facts and circumstances of each case". The Court also pointed out in State of Orissa v. C. Mohapatra [(1976) 4 SCC 250] that (SCC p. 253, para 6) "it is not sufficient for the Public Prosecutor merely to say that it is not expedient to proceed with the prosecution. He has to make out some ground which would show that the prosecution is sought to be withdrawn because inter alia the prosecution may not be able to produce sufficient evidence to sustain the charge or that the prosecution does not appear to be well founded or that there are other circumstances which clearly show that the object of administration of justice would not be advanced or furthered by going on with the prosecution". It was also emphasised by the Court in Subhash Chandra v. State that justice cannot be allowed to be scuttled by the Public Prosecutor or the State "because of hubris, affection or other noble or ignoble considerations". (SCC pp. 158-59, para 4). The Court also observed in Rajender Kumar Jain v. State: (SCC pp. 445-56, para 16)

"In the past, we have often known how expedient and necessary it is in the public interest for the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from prosecutions arising out of mass agitations, communal riots, regional disputes, industrial conflicts, student unrest etc. Wherever issues involve the emotions and there is a surcharge of violence in the atmosphere it has often been found necessary to withdraw from prosecutions in order to restore peace, to free the atmosphere from the surcharge of violence, to bring about a peaceful settlement of issues and to preserve the calm which may follow the storm. To persist with prosecutions where emotive issues are involved in the name of vindicating the law may even be utterly counter-productive. An elected government, sensitive and responsive to the feelings and emotions of the people, will be amply justified if for the purpose of creating an atmosphere of goodwill or for the purpose of not disturbing a calm which has descended it decides not to prosecute the offenders involved or not to proceed further with prosecution already launched."

It will thus be seen that the Public Prosecutor cannot maintain an application for withdrawal from the prosecution on the ground that the government does not want to produce evidence and proceed with the prosecution against the accused or that the government considers that it is not expedient to proceed with the prosecution. The Public Prosecutor has to make out some ground which would advance or further the cause of public justice. If the Public Prosecutor is able to show that he may not be able to produce sufficient evidence to sustain the charge, an application for withdrawal from the prosecution may be legitimately made by him.

Ultimately every offence has a social or economic cause behind it and if the State feels that the elimination or eradication of the social or economic cause of the crime would be better served by not proceeding with the prosecution, the State should clearly be at liberty to withdraw from the prosecution. There may be broader considerations of public peace, large considerations of public justice and even deeper considerations of promotion of long lasting security in a locality, of order in a disorderly situation or harmony in a factitious milieu which may legitimately persuade the State to "sacrifice a pending case for a wider benefit". The imperative of public justice may in such cases transcend and overflow the legal justice of a particular litigation. These are broadly the considerations which can be brought under the rubric of public justice so as to justify an application for withdrawal from prosecution. But, in this area no hard and fast rule can be laid down nor can any categories of cases be defined in which an application for withdrawal of the prosecution could legitimately be made. It must ultimately depend on the facts and circumstances of each case in the light of what is necessary in order to promote the ends of justice. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

State of Bihar v. Ram Naresh Pandey, 1957 SCR 279, AIR 1957 SC 389: 1957 Cri LJ 567, affirmed

[3507] — S. 321 — Grounds for withdrawal under — Political offence is only one of the grounds — No distinction between political and common law offences can be made by trial court while according or refusing consent

Per Baharul Islam, J.

The object of S. 321, CrPC appears to be to reserve power to the Executive Government to withdraw any criminal case on larger grounds of public policy such as inexpediency of prosecutions for reasons of State; broader public interest like maintenance of law and order; maintenance of public peace and harmony, social economic and political; changed social and political situation; avoidance of destabilization of a stable government and the like. And such powers have been rightly reserved for the Government; for, the Government is in the know of such conditions and situations prevailing in a State or in the country. The Court is not in a position to know such situations.

Section 321 has not dichotomised into common law offences and political offences. Offences relating to security of State cannot be said to be less serious corruption. Therefore, the view that the common law offences cannot be permitted to be withdrawn from the prosecution while the political offences can be so withdrawn is not acceptable.

Per Misra, J. (concurring)

Withdrawal from prosecution cannot be said to be permissible only in political offences and not in common law offences. Section 321 is not confined only to political offences or social offences, but it applies to all kinds of offences and the application for withdrawal can be made by the Public Prosecutor on various grounds, in order to further broad on aims of justice, public order and peace. Broad aims of public justice will certainly include appropriate social, economic and political purposes. The only guiding factor which should weigh with the Public Prosecutor while moving the application for withdrawal and the court according its permission for withdrawal is to see whether the interest of public justice is advanced and the application for withdrawal is not moved with oblique motive unconnected with the vindication of cause of public justice.

To say that unless the crime allegedly committed are per se political offences or are motivated by political ambition or consideration or are committed during mass agitation, communal frenzies, regional disputes, no question of serving a broader cause of public justice, public order or peace can arise is to put limitation on the broad terms of S. 321 of the Code.

The Public Prosecutor was of the view that as a result of election there was a change in the situation inasmuch as respondent 2's party received the people's mandate and voted to power and respondent 2 had become the Chief Minister of the State and that the prosecution against the head of the State would have had adverse effect on public interest, including public order and peace and, therefore, he thought it inexpedient for reasons of State and public policy to proceed with the case. It is the Public Prosecutor who has been given the exclusive power to apply for withdrawal and if he in his discretion thinks that it would be inexpedient to proceed with the case the court cannot reconsider the matter afresh and come to its own conclusion different from the one taken by the Public Prosecutor unless the court comes to a conclusion that the Public Prosecutor has done so with an improper or oblique motive.

Per Tulzapurkar, J. (dissenting)

There is as such no dichotomy between political offences or the like on the one hand and common law crimes on the other for purposes of S. 321. But unless the crimes in question are per se political offences like sedition or are motivated by political considerations or are committed during or are followed by mass agitations, communal frenzies, regional disputes, industrial conflicts, student unrest or the like situations involving emotive issues giving rise to an atmosphere surcharged with violence, no question of serving any broader cause of public justice, public order or peace would arise and in the absence thereof the public interest of administering criminal justice in a given case cannot be permitted to be sacrificed, particularly when a highly placed person is allegedly involved in the crime, as otherwise the common man's faith in a the rule of law and democratic values would be shattered. In case of conflict between the broader cause of public justice, public order and peace and the public interest of administering criminal justice in a particular litigation the narrower public interest should yield to the broader public interest, and therefore, an onerous duty is cast upon the court to weigh and decide which public interest should prevail in each case while granting or refusing to grant its consent to the withdrawal from the prosecution.

Victory at the elections by an accused has no relevance to the prosecution of common law crimes such as bribery and forgery especially when such offences were not actuated by any political motivation nor had been committed in or followed by any explosive situation involving an emotive issue. Election victory cannot be construed as condonation or compounding of common law offences by the people. The argument that the accused is now well placed in government and his prosecution would destabilise the government is misplaced. On the other hand non-prosecution of such a person is bound to affect the common man's faith in the rule of law and administration of justice. In the present case no political or personal vendetta is involved. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1983) 1 SCC 438: 1983 SCC (Cri) 224: AIR 1983 SC 194: 1983 Cri LJ 348.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar[1], Baharul Islam[2] and R.B. Misra[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1982]

[3508] — S. 321 — Political vendetta in opposing grant of consent for withdrawal of prosecution — Whether an independent ground for not interfering with the consent to withdraw — What if such consent otherwise unjustified and illegal

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J.

Even if such political vendetta is proved, a criminal prosecution, if otherwise justifiable and based upon adequate evidence, does not become vitiated on account of mala fides or political vendetta of the first informant or the complainant. The same principle must apply where a person is opposing withdrawal of prosecution against an accused. His political motivation or vendetta cannot justify grant of consent for withdrawal if otherwise it is not legitimate or justified.

Per Khalid and Natarajan, JJ.

The appellant was admittedly a political rival of the accused. There was no love lost between them. It was at the instance of such a highly interested person that Supreme Court was called upon to direct retrial of the case, setting aside the consent given by the Special Judge. Viewed against this background, it would not advance either the interest of justice or public interest, on the unsatisfactory factual details of the case, to accept the appeal and direct retrial. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[3509] — S. 321 — Inadequacy of evidence as a ground for withdrawal from prosecution — On facts, whether a prima facie case existed on the basis of the evidence on record to vitiate the withdrawal

Per Baharul Islam, J.

Paucity of evidence is only one of the grounds of withdrawal and merely because there is a triable case the court cannot be said to have erred in according its consent to the withdrawal. The recognised grounds for withdrawal have been laid down in earlier cases.

Per Misra, J.

It is not the function of the court to make a fresh appraisal of the evidence and come to its own conclusion on the question whether there is a triable issue to be investigated by the Court.

The ground of lack of prospect of a successful prosecution in the light of evidence, stated in the application for withdrawal from the case is sustainable on the facts of the case as it is clear from the material on record that a prima facie case under S. 5(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act and of forgery under S. 466, IPC are not made out.

Per Tulzapurkar, J. (dissenting)

When paucity of evidence or lack of prospect of successful prosecution is the ground for withdrawal, Supreme Court must of necessity examine the material on record in order to determine the validity or propriety of the ground adduced. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1983) 1 SCC 438: 1983 SCC (Cri) 224: AIR 1983 SC 194: 1983 Cri LJ 348.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar[1], Baharul Islam[2] and R.B. Misra[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1982]

[3510] — S. 321 — Ingredients of

Per Khalid, J.

Section 321 needs three requisites to make an order under it valid ; (1) The application should be filed by a Public Prosecutor or Assistant Public Prosecutor who is competent to make an application for withdrawal, (2) He must be in charge of the case, (3) The application should get the consent of the court before which the case is pending. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[3511] — S. 321 — Limits of power of Public Prosecutor under — Applicability of principles of administrative law in construing — Constitution of India, Article 14

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J.

While conferring power on the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from prosecution under S. 321, the legislature has followed the same scheme as underlies Ch. XII of the Code. The power is not absolute and unrestricted. It has to be a controlled and guided power or else it will fall foul of Art. 14. The power can be exercised only with the consent of the court so that the court can ensure that the power is not abused or misused or exercised in an arbitrary or fanciful manner. Once prosecution is launched its relentless course cannot be halted except on sound considerations germane to public justice and it is not left to the sweet will of the State or the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from the prosecution. Further, the Public Prosecutor can apply for withdrawal only on the basis of certain legitimate grounds which are germane or relevant to public justice. It is significant to note that the entire development of administrative law is characterised by a consistent series of decisions controlling and structuring the discretion conferred on the State and its officers. The law always frowns on uncanalised and unfettered discretion conferred on any instrumentality of the State and it is the glory of administrative law that such discretion has been through judicial decisions structured and regulated. Hence the grounds for withdrawal must be relatable to furtherance of public justice.

Per Khalid and Natarajan, JJ.

The discretion given to the Public Prosecutor by S. 321 is less plenary and is made subject to one limitation and that is the consent of the court before which the prosecution is pending.

Per Venkataramiah, J.

It is difficult to construe S. 321 in the light of the principles of administrative law. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[3512] — S. 321 — Only PP or APP is authorised to withdraw from the prosecution with the consent of the court — Withdrawal is justified only if based on pertinent considerations and actual application of mind by the PP or APP — District Magistrate or Minister has no authority to interfere is this matter — On facts, the withdrawal moved by the APP, held, justified

In the present case, there is no evidence to support the allegation of political influence. When deciding whether or not to withdraw from the prosecution, it was for the APP to consider whether the second investigation of the case on the executive side, which led to the discovery that the earlier investigation was motivated, was vitiated by the omission to question the first informant. Secondly the APP had applied his mind to the disclosures emerging from the second enquiry.

Therefore, on facts the courts below were justified in accepting the APP's move for withdrawal from the prosecution . Subhash Chander v. State (Chandigarh Admn.), (1980) 2 SCC 155: 1980 SCC (Cri) 376: AIR 1980 SC 423: 1980 Cri LJ 324: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 423.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and R.S. Pathak, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-11-1979]

[3513] — S. 321 — Permission to withdraw special leave petition, if sought without furnishing any reason or on the basis of frivolous reasons, held, liable to be refused by Court

That the case was not a fit one for granting special leave or that on a reconsideration of the matter Government decided to withdraw the special leave petition are not convincing reasons on the basis of which the Court can grant permission to withdraw the special leave petition. Was the State unaware of the nature and extent of the jurisdiction under Art. 136? Why did the Government reconsider the matter and what were the reasons which impelled the Government to change its mind? Were there any supervening circumstances? Did any fresh facts come to light? Did the Government move at the instance of somebody? Was any legal opinion taken? An affidavit should be filed in the Court explaining these circumstances.

In the present case it can be presumed that the grounds were prepared on instructions and with a sense of responsibility and legal advisers were consulted before the special leave petition was filed. If so, withdrawal of the special leave petition at this state, without stating why it is being withdrawn now, would be a waste of public time and money. State of A.P. v. P. Anjaneyulu, (1984) 2 SCC 445: 1984 SCC (Cri) 269: AIR 1982 SC 1598.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-11-1982]

[Ed.: See Jagannath Misra case, (1983) 1 SCC 438 on the question of scope of court's power in the matter of grant or refusal of application for withdrawal from prosecution filed under S. 321, Criminal Procedure Code and Supreme Court's power of interference under Art. 136.]

[3514] — S. 321 — Permitting public prosecutor to withdraw the case after committal to Court of Session and before filing of evidence, held, on facts, to be improper in the absence of any justification whatsoever — Criteria for withdrawal restated

A case under Ss. 147, 148, 302, 342 and 149 IPC was registered against five persons and case committed to the Court of Session and charges framed. The public prosecutor then presented an application for withdrawal of the case against two of the accused on the ground that the prosecution "does not want to produce evidence and continue the criminal proceedings" against those accused. The Additional Sessions Judge allowed the application for the mere asking. Revision application against the withdrawal was dismissed in limine by the High Court. Hence the appeal by special leave.

Held :

Under S. 321 the essential consideration which is implicit in the grant of the power is that it should be in the interest of administration of justice. (Para 4)

The request to grant permission under S. 494 should not be accepted "as a necessary formality", "for the mere asking", but the court must be satisfied "on the materials placed before it" that the grant of permission would serve the administration of justice and that permission was not being sought covertly with an ulterior purpose unconnected with the vindication of the law which the executive organs are in duty bound to further and maintain. (Para 4) . Bansi Lal v. Chandan Lal, (1976) 1 SCC 421: 1976 SCC (Cri) 39: AIR 1976 SC 370: 1976 Cri LJ 328.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud and A.C. Gupta, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-12-1975]

[3515] — S. 321 — Power under, held, not confined only to court empowered to discharge or acquit the accused but extends to committing court also — "Judgment" — Meaning of

The power to discharge or acquit the accused under S. 321 is itself a special power conferred on the court before whom a prosecution is pending and is to be exercised by the Court independently of its power of enquiry into the offence or to try the accused. It is, therefore, not proper to say that only the court competent to discharge or acquit the accused under some other provision of the Code can exercise the power under S. 321. The expression 'judgment' in the section may in the context be understood to mean the judgment which may be ultimately pronounced if the case were to be committed to a Court of Session. Moreover, it cannot be said that the Committing Magistrate has no judicial function to perform under the Code. Rajender Kumar Jain v. State, (1980) 3 SCC 435: 1980 SCC (Cri) 757: AIR 1980 SC 1510: 1980 Cri LJ 1084: (1980) 17 ACC 201.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-1980]

[3516] — S. 321 — Public Prosecutor — His role and autonomy — Whether should act solely on the advice of the Government — Whether can satisfy himself on the legitimacy of the grounds — Alternatives open to him pointed out

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J.

Previous decisions of the Supreme Court present a confused picture regarding the degree of autonomy enjoyed by the Public Prosecutor vis-à-vis the Government under S. 321. Hence the need to approach the question on first principles.

Prosecution of an alleged offender is primarily the responsibility of the State which through the investigating authorities files charge-sheet and initiates prosecution. Therefore, the Government has to take a decision to withdraw from the prosecution and communicate such direction to the Public Prosecutor. The Public Prosecutor would inter alia consider the grounds on which the Government has taken the decision to withdraw from the prosecution and if he is satisfied that those grounds are legitimate, he may file an application for withdrawal from the prosecution. If on the other hand he takes the view that the grounds which have been given by the Government are not legitimate he has two options available to him. He may inform the Government that in his opinion, the grounds which have weighed with the Government are not valid and that he should be relieved from the case and if this request of his is not granted, he may tender his resignation. Or else, he may make an application for withdrawal from the prosecution as directed by the Government and at the hearing of the application he may offer his considered view to the court that the application is not sustainable on the grounds set out by him and leave it to the court to reject the application. Therefore an application made by the Public Prosecutor at the behest of the Government is not necessarily vitiated.

The Public Prosecutor can of course come to his own independent decision that the prosecution should be withdrawn and if in that event he seeks the permission of the Government for withdrawal from the prosecution and the Government grants such permission to him and on the basis of such permission he applies for withdrawal the application cannot be said to be vitiated. There is no danger of abuse or misuse of power by the Government inherent in this process because there are two principal safeguards against any such abuse or misuse of power by the Government; one is that the application must be based on grounds which advance public justice and the other is that there can be no withdrawal without the consent of the court.

Per Venkataramiah, J.

There is no need to differ from the legal position expounded in Ram Naresh Pandey and Rajender

Kumar Jain cases. If any change in the law is needed, it is for Parliament to make necessary amendment to S. 321. It is significant that S. 321 is allowed to remain in the same form in 1973 Code even though in 1957 Supreme Court had construed S. 494 of the former Criminal Procedure Code as laid down in Ram Naresh Pandey case. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[Ed.: Khalid and Natarajan, JJ. have not directly touched this aspect, but they also seem to have placed reliance on the decision of Ram Naresh Pandey case.]

[3517] — S. 321 — Public Prosecutor's request is subject to judicial discretion of the Court before it accedes to the request — Nature and scope of trial court's power explained — On facts, the trial court exercised its power properly (Per majority: Tulzapurkar, J. contra)

Per Baharul Islam, J.

The exercise of the power to accord or withdraw consent by the court is discretionary which it has to exercise judicially. The power is judicial to the extent that the court, in according or refusing consent, has to see (i) whether the grounds of withdrawal are valid and (ii) whether the application is bona fide or is collusive. So the court cannot merely accede to the request to withdraw without applying its own mind to the case. The order passed by the court under S. 321 is not appealable.

Per Misra, J.

The function of the court under S. 321 is a limited one and intended only to prevent abuse. It is, however, a judicial function. It, therefore, becomes necessary for the court before whom the application for withdrawal is filed by the Public Prosecutor to apply its mind so that the appellate court may examine and be satisfied that the court has not accorded its consent as a matter of course but has applied its mind to the grounds taken in the application for withdrawal by Public Prosecutor.

The court's duty in dealing with the application under S. 321 is not to reappreciate the grounds which led the Public Prosecutor to request withdrawal from the prosecution but to consider whether the Public Prosecutor applied his mind as a free agent uninfluenced by irrelevant and extraneous or oblique considerations as the court has a special duty in this regard inasmuch as it is the ultimate repository of legislative confidence in granting or withholding its consent to withdrawal from prosecution.

The decision of the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from the case on the grounds given by him in his application for withdrawal cannot be said to be actuated by improper or oblique motive. He bona fide thought that in the changed circumstances of the case it would be inexpedient to proceed with the case and it would be sheer wastage of public money and time to drag on with the case if the chances for conviction are few and far between. In the circumstances instead of serving the public cause of justice it will be to the detriment of public interest.

Per Tulzapurkar, J.

The trial court's supervisory function of either granting or refusing to grant the permission is a judicial function. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1983) 1 SCC 438: 1983 SCC (Cri) 224: AIR 1983 SC 194: 1983 Cri LJ 348.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar[1], Baharul Islam[2] and R.B. Misra[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1982]

[3518] — S. 321 — Special Public Prosecutor seeking withdrawal of prosecution on ground of paucity of evidence — Special Judge declining to grant consent on ground that the Special Public Prosecutor had not applied his mind to the material in support of the prosecution as a free agent uninfluenced by irrelevant and extraneous considerations — Held, Special Judge applied the correct test — In the facts and circumstances of the case, High Court not justified in setting aside order of the Special Judge declining to give consent for withdrawal of prosecution — High Court had no power to refer to the administrative files of the State Govt. and place reliance on material not forming part of the record — Opinion of Public Prosecutor alone material and grounds stated by him open to review — Direction by High Court to consider withdrawal of prosecution against other accused for whom no proposal to withdraw the prosecution made also not sustainable. V.S. Achuthanandan v. R. Balakrishna Pillai, (1994) 4 SCC 299: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1185: AIR 1995 SC 436.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: J.S. Verma, B.P. Jeevan Reddy and S.P. Bharucha, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-1994]

[3519] — S. 321 — Whether the Public Prosecutor was justified, on facts, in applying for withdrawal — Whether consent granted by Magistrate to withdrawal from prosecution justified on facts — Facts that warrant case instituted on police report against the accused and that decision to withdraw from prosecution was taken in cabinet meeting headed by the accused himself— Whether relevant in deciding propriety of the consent granted by the Magistrate — Applicability of rule of nemo judex in causa sua ·

Per Khalid and Natarajan, JJ.

The consent was given by the Magistrate after consideration on various details. When the Magistrate states in his order that he has considered the materials, it is not proper for Supreme Court not to accept that statement. The proper thing to do is to hold that the Magistrate gave consent on objective consideration of the relevant aspects of the case. It would be acting against the mandate of S. 321 to find fault with the Magistrate in such cases, unless the order discloses that the Magistrate has failed to consider whether the application is made in good faith, in the interest of public policy and justice and not to thwart or stifle the process of law.

Per Venkataramiah, J.

The averments in the application of the Public Prosecutor under S. 321 in the present case were similar to the averments in the application made for withdrawal in Rajender Kumar Jain case [(1980) 3 SCC 435]. It is difficult to say that the Public Prosecutor had not applied his mind to the case or had conducted himself in an improper way. If in the light of the material before him the Public Prosecutor has taken the view that there was no prospect of securing a conviction of the accused it cannot be said that his view is an unreasonable one. No case has been made out in this case for interference. It is difficult to construe S. 321 in the light of the principles of administrative law.

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J. (minority view)

There are two very strong cogent reasons why consent to the withdrawal of the prosecution must be refused in this case:

(1) Chief Judicial Magistrate could have considered under S. 239 whether the material placed before him was sufficient to make out a prima facie case against the accused so that if the Chief Judicial Magistrate came to the conclusion on the basis of such material that the charge against the accused was groundless, he would be bound to discharge them for reasons to be recorded by him in writing. There is no reason why in these circumstances the Public Prosecutor should be allowed to withdraw from the prosecution under S. 321. The same exercise could be performed by the Chief Judicial Magistrate by acting under S. 239.

(2) The decision to withdraw from the prosecution was taken by the Cabinet at a meeting presided over by the accused himself. It may be that the Special Public Prosecutor did not implicitly obey the decision of the Cabinet and applied his independent mind to the question whether the prosecution should be withdrawn or not but even so, it would seriously undermine the confidence of the people in the administration of justice if a decision to withdraw the prosecution against him is taken by the accused himself and pursuant to this decision the Special Public Prosecutor, who was appointed by the State Government of which the accused was the Chief Minister, applies for withdrawal from the prosecution. Justice must not only be done but must also appear to be done.

It would be desirable in the interest of public justice that high political personages, accused of offences should face the judicial process and get discharged, rather than seem to manoeuvre the judicial system and thus endanger the legitimacy of the political as well as the judicial process. It is possible that in a particular case personal harassment or inconvenience may be caused by non-withdrawal of the prosecution, if the accused is really innocent and is ultimately liable to be discharged, but such harassment or inconvenience must be considered as an inevitable cost of public life, which the repositories of public power should have no hesitation to pay, as justice must not only be done but must also appear to be done. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[3520] — S. 321 — Withdrawal from prosecution — Scope of Public Prosecutor's executive discretion to act independently in the face of Government's instructions or suggestions for withdrawal from prosecution

Per Baharul Islam, J.

The settled law laid down by the Supreme Court has been that the withdrawal from the prosecution is an executive function of the Public Prosecution and the ultimate decision to withdraw from the prosecution is his. Before an application is made under S. 321, the Public Prosecutor has to apply his mind to the facts of the case independently without being subject to any outside influence. The Government may suggest to the Public Prosecutor that a particular case may not be proceeded with, but nobody can compel him to do so.

However, S. 321 of the Code does not lay any bar on the Public Prosecutor to receive any instruction from the Government before he files an application under that section. If the Public Prosecutor receives such instructions, he cannot be said to act under extraneous influence. On the contrary, the Public Prosecutor cannot file an application for withdrawal of a case on his own without instruction from the Government, since a Public Prosecutor cannot conduct a case absolutely on his own, or contrary to the instruction of his client, namely, the Government. Unlike the Judge, the Public Prosecutor is not an absolutely independent officer. He is appointed by the Government for conducting in court any prosecution or other proceedings on behalf of the Government concerned. So there is the relationship of counsel and client between the Public Prosecutor and the Government.

If the Government gives instructions to a Public Prosecutor to withdraw from the prosecution of a case, the latter after applying his mind to the facts of the case may either agree with the instructions and file a petition stating grounds of withdrawal or disagree therewith having found a good case for prosecution and refuse to file the withdrawal petition. In the latter event the Public Prosecutor will have to return the brief and perhaps to resign, for, it is the Government, not the Public Prosecutor, who is in the know of larger interest of the State.

Mere mention of S. 5(1)(c) in place of S. 5(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act in the petition under S. 321, CrPC cannot serve as a proof of non-application of mind for, it is too insignificant an error to be taken note of.

Per Misra, J.

The statutory responsibility for deciding withdrawal squarely rests upon the Public Prosecutor. It is non-negotiable and cannot be bartered away. Section 321 does not prescribe any ground, nor does it put any embargo or fetter on the power of the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from prosecuting a particular criminal case pending in any court. All that it requires is that he can do so only with the consent of the court where the case is pending. If the Public Prosecutor after applying his mind comes to the conclusion that the continuance of the prosecution in the circumstances would only end in an exercise in futility, he is fully justified in moving the application for withdrawal.

Consultation with the Government or high officer is not improper. But the Public Prosecutor has to apply his own mind to the facts and circumstances of the case before coming to the conclusion to withdraw from the prosecution. From the materials on the record it is clear that the Public Prosecutor applied his mind and on perusal of case diary and other materials he was satisfied in the interest of public justice to withdraw from the case.

Per Tulzapurkar, J. (dissenting)

In the present case the executive function of the Public Prosecutor and/or the supervisory function of the trial court in granting its consent to the withdrawal had been improperly performed and were vitiated by reason of illegality.

The non-application of mind both on the part of the Public Prosecutor as also of the Special Judge, at least on one material aspect, is clear and glaring.

The High Court erred in simply accepting the trial court's order.

Though exercise of power under S. 321 is an executive function of the Public Prosecutor for which statutory discretion is vested in him, the discretion is neither absolute nor unreviewable. Being an executive function it would be subject to a judicial review on certain limited grounds like any other executive action which may be grouped in two main categories: failure to exercise a discretion, and excess or abuse of discretionary power. The two classes are not, however, mutually exclusive.

In the present case the Public Prosecutor cannot be said to have sought the withdrawal from the prosecution at the behest of the Government. The State Government merely suggested to him (which it was entitled to do) to withdraw from the prosecution but at the same time asked him to consider the matter on his own and after satisfying himself about it make the necessary application which he did and there is no material to doubt the recital that is found in the application that he had himself considered relevant materials connected with the case and had come to his own conclusion in that behalf. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1983) 1 SCC 438: 1983 SCC (Cri) 224: AIR 1983 SC 194: 1983 Cri LJ 348.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar[1], Baharul Islam[2] and R.B. Misra[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1982]

[3521] — S. 321 — Withdrawal from prosecution — Veerappan case — Requirements for making a valid application by Public Prosecutor (PP) and for grant of consent for withdrawal by court — Application of mind — PP must independently apply his mind to all the relevant material and reach his own satisfaction regarding need for withdrawal from prosecution in good faith disregarding any decision, order or direction of the Govt. in that regard — He must briefly set out the material considered by him in his application or affidavit or in some cases before the court — Though power of court is supervisory but consent cannot be granted as a matter of course — Court has also to be satisfied that on the basis of such material PP's satisfaction was bona fide, in public interest and will not thwart or stifle the process of law or cause manifest injustice — On the basis of such consideration and satisfaction, court has to accord an informed consent for withdrawal — Pursuant to kidnapping of film actor Rajkumar of Karnataka by the forest brigand Veerappan and his gang, State Govt. in a panic reaction yielding to the demand of Veerappan to withdraw the TADA charges against Veerappan's associates who were in jail facing charges under various penal statutes including TADA and to facilitate their release and also to release some of his men who were preventively detained under National Security Act in order to secure Rajkumar's release from the clutches of Veerappan — Accordingly PP moving application under S. 321 for withdrawal of the TADA charges and the Govt. also revoking the order of detention of those detained under NSA — No relevant material placed showing application of independent mind by PP in good faith and in public interest — Consent granted by court for such withdrawal — Bail applications thereafter moved by the accused persons granted and accused thus securing their release from custody — On facts held, orders granting consent for withdrawal did not meet the requirements of S. 321 and hence were bad in law — Materials which should have been considered by PP while making application under S. 321 and by court while according consent, were not so considered — Affidavit of PP permitting bail applications by the several accused showed complicity of the State Govt. and PP in securing their release — Orders granting bail therefore cancelled — Conduct of State Govt. and PP deprecated

In a forest land, stretching half in Karnataka and half in Tamil Nadu, a dreaded criminal Veerappan and his associates are engaged in various criminal activities including poaching of elephants, smuggling of ivory and sandalwood, murder of more than 100 persons, among them police and forest officers, kidnapping, possession of arms and ammunitions, opening fire on task force personnel etc. Despite various attempts over a number of years Veerappan could not be apprehended. Cases were filed against them under the provisions of TADA Act, IPC, Arms Act and Explosive Substances Act. On 30-7-2000 Rajkumar, a popular film actor of Karnataka, was abducted by Veerappan and his gangmen from his farmhouse. Several demands were set out by Veerappan for his release, main of them being withdrawal of charges under TADA Act framed against some of his associates who are in judicial custody and withdrawal of detention order passed under the National Security Act (NSA) against few of his other associates and facilitating their release. The State Govt. promptly decided to accept the demand. The arrangement was that once TADA charges are withdrawn, the accused in judicial custody would move bail applications in cases of offences under IPC and other penal enactments. The Public Prosecutor would concede and would not oppose the grant of bail. The court would grant the bail and, thus, accused would come out from judicial custody. Accordingly, an application was filed by the Special PP under Section 321 CrPC seeking consent of the Designated Court to withdraw the TADA charges. The application was made when the trial of the cases to which it related was in progress and the evidence of 51 witnesses had been recorded. It was submitted by the Prosecutor that in order to restore the peace and normalcy in the border area and among the people living in the border area and to maintain peace among the public in general and inhabitants of the particular village, the prosecutor had decided to withdraw from the prosecution the charges under the offences of the provision punishable under Sections 3, 4 and 5 of TADA. It was further submitted that the trial regarding other offences were being continued and the charges under the Arms Act and the Explosive Substances Act, to a certain extent covered the provisions of Sections 3 and 4 of TADA. Therefore, no injustice would be caused if the charges for the offences under Sections 3, 4 and 5 of the TADA Act were withdrawn. It was also submitted that as a matter of policy, since the Central Government had already withdrawn the Central enactment, no purpose would be served immediately by the prosecution for the offences under Sections 3, 4 and 5 of TADA.

The appellant, being father of a police SI who was allegedly killed by Veerappan and his men, opposed the Special PP's application stating that consequent upon abduction of Rajkumar the Karnataka Government had yielded to the demands of Veerappan and had issued notifications that it would withdraw all cases against Veerappan and his associates, and this had been widely publicised by the media. The statement of opposition submitted that no cogent reasons had been given for the decision to drop the TADA cases. The Special Public Prosecutor rejoined to the statement of opposition by denying the objection regarding yielding to the blackmail by Veerappan and contending that all cases against Veerappan and his associates were not being withdrawn, and they would be prosecuted. The Special Judge Designated for trial of TADA offences stated in his order dated 19-8-2000 that he was satisfied that the Special PP had applied his mind in filing the application. In view of the grounds and circumstances mentioned by the Special PP, he was satisfied, on the materials placed before him, "that the grant of permission to withdraw subserves the administration of justice and the permission had not been sought covertly with an ulterior purpose unconnected with the vindication of law, which the executive organs are duty-bound to further and maintain". The case against the accused for other offences would be proceeded with. Accordingly, the learned Judge allowed the application, according consent to withdrawal of the charges relating to offences punishable under the TADA Act against the accused. He ordered, "the accused in custody and on bail, facing trial for offences under the TADA Act stand acquitted/discharged as the case may be". He transferred the cases to the Court of the Principal District and Sessions Judge, Mysore for disposal in accordance with law of all charges other than under TADA. The accused who were in custody and were discharged by the Special Court in respect of TADA charges against them immediately filed an application for bail before the Court of District and Sessions Judge, Mysore. Even though the Principal District and Sessions Judge had noted in his order dated 28-8-2000 that the counsel for the present appellant had informed him that the appellant had filed a petition for special leave to appeal against the order on the Special Public Prosecutor's application which was to be taken up for hearing on the next day and that the counsel had prayed that orders on the bail petition should not be pronounced until thereafter, but keeping in view "the urgency of the matter" and the change in the circumstances in view of the Designated Court's permission to withdraw TADA charges, he held that no prima facie case was made out against the accused for the said offences and therefore, "having regard to the facts and circumstances, the social status of the accused and other relevant factors", he allowed the bail applications. The accused were directed to be released on bail on each of them executing a bond for Rs 10,000 with one surety for the like sum or, in the alternative, on each furnishing cash security of Rs 20,000, on the conditions that they would appear before the court regularly, as and when required, they would not tamper with the prosecution witnesses and they would not commit any other offence. The order dated 19-8-2000 on the Special Public Prosecutor's application was impugned before the Supreme Court.

On 14-8-2000 the Government of the State of Tamil Nadu issued a Government Order directing that charges against one R, another associate of Veerappan, in respect of two cases registered against him under TADA be withdrawn "in the public interest". The Inspector General of Police Intelligence, Chennai was directed to take necessary action accordingly. On 16-8-2000 the Special Public Prosecutor before the Designated Court (TADA) at Chennai made two applications to that court under Section 321 CrPC stating that R was charged before the Designated Court in cases arising under TADA, the Explosive Substances Act, IPC and the Arms Act and the cases were pending for framing charges and that he was satisfied that under the new change of circumstances and also in the public interest the charges under TADA be withdrawn. The court held: "As this application has been filed by the learned Special Public Prosecutor on the basis of the Government Order referred above, permission is granted to withdraw the TADA case against the accused." This order was challenged before the Supreme Court in a public interest petition. (Para 13)

In respect of the four detenus under NSA, the State of T.N. passed orders dated 14-8-2000 revoking the detention orders in view of the tense situation prevailing due to kidnapping of Rajkumar and there being "an apprehension that in case any harm is caused to him, there may be a backlash on Tamils in Karnataka. In order to avoid such a situation and in the public interest the Government has decided to revoke the order of detention". The aforesaid order of the Government of the State of Tamil Nadu was also challenged in a public interest petition before the Supreme Court. Allowing the appeals and making the writ petitions absolute the Supreme Court.

Held :

Per majority

Though the Government may have ordered, directed or asked a Public Prosecutor to withdraw from a prosecution, it is for the Public Prosecutor to apply his mind to all the relevant material and, in good faith, to be satisfied thereon that the public interest will be served by his withdrawal from the prosecution. In turn, the court has to be satisfied, after considering all that material, that the Public Prosecutor has applied his mind independently thereto, that the Public Prosecutor, acting in good faith, is of the opinion that his withdrawal from the prosecution is in the public interest, and that such withdrawal will not stifle or thwart the process of law or cause manifest injustice. (Para 19)

It must follow that the application under Section 321 must aver that the Public Prosecutor is, in good faith, satisfied, on consideration of all relevant material, that his withdrawal from the prosecution is in the public interest and it will not stifle or thwart the process of law or cause injustice. The material that the Public Prosecutor has considered must be set out, briefly but concisely, in the application or in an affidavit annexed to the application or, in a given case, placed before the court, with its permission, in a sealed envelope. The court has to give an informed consent. It must be satisfied that this material can reasonably lead to the conclusion that the withdrawal of the Public Prosecutor from the prosecution will serve the public interest; but it is not for the court to weigh the material. The court must be satisfied that the Public Prosecutor has considered the material and, in good faith, reached the conclusion that his withdrawal from the prosecution will serve the public interest. The court must also consider whether the grant of consent may thwart or stifle the course of law or result in manifest injustice. If, upon such consideration, the court accords consent, it must make such order on the application as will indicate to a higher court that it has done all that the law requires it to do before granting consent. (Para 20)

The applications under Section 321 made by the Special Public Prosecutor before the Designated Court at Mysore did not state why the Special Public Prosecutor apprehended a disturbance of the peace and normalcy of "the border area" or the "particular village", nor was any material in this behalf, or a summary thereof, set out. There was, therefore, no basis laid in the applications upon which the learned Judge presiding over the Designated Court could conclude that the Special Public Prosecutor had applied his mind to the relevant material and exercised discretion in good faith and that the withdrawal would not stifle or thwart the course of the law and cause manifest injustice. The order of the learned Judge did not note that the statement of opposition also said that, consequent upon such abduction, the State of Karnataka had yielded to the demands made by Veerappan and had issued notifications that it would withdraw all cases against Veerappan and his associates. No query in this regard was made by the learned Judge with the Special Public Prosecutor. The learned Judge said that he was satisfied on the material placed before him that the grant of permission to withdraw subserved the administration of justice and it had not been sought covertly, but he did not state what those materials were. No materials were placed before the learned Judge upon the basis of which he could have been satisfied that the Special Public Prosecutor had applied his mind thereto and had reached, in good faith, the conclusion that the withdrawal he sought was necessary for the reasons he pleaded. The order granting consent on the Special Public Prosecutor's application, therefore, does not meet the requirements of Section 321 and is bad in law. (Para 21)

Regarding decision of the Government of Karnataka that, in view of its apprehension of the unrest that would follow if any harm were to come to Rajkumar, it was better to yield to Veerappan's demand and to withdraw TADA charges against Veerappan and his associates, including the respondents-accused, the Special Public Prosecutor should have considered and answered the following questions for himself before he decided to exercise his discretion in favour of such withdrawal from prosecution of TADA charges.

1. Was there material to show that the police and intelligence authorities and the State Government had a reasonable apprehension of such civil disturbances as would justify the dropping of charges against Veerappan and others accused of TADA offences and the release on bail of those in custody in respect of the other offences they were charged with?

2. What was the assessment of the police and intelligence authorities and of the State Government of the risk of leaving Veerappan free to commit crimes in future, and how did it weigh against the risk to Rajkumar's life and the likely consequent civil disturbances?

3. What was the likely effect on the morale of the law-enforcement agencies?

4. What was the likelihood of reprisals against the many witnesses who had already deposed against the respondents-accused?

5. Was there any material to suggest that Veerappan would release Rajkumar when some of Veerappan's demands were not to be met at all?

6. When the demand was to release innocent persons languishing in the Karnataka Jails, was there any material to suggest that Veerappan would be satisfied with the release of only the respondents-accused?

7. In any event, was there any material to suggest that after the respondents-accused had secured their discharge from TADA charges and bail on the other charges Veerappan would release Rajkumar?

8. Given that the Government of the States of Karnataka and Tamil Nadu had not for 10 years apprehended Veerappan and brought him to justice, was this a ploy adopted by them to keep Veerappan out of the clutches of the law? (Para 25)

The affidavit of the Special Public Prosecutor reveals that he was "informed" that the Government of the State of Karnataka had intelligence reports that if any harm were to be caused to Rajkumar, it would lead to problems between two linguistic communities. Clearly, he was not shown the intelligence reports, and there was no statement therein showing that the Special Public Prosecutor had the opportunity of assessing the situation for himself by reading the primary material and deciding, upon the basis thereof, whether he should exercise his discretion in favour of the withdrawal of TADA charges. Acting upon the information, which he could not verify, the Special Public Prosecutor could not be satisfied that such withdrawal was in the public interest and that it would not thwart or stifle the process of the law or cause manifest injustice. The Special Public Prosecutor, in fact, acted only upon the instructions of the Government of the State of Karnataka. He, therefore, did not follow the requirement of the law that he be satisfied, and the consent he sought under Section 321 therefore cannot be granted. (Para 27)

The affidavit of the Special Public Prosecutor speaks of "withdrawal of TADA charges which would enable the accused to file necessary bail applications and their consequent release on bail ...." It is, thus, clear that what was envisaged by the Government of the State of Karnataka and the Special Public Prosecutor was a package which comprised of the withdrawal of TADA charges against the respondents-accused and their release on bail on applications filed by them. This indicates complicity with the respondents-accused. Stress was laid by the Special Public Prosecutor in his application under Section 321 on the fact that the prosecutions against the respondents-accused on charges other than under the TADA Act would continue, and this was noted in the order of the Designated Court. The Designated Court was not told either in the application or thereafter that the Government of the State of Karnataka and the Special Public Prosecutor had in mind that the respondents-accused would file bail applications subsequent to the order under Section 321 which would not be opposed. There can, in the circumstances, be little doubt that after their release on bail the respondents-accused were not expected to attend the court to answer the remaining charges against them and that the stress laid as aforesaid was intended to mislead the Designated Court the conduct of the Government of the State of Karnataka and the Special Public Prosecutor in this behalf is deprecated. It is appropriate, in the facts and circumstances, to set aside the orders granting bail to the respondents-accused. (Para 28)

In the applications under Section 321 filed before the Designated Court at Chennai seeking consent to the withdrawal from TADA prosecution against R, what the record was that the Special Public Prosecutor had perused was not set out nor was it annexed nor a summary thereof recited. What the changed circumstances were was also not set out. The order on the applications was founded only upon the relevant Government Order. The order, therefore, was not passed after meeting the requirements of Section 321, and it is bad in law. (Para 22)

Having set aside the order under Section 321 passed by the Designated Court at Chennai in the matter of R, the Government of the State of Tamil Nadu cannot comply with Veerappan's demand to release the five prisoners from its jails. It is appropriate in the circumstances to set aside the orders of the Government of the State of Tamil Nadu under the National Security Act releasing the other four persons from detention. (Para 29)

There was no material that could give rise to a reasonable apprehension of such civil disturbances as justifies the decision to drop TADA charges against Veerappan and his associates, including the respondents-accused, and to release the latter on bail. There is nothing on the record which suggests that the possibility of reprisals against the witnesses who have already deposed against the respondents-accused or the effect on the morale of the law-enforcement agencies were considered before it was decided to release the respondents-accused. There is also nothing to suggest that there was reason to proceed upon the basis that Veerappan would release Rajkumar when his demands were not being met in full. The Government of the State of Karnataka would appear to be unaware that once the respondents-accused were discharged from TADA charges, the deal was done; and that when they were released on bail they could not be detained further, whether or not Rajkumar was released in exchange. While it cannot be asserted that conceding to Veerappan's demands was a ploy of the Government of the State of Karnataka to keep him out of the clutches of the law, it acted in panic and haste and without thinking things through in doing so. That this is so, is clear from the fact that the demands were conceded overnight and also from the fact that the Government of the State of Karnataka did not ascertain the legal position that it was not for it but for the court to decide upon the release of persons facing criminal prosecutions. (Para 30)

What causes the gravest disquiet is that when, not so very long back, as the record shows, his gang had been considerably reduced, Veerappan was not pursued and apprehended and now, as the statements in the affidavit filed on behalf of the State of Tamil Nadu show, Veerappan is operating in the forest that has been his hideout for 10 years or more along with secessionist Tamil elements. It seems certain that Veerappan will continue with his life of crime and very likely that those crimes will have anti-national objectives. (Para 31)

It would have been prudent, in the circumstances, to post round the clock at Rajkumar's farmhouse in Gajanoor one or two policemen who could inform their local station house of his arrival there and thus ensure his safety. (Para 32)

Hence, the order under appeal, dated 19-8-2000, is set aside. The order dated 28-8-2000 passed by the Principal District and Sessions Judge, Mysore granting bail to the respondents-accused is also set aside. Further, the order of the Designated Court at Chennai dated 16-8-2000 is set aside. The orders of the Government of the State of Tamil Nadu passed on 14-8-2000 under the National Security Act in respect of Sathyamoorthy and three others revoking the orders of their detention under the National Security Act are also set aside. The writ petitions are made absolute accordingly. (Paras 35 and 36)

Per Sabharwal, J. (concurring)

The satisfaction for moving an application under Section 321 CrPC has to be of the Public Prosecutor which in the nature of the case in hand has to be based on the material provided by the State. Grant of consent by the court is not a matter of course. True, the power of the court under Section 321 is supervisory but that does not mean that while exercising that power, the consent has to be granted on mere asking. The court has to examine that all relevant aspects have been taken into consideration by the Public Prosecutor and/or by the Government in exercise of its executive function. When such an application is filed by the Public Prosecutor after taking into consideration the material before him, the court exercises its judicial discretion by considering such material and on such consideration either gives consent or declines consent. The court has to see that the application is made in good faith, in the interest of public policy and justice and not to thwart or stifle the process of law or suffers from such improprieties or illegalities as to cause manifest injustice if consent is given. (Paras 41 and 42)

The Public Prosecutor has to be straight, forthright and honest and has to admit the arrangement and inform the court that the real arrangement is to ultimately facilitate the release of these accused from judicial custody by not opposing the bail applications after the withdrawal of TADA charges. It is well established that the real purpose for withdrawal of TADA charges was to facilitate the grant of bail to the accused. In such circumstances, why the camouflage? Why is it not so stated in the application filed under Section 321? In fact, it is a deceit. These are the questions for which there is no plausible answer. No court of law can be a party to such a camouflage and deceit in judicial proceedings. The answer to these basic questions cannot be that the Judge knew about it from the very nature of the case. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said that the application was made in good faith. (Para 40)

Besides the eight questions noticed in the main judgment, the question and aspect of association of Veerappan with those having secessionist aspirations were also not considered. Further, though it may have been considered as to what disturbances occurred, immediately after the abduction of Rajkumar, but what does not seem to have been considered is that those were spontaneous outbursts and the authorities may have been taken unaware but what would be the ground realities when the law-enforcing agencies have sufficient time to prepare for any apprehended contingency. (Para 43)

The application and order under Section 321 is a result of panic reaction by overzealous persons without proper understanding of the problem and consideration of the relevant material, though they may not have any personal motive. It does not appear that anybody considered that if democratically-elected governments give an impression to the citizens of this country of being lawbreakers, would it not breed contempt for law; would it not invite citizens to become a law onto themselves. It may lead to anarchy. The Governments have to consider and balance the choice between maintenance of law and order and anarchy. It does not appear that anyone considered this aspect. It yielded to the pressure tactics of those who according to the Government are out to terrorise the police force and to overawe the elected Governments. It does not appear that anyone considered that with their action people may lose faith in the democratic process, when they see public authority flouted and the helplessness of the Government. The aspect of paralysing and discrediting the democratic authority had to be taken into consideration. It is the executive function to decide in the public interest to withdraw from prosecution as claimed, but it is also for the Government to maintain its existence. Self-preservation is the most pervasive aspect of sovereignty. To preserve its independence and territories is the highest duty of every nation and to attain these ends nearly all other considerations are to be subordinated. Of course, it is for the State to consider these aspects and take a conscious decision. In the present case, without consideration of these aspects the decision was taken to withdraw TADA charges. It is evident from material now placed on record before the Supreme Court that Veerappan was acting in consultation with secessionist organisations/groups which had the object of liberation of Tamil from India. There is no serious challenge to this aspect. None of the aforesaid aspects were considered by the Government or the Public Prosecutors before having recourse to Section 321 CrPC. (Para 44). Abdul Karim v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 710: 2001 SCC (Cri) 59: AIR 2001 SC 116.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.P. Bharucha, D.P. Mohapatra and Y.K. Sabharwal, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-11-2000]

Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82, relied on

[3522] — S. 321 — Withdrawal of cases — Duty of public prosecutor under S. 321 — Held, Public Prosecutor cannot act like a postbox or act on dictates of the State Government — He has to act objectively as befits an officer of the court — Furthermore, court is not bound by opinion of Public Prosecutor and is free to assess whether a prima facie case is made out or not — On facts, prima facie case having been made out against the accused, application of Public Prosecutor and order of State Government for withdrawal of cases, quashed

The Public Prosecutor has to shoulder a greater responsibility for withdrawal of cases under Section 321 CrPC. The Public Prosecutor cannot act like a postbox or act on the dictates of the State Government. He has to act objectively as he is also an officer of the court. At the same time the court is also not bound by that. The courts are also free to assess whether a prima face case is made out or not. The court, if satisfied, can also reject the prayer. (Para 32)

In the present case there is a prima facie case to proceed against the accused persons under Section 4(b) of the Act and the other provisions of the Explosives or Arms Acts. Therefore, the sanction granted by the Government and application moved by the Public Prosecutor for withdrawal of the cases cannot be sustained. Hence the order of the State Government withdrawing the cases against the accused persons is quashed, likewise direction to the Public Prosecutor for withdrawing the cases from the court. (Para 32). S.K. Shukla v. State of U.P., (2006) 1 SCC 314: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 366: AIR 2006 SC 413: (2006) 37 AIC 523 (SC): 2006 Cri LJ 148.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and A.K. Mathur, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-11-2005]

Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1983) 1 SCC 438: 1983 SCC (Cri) 224; Rajender Kumar Jain v. State, (1980) 3 SCC 435: 1980 SCC (Cri) 757; R.M. Tewari v. State (NCT of Delhi), (1996) 2 SCC 610: 1996 SCC (Cri) 361; Ayyub v. State of U.P., (2002) 3 SCC 510: 2002 SCC (Cri) 673, followed

[3523] — Ss. 321, 301 and 24 — Public Prosecutor — Has full freedom to function effectively, independently and fearlessly — He can at one stage seek framing of certain charges and at a subsequent stage in the same proceedings he can seek dropping of those charges against the accused

In the present case, the hearing as to framing of charges has gone on for nearly eight months. Considering the nature of the charges to be framed in the case, the voluminous record of the case presented before the court, the seriousness and magnitude of the matter when several hundreds of persons have been killed and property worth crores of rupees has been destroyed, in what manner the case should be conducted is a very serious affair. If the Public Prosecutor had been supporting at one stage of the proceedings the charge-sheet that had been laid in respect of the offences arising under Sections 121 and 121-A IPC, later on he realises that evidence is not available at that stage of the case, seeks that for the time being these charges need not be proceeded with, and if further investigation discloses such offences as having been committed, supplementary charge-sheet would be filed before the court later, such shift in the stand would not attract offences enumerated under Section 195 CrPC. The submissions made by the learned Public Prosecutor — however contradictory they may be — in a case cannot amount to fabrication of evidence by any stretch of imagination. The substance of the complaint should have been looked into and should have been decided. (Para 14)

The stand of a counsel, howsoever inconsistent it may be at different stages of the proceedings, cannot amount to offences adverted to under Section 195 CrPC. If the courts begin to issue notice for prosecution or as to why the inquiry should not be made in the matter or to launch a prosecution, no advocate can function with safety nor can he assist the court with the necessary fearlessness which is required of him. It is not unknown that even in criminal cases even after committal proceedings are over at the stage of sessions trial before charges are framed by the court or at the stage of final arguments, many Public Prosecutors have entered nolle prosequi in cases where they thought that a charge could not be framed or the accused concerned should be acquitted. However, that does not mean that such a stand could not have been taken or attracts the wrath of Section 340 CrPC. (Para 10)

Issue of notice on an application of this nature would have serious impact upon the Public Prosecutor in conduct of the case particularly when at every stage he has got to be conscious whether any of his statements would attract Section 340 CrPC. This is not the kind of atmosphere where a Public Prosecutor can function effectively, independently and fearlessly. In the conduct of the case a Public Prosecutor must have full freedom and he can even give up certain cases and request the court to discharge or acquit any accused. If that kind of autonomy is to be enjoyed by the Public Prosecutor, he cannot be fettered in conducting the proceedings. By initiating the proceedings against him, the learned Designated Judge has crippled the freedom of the Public Prosecutor in functioning effectively and such a matter certainly results in serious miscarriage in administration of justice and no advocate would be safe if such proceedings are initiated on the basis of the allegations of the nature made in the complaint. Either the learned Designated Judge has not applied his mind or he has not understood the scope of the application and if he had done either, he would have dismissed the application. (Para 15). N. Natarajan v. B.K. Subba Rao, (2003) 2 SCC 76: 2003 SCC (Cri) 437: AIR 2003 SC 541: 2003 Cri LJ 820.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-12-2002]

[3524] — S. 321 — No further challenge made to judgment of High Court confirming withdrawal of prosecution — Effect of — Grievance relating to said matter made in present appeal — Sustainability of — Held, said judgment of High Court became final and binding on the parties — Making grievance relating to that matter in present appeal, held, was wholly unjustified

The appellant aggrieved by the order by which the Court's approval was granted for withdrawal of the prosecution, preferred a criminal revision petition in the High Court. The High Court by a detailed and comprehensive judgment on 28-9-1991 dismissed the revision petition. The said judgment of the High Court became final and binding on the parties because the appellant had never challenged that judgment. Therefore, the appellant is wholly unjustified in making any grievance in respect of the prosecution which had already been withdrawn against Respondent 3 a long time ago and the said order was affirmed by the High Court and no proceedings were taken against the said judgment of the High Court. (Paras 15 and 20). Ghanshyam v. State of M.P., (2006) 10 SCC 473: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 602.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-9-2006]

[3525] — S. 321 — Application for withdrawal of only charges under TADA Act from prosecution while retaining charges under IPC — Application filed by Prosecuting Officer on the basis of govt. order which stated that the Govt., after proper discussion on the facts of the case and the evidence/reports/letters on the record, decided to waive the TADA charges — Held, rejection of the application by Designated Court was not justified

When the order itself states that all records were perused and considered, the Designated Court was not justified in rejecting the application. It cannot be said that the Senior Prosecuting Officer had filed the application without consideration of the relevant facts. It cannot also be said that application was filed with any mala fide intention to save some of the culprits from the clutches of law. The request was made only to withdraw from prosecution as against the offences punishable under the TADA Act. Charges in respect of other offences punishable under the Indian Penal Code remained and the accused had to face trial for that. The Government must have thought that the stringent and harsh provisions of the TADA Act were not necessary to deal with such situations. (Para 11). Ayyub v. State of U.P., (2002) 3 SCC 510: 2002 SCC (Cri) 673: AIR 2002 SC 1192.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.P. Sethi and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-2-2002]

State of Bihar v. Ram Naresh Pandey, AIR 1957 SC 389: 1957 Cri LJ 567; State of Orissa v. Chandrika Mohapatra, (1976) 4 SCC 250: 1976 SCC (Cri) 584; Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899; R.M. Tewari, Advocate v. State (NCT of Delhi), (1996) 2 SCC 610: 1996 SCC (Cri) 361, relied on

[3526] — Ss. 321 & 24(8) — 'Public Prosecutor' — Advocate validly appointed as Special Public Prosecutor under S. 24(8), without cancelling previous appointment of another Special Public Prosecutor, and in charge of the case, held, becomes the 'Public Prosecutor' competent to apply for withdrawal under S. 321 even if appointed for that purpose only — Doctrine of de facto jurisdiction applied

Per Baharul Islam, J.

The Panel Advocate (Shri L.P. Sinha) was a Public Prosecutor validly appointed under S. 28(8), CrPC. His appointment without cancelling the previous appointment of the Special Public Prosecutor (Shri A.K. Datta), might at best be irregular or improper, but cannot be said to be legally invalid. The doctrine of de facto jurisdiction which has been recognised in India will operate in this case.

From the facts of the case it is clear that at the relevant time Shri Sinha and not Shri Datta was in charge of the case. Thus Shri Sinha was both de jure and de facto Public Prosecutor in the case.

Since Shri L.P. Sinha fulfilled the two conditions as required by S. 321 of the Code, namely, that (i) he was a Public Prosecutor and (ii) was in charge of the case, he was competent to apply for withdrawal of the case, even if he were appointed for that purpose only.

Per Tulzapurkar, J.

Appointments of Public Prosecutors generally fall under S. 24(3) but when the State Government appoints Public Prosecutors for the purposes of any case or class of cases the appointees become Special Public Prosecutors under S. 24(8). Shri Sinha had been validly appointed as a Special Public Prosecutor under S. 24(8).

Although the appointment of Shri Datta made by the previous Government as the Special Public Prosecutor to conduct the case had not been cancelled, but that did not prevent the new Government to make a fresh appointment of a Public Prosecutor and to put him in charge of the case. Though Shri Datta was appointed as the Special Public Prosecutor to conduct the case in question, he was neither incharge of the case nor was actually conducting the same at the material time and since Shri Sinha was not merely incharge of the case but was actually conducting the case, he was the proper officer to apply for the withdrawal from the prosecution. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1983) 1 SCC 438: 1983 SCC (Cri) 224: AIR 1983 SC 194: 1983 Cri LJ 348.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar[1], Baharul Islam[2] and R.B. Misra[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1982]

[3527] — S. 321 — Withdrawal from prosecution — Designated Court's order refusing to grant consent for, held, is an interim order — Whether an appeal will lie against that order is doubtful and question left open (Para 6). Ayyub v. State of U.P., (2002) 3 SCC 510: 2002 SCC (Cri) 673: AIR 2002 SC 1192.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.P. Sethi and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-2-2002]

[3528] — S. 321 — Withdrawal from prosecution — On recommendation of Review Committee constituted by State Govt., application made before Designated Court for withdrawal from prosecution of cases under Ss. 3 and 4 of TADA Act against appellants — Application rejected by Designated Court — Fresh application for withdrawal from prosecution filed by Special Public Prosecutor giving details to show how he reached the satisfaction envisaged in S. 321 — Held, in the interest of justice it is necessary that the fresh application should be disposed of by the Designated Court untrammelled by any observations made by it in its earlier order — TADA, 1987 — Ss. 3 & 4. Mohd. Husain v. State of Rajasthan, (2003) 10 SCC 295.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-1-2001]

Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899; R.M. Tewari, Advocate v. State (NCT of Delhi), (1996) 2 SCC 610: 1996 SCC (Cri) 361 (paras 10, 11 and 12), relied on

[3529] — S. 321 — Withdrawal from prosecution against a former Chief Minister — Whether on facts sufficient and relevant grounds made out — Whether there was proper application of mind by the public prosecutor

Per Khalid and Natarajan, JJ. (Venkataramiah, J. concurring)

In the present case the application for withdrawal from prosecution was made by the Public Prosecutor on four grounds. At no stage was a case put forward by any one that the application made by the Public Prosecutor was either mala fide or that it was not in good faith or was motivated by improper considerations. There was no allegation of bias against the Special Judge. The application disclosed the fact that he had gone through the case diary and the relevant materials connected with the case and that he came to the conclusion that in the circumstances prevailing at the time of institution of the case and investigation thereof, the case was instituted on the ground of political vendetta and only to defame the fair image of the accused. The Special Judge performed his function in conformity with the section. Also the statement of the Public Prosecutor had not been challenged as borne out of any unwholesome motive. Thus his part under S. 321 in this case had been performed strictly in conformity with this section. The application clearly shows that he applied his mind to the facts of the case. One would normally not expect a more detailed statement in an application for withdrawal than the one contained in the application in question, keeping in view the scope of S. 321 and the wide language it uses. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[3530] — S. 321 — Withdrawal from prosecution against a former Chief Minister — Where proper application filed by Public Prosecutor and consent for withdrawal granted by Magistrate after objective assessment of the merits and his order affirmed by High Court in revision, Supreme Court's interference whether, on facts, called for — Whether Public Prosecutor can withdraw on ground of insufficient evidence once the charge has been framed — Constitution of India, Article 136

Respondent 1 was Chief Minister of the State of Orissa when Congress (I) Party was in power. Later she left the Congress Party and joined the Congress for Democracy, which was later merged with Janata Party. A complaint was lodged against her when she was no longer the Chief Minister by a person who had been suspended from the Congress Party. The Vigilance Department submitted a charge-sheet against her on the allegation of misappropriation of fund collected from various companies by District Congress Committee for publication of their advertisements in the Party's souvenirs. The Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate framed charges under Ss. 406, 467, 471 and 120, IPC against respondent 1 and under S. 406 read with S. 34, IPC against respondent 2. At that time Janata Party was in power in the State of Orissa. In 1980 Assembly election, respondent 1 was elected as a Congress (Urs) Party candidate defeating her opponent of Congress (I) Party. But the Congress (I) Party formed the Government in Orissa. Thereafter the Law Department advised the Government to take a policy decision to withdraw cases against political leaders who were subjected to victimisation. After considering the matter from all angles, the then Chief Minister ordered that the case against the respondents be withdrawn. The Special Public Prosecutor examined the case diary and the connected papers and on being satisfied that the charge of criminal breach of trust would fail against respondent 1 and that withdrawal from prosecution in the changed circumstances would be in public interest, he made an application under S. 321, CrPC. After making an objective assessment of the merits of the application, the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate held that the withdrawal of the prosecution "would in no way affect any public interest or improve any public confidence" and therefore, granted consent to withdrawal from the prosecution. Thereafter, the present appellant who was not a party to these proceedings filed a revision petition in the High Court of Orissa challenging the order of the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate permitting withdrawal but the same was dismissed. Dismissing the appeal by special leave Supreme Court

Held :

Per curiam

Appeal to be dismissed

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J. (minority view)

The Special Public Prosecutor could not make an application for withdrawal from the prosecution and the Chief Judicial Magistrate give his consent to such withdrawal on the ground that there was insufficient or no evidence to sustain the prosecution when a charge was already framed against respondent 1 on the basis that in the opinion of the Chief Judicial Magistrate who framed the charge there was ground for presuming that respondent 1 had committed the offences charged against her.

But since entire record was before the Supreme Court and the matter had been argued at great length before it, the Court could quash the charge against respondent 1 if it was found on the basis of the material on record that no charge could be framed against her.

On facts, since there was nothing to indicate that the entrustment of the fund to respondent 1 was for the specific purpose of being utilised only for the purpose of publication of advertisements in the souvenirs, a charge of criminal breach of trust could not be sustained against her. The entrustment of the fund, if at all, was to the Souvenir Committee of the All-India Congress Committee and respondent 1 could not therefore possibly be charged for utilising any of these amounts for a purpose other than that for which it was entrusted to her. Therefore, the charge framed against respondent 1 was totally groundless and therefore, liable to be quashed.

Accordingly, instead of permitting the prosecution to be withdrawn under S. 321, the charge framed against respondent 1 under S. 239, CrPC be quashed.

Per Venkataramiah, J.

The Public Prosecutor had applied his mind to the case before applying for withdrawal and the Chief Judicial Magistrate had not committed any error in giving his consent to such withdrawal. Such consent can be given at any time before the judgment is pronounced. The framing of the charge cannot be an impediment to give consent to such withdrawal.

The decision in Ram Naresh Pandey and Rajender Kumar Jain do not call for any reconsideration and the views expressed therein are fully acceptable.

Per Khalid, J.

Consent can be given for withdrawal from the prosecution of a case, not only when the charge is not framed, but even after the charge is framed and at any time before the judgment.

On the basis of the reasons given by me in Cri. Appeal 241 of 1982 (Sheonandan Paswan v. State Bihar) I uphold the order of withdrawal passed in this case.

Per Natarajan, J.

There was no material in the case to show that the Special Public Prosecutor was influenced by any improper motives for filing the application for withdrawal of the prosecution or that he had acted against his will at the behest of anyone else. The Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate had bestowed judicial consideration over the matter and had thereafter passed a reasoned order. Not only the Magistrate but also the High Court had found, after a careful scrutiny of relevant factors and circumstances, that the application for withdrawal of the prosecution made by the Special Public Prosecutor fully satisfied the tests laid down by Supreme Court in State of Bihar v. Ram Naresh Pandey, reiterated in Rajender Kumar Jain v. State, for its being allowed viz., that the executive function of the public prosecutor in applying for withdrawal of the prosecution had not been improperly exercised and that it was not an attempt to interfere with the normal course of justice for illegitimate reasons or purposes. Mohd. Mumtaz v. Nandini Satpathy (I), (1987) 1 SCC 269: 1987 SCC (Cri) 63: AIR 1987 SC 863 at 869.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[3] and E.S. Venkataramiah[1], V. Khalid[2], G.L. Oza[3] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

State of Bihar v. Ram Naresh Pandey, 1957 SCR 279: AIR 1957 SC 389: 1957 Cri LJ 567 and Rajender Kumar Jain v. State, (1980) 3 SCC 435: 1980 SCC (Cri) 757, followed

Ignore Ed. Note on SCC p. 271 [SCC (Cri) p. 65] based on error in certified copy

[3531] — S. 321 — Withdrawal from prosecution against a former Chief Minister in a warrant case instituted on a police report — Application seeking consent for withdrawal allowed and confirmed by High Court in revision — Per majority, on facts, interference by Supreme Court under Art. 136 not called for — Minority preferring to quash the charge under S. 239, Criminal Procedure Code on the basis of material on record and discharge the accused — Constitution of India — Article 136

The respondent 1 was Chief Minister of the State of Orissa. The ruling political party at that time was Congress (I). Later she left the Congress (I) Party and joined the Congress for Democracy Party which was later merged with Janata Party. But when the Janata Party came in power in that State a prosecution was launched against her under S. 5(1)(d) read with S. 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act for having assets disproportionate to her known sources. When the charge-sheet was filed against her by the Vigilance Department, the Income Tax Department also issued notice for reopening of her assessments and after conducting detailed inquiries, the Income Tax authorities passed a final order accepting her returns as correct and rejecting the allegations that she had suppressed any income from undisclosed sources. The Special Public Prosecutor moved an application under S. 321, CrPC for withdrawal from prosecution against respondent 1. At that time Congress (I) Party had once again come in power in Orissa and respondent had become a member of Congress (Urs) (Opposition) Party and was elected as MLA. The Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate after fully discussing the matter gave his consent for withdrawal from the prosecution. The High Court in criminal revision critically assessed the order of the Magistrate and following the Supreme Court's decision in Rajender Kumar Jain case, upheld the grant of consent by the Magistrate "when the Public Prosecutor in his application had indicated that the evidence already collected did not support the prosecution".

Held :

Per curiam

The appeal must be dismissed.

Per Venkataramiah, J.

The decision in Ram Naresh Pandey and Rajender Kumar Jain cases do not call for any reconsideration. I am in full agreement with the views expressed in these decisions. I am satisfied that the Public Prosecutor had applied his mind to the case before applying for withdrawal and the Chief Judicial Magistrate had not committed any error in giving his consent to such withdrawal.

Per Khalid, J.

The Court is not called upon to consider the propriety of the charge framed and then examine the evidence and see whether the accused should be discharged or the charge framed should be upheld. Under S. 321 consent can be given for withdrawal from, the prosecution of a case, not only when the charge is not framed, but even after the charge is framed and at any time before the judgment.

I adopt the reasons given by me in Sheonandan Paswan case, relying upon the decisions in Ram Naresh Pandey and Rajender Kumar Jain cases and uphold the order of withdrawal passed by the Additional Special Judge as confirmed by the High Court.

Per Natarajan, J.

Section 321 does not lay down that an application for withdrawal of the prosecution should necessarily be made at the earliest stages of the case or only if the evidence is of a weak and infirm nature. The application may be made at any time ranging between the court taking cognizance of the case till such time the court actually pronounces judgment. Consequently, even where reliable evidence has been adduced to prove the charges, the Public Prosecutor can seek the consent of the court to withdraw the prosecution.

In his application the Special Public Prosecutor had set out the reasons which justified his filing an application under S. 321. The Magistrate had considered the matter judicially in the light of the decision in Rajender Kumar Jain case which had allowed the earlier decision in Ram Naresh Pandey case. The order of the Magistrate had been approved and affirmed by the High Court. There is no material in the appeal to persuade me to hold that the order passed by the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate or the High Court suffers from any error of law, patent or latent.

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J. (minority view)

Ordinarily when the exercise of considering the material on record for the purpose of determining whether there is sufficient material to sustain the prosecution can be performed by the Court under S. 239 the Court should not allow the prosecution to be withdrawn under S. 321 but in the present case there was no point in setting aside the withdrawal and sending the case back to the Special Judge because there was no material on record to establish a prima facie case against respondent 1. The charges against her appear to be groundless and in any event she was entitled to be discharged under S. 239, CrPC. The application moved by the Special Public Prosecutor for withdrawal from the prosecution was bona fide and in furtherance of public justice and it was clearly a false and vexatious criminal prosecution which had been launched against respondent No. 1 which was sought to be halted. It was, therefore, not necessary or expedient to interfere with the order made by the Special Judge and confirmed by the High Court. Mohd. Mumtaz v. Nandini Satpathy (II), (1987) 1 SCC 279: 1987 SCC (Cri) 73: AIR 1987 SC 863: 1987 Cri LJ 778.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[3] and E.S. Venkataramiah[1], V. Khalid[2], G.L. Oza[3] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

State of Bihar v. Ram Naresh Pandey, 1957 SCR 279: AIR 1957 SC 389: 1957 Cri LJ 567 and Rajender Kumar Jain v. State, (1980) 3 SCC 435: 1980 SCC (Cri) 757, affirmed

[3532] — S. 321 — Withdrawal from prosecution of accused under TADA — Proper disposal — Court must apply its mind to ground of withdrawal — While deciding to refuse to grant permission, Court should not express opinion on merits of the case — Public Prosecutor, while filing the application must also apply its mind and assess effect of withdrawal from prosecution on society — FIR lodged against appellant under Ss. 302/307 IPC, under Arms Act as also under S. 3(1) of TADA — Review Committee, constituted in terms of Supreme Court's direction in Kartar Singh, (1994) 3 SCC 569, opined in its report that murder was result of gang rivalry and personal enmity and did not constitute offence under S. 3(1) of TADA and that long time had elapsed since commission of the offence and accused was still in jail, trial had still not commenced and that no case for continuation of a case under TADA was made out against appellant — Pursuant thereto Special Pubic Prosecutor filed application for withdrawal of charges under TADA — Designated Court, TADA dismissed the application on ground that certain confessions having been made thereunder by appellant, same would not be available if appellant was not proceeded against under TADA — Held, Designated Court erred in refusing to grant permission for withdrawal from prosecution under TADA — TADA, 1987 — S. 3(1)

Per Sinha, J. (Katju, J., concurring)

Section 321 CrPC provides for withdrawal from prosecution at the instance of the Public Prosecutor or Assistant Public Prosecutor. Indisputably therefore the consent of the Court is necessary. Application of mind on the part of the Court, therefore, is necessary in regard to the grounds for withdrawal from the prosecution in respect of any one or more of the offences for which the appellant is tried. The Public Prosecutor in terms of the statutory scheme laid down under the Code of Criminal Procedure plays an important role. He is supposed to be an independent person. While filing such an application, the Public Prosecutor also is required to apply his own mind and the effect thereof on the society in the event such permission is granted. (Paras 12 and 13)

The provisions of TADA could be attracted only in the event one or the other of the four "things" specified in Nalini is found applicable and not otherwise. The Review Committee made recommendations upon consideration of all relevant facts. It came to its opinion upon considering the materials on record. Its recommendations were based also upon the legality of the charges under TADA in the fact situation obtaining in the case. It came to the conclusion that in committing the purported offence, the appellant inter alia had no intention to strike terror in people or any section of the people and in fact the murder had been committed only in view of group rivalry and because the parties intended to take revenge, and therefore, the provisions of TADA should not have been invoked. (Para 12)

Therefore, the application filed by the State for withdrawal of the charges under TADA against the appellant shall stand allowed. The designated Judge may now proceed with the matter in accordance with law. (Para 18)

While refusing to grant permission, the Designated Court was not correct in expressing its opinion on the merits of the matter and the effect of confessions made in terms of the provisions of TADA. It was also not necessary to consider as to whether the action of the Public Prosecutor as also the State was bona fide or not. Moreover, bona fide on the part of the Public Prosecutor itself cannot automatically lead to grant of consent. There are other circumstances also which are required to be taken into consideration. (Para 18). Vijaykumar Baldev Mishra v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 12 SCC 687: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 362: AIR 2008 SC 961: 2008 Cri LJ 1409.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha[1] and Markandey Katju[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 18-5-2007]

State v. Nalini, (1999) 5 SCC 253: 1999 SCC (Cri) 691, relied on

[3533] — S. 321 — Withdrawal from the prosecution on political reasons, if otherwise proper, held, valid — Ultimate discretion on Public Prosecutor though Government may give its suggestions, advice or guidance to him — Court's jurisdiction under, is supervisory and it has only to see if the PP has applied his independent mind in the broader interest of public justice and for that purpose can ascertain the reasons for the withdrawal move but cannot reappreciate the grounds of the same — CrPC, 1898 — S. 494

The PP is an officer of the court and therefore, responsible to it and has a duty to inform of his intention to withdraw from the prosecution. The court performs a supervisory function and has a special duty in granting its consent to the withdrawal. It has to appraise itself of the reasons which prompt the PP to withdraw from the prosecution. Its duty is not to reappreciate the grounds which led the PP to request the withdrawal but to consider whether the PP applied his mind as a free agent uninfluenced by irrelevant and extraneous considerations.

The PP may withdraw from the prosecution not merely on the ground of paucity of evidence but on other relevant grounds as well as in order to further the broad ends, of public justice, public order and peace which include appropriate social, economic and political purposes. It is not correct to argue that the criminal law of India does not recognise 'political offences'. Politics are about Government and therefore, a political offence is one committed with the object of changing the Government of a State or inducing it to change its policy. To say that an offence is of a political character is not to absolve the offender of the offence. But the question is, is it a valid ground for the Government to advise the PP to withdraw from the prosecution? . Rajender Kumar Jain v. State, (1980) 3 SCC 435: 1980 SCC (Cri) 757: AIR 1980 SC 1510: 1980 Cri LJ 1084: (1980) 17 ACC 201.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-1980]

[3534] — S. 321 — Withdrawal of charges under TADA — Public Prosecutor seeking consent of court on the sole basis of recommendation of Review Committee — Held, Designated Court rightly rejected the application — Public Prosecutor must satisfy himself that it is a fit case for withdrawal from prosecution — If the Public Prosecutor seeks court's consent on the basis of recommendation of Review Committee such recommendation must be based on a reason which permits withdrawal from prosecution — Court must give weight to the opinion formed by the Public Prosecutor on the basis of the recommendation of Review Committee — Mere existence of prima facie material to support framing of charge is not by itself sufficient for refusal to accord consent — Manner of disposal of an application for withdrawal of charges of offences under TADA pursuant to review of a case by the Review Committee indicated — Public Prosecutor permitted to file fresh application which the Designated Court must decide in accordance with law

In the instant case the Review Committee reviewed the prosecutions made under TADA Act and the Government conveyed its approval to the Director of Prosecution for deletion of charges under TADA Act in the specified criminal cases pending before the Designated Court. The Public Prosecutor filed applications in the Designated Court for withdrawal from prosecution in all those cases. The only reason assigned for withdrawal of charges under the TADA Act by the Public Prosecutor was the recommendation of the Review Committee. The Designated Court dismissed those applications taking the view that administrative decisions cannot interfere with the working of the judicial system. On appeal by special leave

Held :

The Designated Court was right in taking the view that withdrawal from prosecution is not to be permitted mechanically by the court on an application for that purpose made by the public prosecutor. It is equally clear that the public prosecutor also has not to act mechanically in the discharge of his statutory function under Section 321 CrPC on such a recommendation being made by the Review Committee; and that it is his duty as public prosecutor to satisfy himself that it is a fit case for withdrawal from prosecution before he seeks the consent of the court for that purpose.

The public prosecutor did not fully appreciate the requirements of Section 321 CrPC and made the applications for withdrawal from prosecution only on the basis of the recommendations of the Review Committee. It was necessary for the public prosecutor to satisfy himself in each case that the case is fit for withdrawal from prosecution in accordance with the settled principles indicated in the decisions of the Supreme Court and then to satisfy the Designated Court of the existence of a ground which permits withdrawal from prosecution under Section 321 CrPC.

If the recommendation of the Review Committee, based on the material present, is that resort to provisions of the TADA Act is unwarranted for any reason which permits withdrawal from prosecution for those offences, a suitable application made under Section 321 CrPC on that ground has to be considered and decided by the Designated Court giving due weight to the opinion formed by the public prosecutor on the basis of the recommendation of the High Power Committee.

The initial invocation of the stringent provisions of the TADA Act is itself subject to sanction of the Government and, therefore, the revised opinion of the Government formed on the basis of the recommendation of the High Power Committee after scrutiny of each case should not be lightly disregarded by the court except for weighty reasons such as mala fides or manifest arbitrariness. The worth of the material to support the charge under the TADA Act and the evidence which can be produced is likely to be known to the prosecuting agency and, therefore, mere existence of prima facie material to support the framing of the charge should not by itself be treated as sufficient to refuse the consent for withdrawal from prosecution. It is in this manner that an application made to withdraw the charges of offences under the TADA Act pursuant to review of a case by the Review Committee has to be considered and decided by the Designated Courts.

The applications made under Section 321 CrPC not having been decided on the basis indicated above, fresh applications made in all such cases pursuant to the recommendations of the Review Committee or the revised opinion of the Government have to be considered and decided by the Designated Courts in the manner indicated above. R.M. Tewari v. State (NCT of Delhi), (1996) 2 SCC 610: 1996 SCC (Cri) 361: AIR 1996 SC 2047.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: J.S. Verma and K. Venkataswami, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-2-1996]

State of Orissa v. Chandrika Mohapatra, (1976) 4 SCC 250: 1976 SCC (Cri) 584; Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1983) 1 SCC 438: 1983 SCC (Cri) 224, followed

Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899, explained

[3535] — S. 321 — Withdrawal of prosecution — Discretion as to — Who can exercise — Relevant factors for withdrawal — Held, discretion to withdraw from prosecution is that of Public Prosecutor and none else — Public Prosecutor cannot surrender that discretion to anyone — He may withdraw from prosecution not merely on ground of paucity of evidence but on other relevant factors as well in order to further the broad ends of justice, public order, peace and tranquillity (Para 14). Ghanshyam v. State of M.P., (2006) 10 SCC 473: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 602.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-9-2006]

[3536] — S. 321 — Withdrawal of prosecution — Matter within sole discretion of Public Prosecutor, who should independently form his opinion in the interests of administration of justice — District Magistrate or Superintendent of Police cannot order the Prosecutor to withdraw — Magistrate also should not yield to executive pressures — Duty of State to be sure in the first instance when launching prosecution. Balwant Singh v. State of Bihar, (1977) 4 SCC 448: 1977 SCC (Cri) 633: AIR 1977 SC 2265: 1977 Cri LJ 1935.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer, Jaswant Singh and D.A. Desai, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-10-1977]

[3537] — S. 321 — Withdrawal of prosecution — When can be allowed — Necessary considerations — Held, it must be permitted only when valid reasons are made out for the same — Can be allowed only in the interest of justice — Hence, court to consider all relevant circumstances and find out whether the withdrawal of prosecution would advance the cause of justice — Discretion under S. 321 should not be exercised to stifle the prosecution — Withdrawal can be permitted if the case is likely to end in an acquittal and the continuance of the case is only causing severe harassment to the accused — Also, can be allowed if it is likely to bury the dispute and bring about harmony between the parties — In the present case reason given by High Court for allowing withdrawal of case, not correct — Further, when the case was about to be over the same should not have been allowed to be withdrawn by holding that the trial had been pending for over seven years — Held, High Court's order not legally sustainable — Hence, set aside

Every crime is an offence against the society and if the accused committed an offence, society demands that he should be punished. Punishing the person who perpetrated the crime is an essential requirement for the maintenance of law and order and peace in the society. Therefore, the withdrawal of the prosecution shall be permitted only when valid reasons are made out for the same. (Para 10)

The law is very clear that the withdrawal of prosecution can be allowed only in the interest of justice. Even if the Government directs the Public Prosecutor to withdraw the prosecution and an application is filed to that effect, the court must consider all relevant circumstances and find out whether the withdrawal of prosecution would advance the cause of justice. If the case is likely to end in an acquittal and the continuance of the case is only causing severe harassment to the accused, the court may permit withdrawal of the prosecution. Also, if the withdrawal of prosecution is likely to bury the dispute and bring about harmony between the parties and it would be in the best interest of justice, the court may allow the withdrawal of prosecution. The discretion under Section 321 is to be carefully exercised by the court having due regard to all the relevant facts and shall not be exercised to stifle the prosecution which is being done at the instance of the aggrieved parties or the State for redressing their grievance. (Para 10)

Not many reasons are given in the impugned order as to why the Court allowed the withdrawal of the prosecution under Section 321. It is only stated that looking at the facts and circumstances of the case, permission should have been granted for withdrawal as the petitioner therein had been harassed mentally and suffered continuously for seven years during the trial. The fact that the trial was not over and the case was posted for the examination of the accused was not noticed by the High Court. In the application filed by the Public Prosecutor, the only reason given for withdrawal of the prosecution was that the accused was not a habitual criminal and, therefore, the prosecution must be withdrawn. In these circumstances, the order passed by the High Court permitting the withdrawal of the prosecution is not legally sustainable. The reason given by the learned Single Judge in the impugned order is not correct, and when the case was about to be over the same should not have been allowed to be withdrawn by holding that the trial had been pending for over seven years. (Paras 4, 5 and 11). Rahul Agarwal v. Rakesh Jain, (2005) 2 SCC 377: 2005 SCC (Cri) 506: AIR 2005 SC 910: 2005 Cri LJ 963.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-1-2005]

State of Bihar v. Ram Naresh Pandey, 1957 SCR 279: AIR 1957 SC 389: 1957 Cri LJ 567; State of Orissa v. Chandrika Mohapatra, (1976) 4 SCC 250: 1976 SCC (Cri) 584; Balwant Singh v. State of Bihar, (1977) 4 SCC 448: 1977 SCC (Cri) 633; Abdul Karim v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 710: 2001 SCC (Cri) 59, relied on [3538] — S. 321 — Withdrawal of prosecution on ground of paucity of evidence — Held, where grounds for withdrawal of prosecution found to be non-existent and there being prima facie material to support the prosecution, motive for launching the prosecution immaterial. V.S. Achuthanandan v. R. Balakrishna Pillai, (1994) 4 SCC 299: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1185: AIR 1995 SC 436.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: J.S. Verma, B.P. Jeevan Reddy and S.P. Bharucha, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-1994]

[3539] — S. 321 — Withdrawal of the prosecution — Rule for according permission restated — Held, expediency cannot, but lack of evidence can be, good ground for withdrawal — High Court not justified in suo motu interfering with accord of consent by Magistrate based on his examination of the case-diary. State of Orissa v. Chandrika Mohapatra, (1976) 4 SCC 250: 1976 SCC (Cri) 584: AIR 1977 SC 903: 1977 Cri LJ 773.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-8-1976]

[3540] — S. 321 — Order of Chief Judicial Magistrate, as affirmed by High Court, granting permission for withdrawal of prosecution — Not interfered with by Supreme Court under Art. 136 in public interest on the finding that no useful purpose would be served in setting aside the order in view of no chance of ultimate conviction and resulting harassment to parties and wastage of public time — Constitution of India — Article 136

The incident is dated April 2, 1974. The first information report has been registered suo motu by the police in November 1977 — after a gap of more than 3 1/2 years. The victims of the injuries were also accused of criminal offences said to have taken place at the same point of time and were produced before the Judicial Magistrate of Bhiwani on April 3, 1974. The Judicial Magistrate enlarged them on bail and finding injuries on their persons directed them to be medically examined. There is no material before Supreme Court to show that the victims had complained to the Judicial Magistrate that the accused persons were the authors of the injuries on them. For the first time, witnesses to the occurrence were examined towards the end of 1977 and beginning of 1978 during investigation. One of the accused persons happens to be the son of a political figure wielding influence. But this fact did not deter the Judicial Magistrate in ordering release of the victims who had been produced before him as accused persons. The Magistrate also made an order for their medical examination and that was carried out. There was no justification as to why a private complaint was not made contemporaneously and the matter had to wait for 3 1/2 years for investigation on the basis of the first information report.

A period of more than 14 months intervened between the occurrence and the promulgation of emergency.

A Commission was set up after the emergency had ended and holding a fresh elections, a different political party had come to power. Following the report of the Commission this prosecution had been launched. The finding of the Commission is not evidenced and no conviction can lie on the conclusion either. In these circumstances, chances of conviction are too far-fetched and bleak. It is not in public interest that the prosecution should proceed. In a report under S. 173(8) of the Code, the investigating agency has also indicated that adequate evidence has not been forthcoming to support the prosecution. It is thus not necessary to examine the legal aspect. Tek Chand v. Tek Chand, Supdt. of Police, 1986 Supp SCC 533: 1987 SCC (Cri) 163: AIR 1987 SC 349.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Ranganath Misra and G.L. Oza, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-11-1986]

[3541] — Ss. 321, 227, 239 and 397 — Supreme Court's interference with grant of consent for withdrawal from prosecution against former Chief Minister — Prosecution permitted to be withdrawn under S. 321 Criminal Procedure Code by order of trial court, revision under S. 397 Criminal Procedure Code against that order dismissed by High Court and appeal under Art. 136 also dismissed by Supreme Court — In review petition under Art. 137 Supreme Court finding error apparent on the face of record and ordering rehearing — Interference on facts whether justified

Respondent 2 was the Chief Minister of Bihar at the material time. Respondent 3, who was a close friend of respondent 2, was Chairman of a cooperative bank. There were certain allegations of irregularities in the bank account. When the Government headed by respondent 2 was defeated in the mid-term poll and the opposition party came into power, charge-sheets were filed against the respondents and other employees of the bank. The charge against the second respondent was that he, who at all material times, was either a Minister or the Chief Minister of Bihar abusing his position as a public servant, in conspiracy with the other accused, sought to interfere with the criminal prosecution and surcharge proceedings against respondents and others with a view to obtain to himself and to the other respondents pecuniary advantage to the detriment of the bank. Subsequently, there was again a change of ministry in Bihar as a result of which respondent 2 once again became Chief Minister. In a cabinet meeting presided over by respondent 2 a policy decision was taken that criminal cases launched out of political vendetta and cases relating to political agitation be withdrawn. The Government appointed a Special Public Prosecutor and on the Government's advice he moved an application under S. 321 CrPC before Chief Judicial Magistrate seeking court's permission to withdraw from prosecution of the respondents on four grounds: (a) Lack of prospect of successful prosecution in the light of the evidence, (b) Implication of the persons as a result of political and personal vendetta, (c) Inexpediency of the prosecution for the reasons of the State and public policy and (d) Adverse effects that the continuance of the prosecution would bring on public interest in the light of the changed situation. The Magistrate gave the consent sought. A criminal revision filed before the High Court was dismissed in limine. The appellant thereupon filed an appeal before Supreme Court under Art. 136. A bench of three Judges of the Court by a majority of 2:1 dismissed the appeal [reported at (1983) 1 SCC 438]. The appellant preferred a review petition before the Court. Since by that time one of the Judges who was a party to the decision in the appeal had demitted office, another Judge had to be replaced. This bench by its order [(1983) 4 SCC 104] admitted the review petition without expressly setting aside the appellate order and ordered rehearing as according to the Court there were errors apparent on the face of the record. The Court, however, deliberately refrained from expressing any reasons. The appeal was to be reheard immediately after the decision in Nandini Satpathy cases [(1987) 1 SCC 269 and (1987) 1 SCC 279]. Accordingly the present case came up before the Constitution Bench of 5 Judges.

Per Khalid and Natarajan, JJ.

The Supreme Court will not allow itself to be converted into a court of facts and evidence. When the Magistrate states in his order that he has considered the materials, it is not proper for Supreme Court not to accept that statement. The proper thing to do is to hold that the Magistrate gave consent on objective consideration of the relevant aspects of the case. It would be acting against the mandate of S. 321 to find fault with the Magistrate in such cases, unless the order discloses that the Magistrate has failed to consider whether the application is made in good faith, in the interest of public policy and justice and not to thwart or stifle the process of law. In this case the application for withdrawal by the Public Prosecutor has been made in good faith after careful consideration of the materials placed before him and the order of consent given by the Magistrate was also after due consideration of various details. It would be improper for the Supreme Court, keeping in view the scheme of S. 321, to embark upon a detailed inquiry into the facts and evidence of the case or to direct re-trial for that would be destructive of the object and intent of the section.

Per Venkataramiah, J.

If the case has been withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor for good reason with the consent of the court, Supreme Court should be slow to interfere with the order of withdrawal. If the Special Judge had rejected the application for withdrawal and the High Court had affirmed that order, Supreme Court may not have interfered with that order under Art. 136. Even if the Special Judge had permitted the withdrawal but the High Court had reversed that order, the Supreme Court may not have interfered with the orders of the High Court. But this is a case where the Special Judge had permitted the withdrawal of the prosecution and the said order of withdrawal had been affirmed by the High Court as well as by the majority judgment pronounced by the Supreme Court earlier. In absence of any strong and compelling reasons which require interference with the order permitting withdrawal, Supreme Court on review should not interfere with the order permitting the withdrawal of the case.

In the appeal under Art. 136 all the other Judges who have dealt with the case on merits from the Special Judge onwards, except Tulzapurkar, J., have opined that the permission was properly given for withdrawal. In the circumstances, it is difficult to take a different view in this case. The review petition was admitted after the appeal had been dismissed only because Nandini Satpathy cases had been subsequently referred to a larger Bench to review the earlier decisions. When the earlier decisions were allowed to remain intact, there was no justification to reverse the decision of Supreme Court by which the appeal had already been dismissed. There was no warrant for this extraordinary procedure to be adopted in this case. The reversal of the earlier judgment of Supreme Court by this process strikes at the finality of judgments of Supreme Court and would amount to the abuse of the power of review vested in Supreme Court, particularly in a criminal case. No other court in the country has been given the power of review in criminal cases. The majority judgment of Baharul Islam and R.B. Misra, JJ. should remain undisturbed. This case cannot be converted into an appeal against its earlier decision.

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J.

Where the question is of purity of public administration in present day conditions, Supreme Court should regard as its bounden duty to examine carefully whenever it is alleged that a prosecution for an offence of corruption or criminal breach of trust by a person holding high public office has been wrongly withdrawn and it should not matter at all as to how many Judges in the High Court or the lower court have been party to the granting of such consent for withdrawal. In the instant case order granting consent for withdrawal of the prosecution was made by the Chief Judicial Magistrate and it was upheld by the High Court and two out of three Judges of the bench of Supreme Court which initially heard the appeal agreed with the view taken by the High Court but the fact that according to the Review Bench which also consisted of three Judges, there was an error apparent on the face of the record in the judgment of the earlier Bench, cannot be overlooked. The mathematics of numbers cannot therefore be invoked for the purpose of persuading Supreme Court not to exercise its discretion under Art. 136. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[3542] — Ss. 321, 227 and 239 — Grant of permission to withdraw from prosecution does not amount to discharge of the accused

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J. (minority view)

Although the effect of withdrawal of the prosecution is that the accused stands discharged in respect of the offences for which he is sought to be prosecuted but in this case it is not an order of discharge. The analogy of an order of discharge made under S. 227 or S. 239 CrPC is not apposite. Under S. 321 the Magistrate performs a totally different judicial exercise by granting consent for withdrawal of the prosecution. Therefore, when the High Court sets aside the order of the Magistrate granting consent to withdrawal of the prosecution, it does not really sets aside an order of discharge made by the Magistrate. The High Court only holds that the withdrawal from the prosecution was incorrect or improper and that the prosecution should proceed against the accused and ultimately if there is not sufficient evidence or the charges are groundless, the accused may still be discharged. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[3543] — Ss. 321, 228, 240 & 173 — Prosecution if can be withdrawn on ground of insufficient or no evidence even after framing of charges

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J. (minority view)

Though the prosecution can be withdrawn at any stage, even after the framing of the charge, when under S. 228 or 240, CrPC court after applying its mind to the material consisting of the police report and the documents sent with it under S. 173 comes to a conclusion that a prima facie case has been made out against the accused and the charge should therefore be framed, it would not be competent for the Public Prosecutor, once the charge is framed, to apply for withdrawal of the prosecution on the ground that the same material which was before the court when it framed the charge is not sufficient to sustain the prosecution. It is not possible on the same material to permit the Public Prosecutor to make a volte face so as to persuade the court to hold that there is not sufficient evidence to sustain the prosecution. However, if some material has subsequently come to light which throws doubt on the veracity of the prosecution case the Public Prosecutor can certainly apply for withdrawal on the ground that the prosecution is not well-founded. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

Balwant Singh v. State of Bihar, (1977) 4 SCC 448: 1977 SCC (Cri) 633 and Bansi Lal v. Chandan Lal, (1976) 1 SCC 421: 1976 SCC (Cri) 39, relied on

[3544] — Ss. 321 & 239 — Prosecution if can be withdrawn on ground of insufficient or no evidence where charge-sheet filed but charge not framed in a warrant case instituted on police report

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J. (minority view)

Where a charge-sheet has been filed but charge has not been framed in a warrant case instituted on police report the Public Prosecutor should not be entitled to make an application for withdrawal from the prosecution on the ground that there is insufficient or no evidence in support of the prosecution. The matter should be left to the Court to consider the same issue under S. 239 and it will most certainly further or advance the cause of public justice if the court examines the issue under S. 239 and gives its reasons for discharging the accused after a judicial consideration of the material before it, rather than allow the prosecution to be withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor. Instead of the prosecution being withdrawn and taken out of the ken of judicial scrutiny the judicial verdict based on assessment and evaluation of the material before the court will always inspire greater confidence. The guiding consideration in all these cases is the imperative of public justice and it is absolutely essential that justice must not only be done but also appear to be done. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[3545] — Ss. 321, 378 and 386 — Appeal against acquittal dismissed by High Court as State wanted to withdraw that appeal — Legality of dismissal of appeal challenged — Held, since on merits judgment of acquittal does not call for any interference no purpose would be served to go into legal questions raised by appellant. Nawab Ali v. State of Meghalaya, 1990 Supp SCC 653: 1991 SCC (Cri) 155.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-3-1988]

[3546] — Ss. 321, 397 and 401 — Every citizen has locus standi to oppose withdrawal from prosecution and on failing, to file a revision before HC failing which file an appeal to the Supreme Court — Constitution of India — Arts. 134 and 136

Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J.

Any citizen can lodge a first information report or file a complaint and set the machinery of the criminal law in motion and his locus standi to do so cannot be questioned. Therefore, a citizen who finds that a prosecution for an offence against the society is being wrongly withdrawn, can oppose such withdrawal. If he can be a complainant or initiator of criminal prosecution, he should equally be entitled to oppose withdrawal of the criminal prosecution which has already been initiated at his instance. If the offence for which a prosecution is being launched is an offence against the society and not merely an individual wrong, any member of the society must have locus to initiate a prosecution as also to resist withdrawal of such prosecution, if initiated.

In the present case the offences charged against a former Chief Minister of a State were offences of corruption, criminal breach of trust etc. and therefore, any person who is interested in cleanliness of public administration and public morality would be entitled to file a complaint and equally he would be entitled to oppose the withdrawal of such prosecution if it is already instituted. Since the appellant, an MLA, was entitled to oppose the withdrawal of prosecution, on the turning down of his opposition by the Chief Judicial Magistrate he was entitled to prefer a revision application to the High Court and on the High Court rejecting his revision application he had standing to prefer an appeal to the Supreme Court. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[3547] — Ss. 321 and 397 — Scope of High Court's power of revision and Supreme Court's power of interference under Art. 136 against the trial court's order under S. 321 — Constitution of India — Article 136

Per Baharul Islam, J.

An order under S. 321 does not have the same status as an order of conviction or acquittal recorded by a trial or appellate court in a criminal prosecution, inasmuch as the former has not been made appealable. An order under S. 321 has a narrower scope. As the order is judicial, the trial court is expected to give reasons for according or refusing its consent to the withdrawal. The duty of the court is to see that the grounds of withdrawal are legally valid and the application made by the Public Prosecutor is bona fide and is not collusive. In revision of an order under S. 321 of the Code, the duty of the High Court is to see that the consideration by the trial court of the application under S. 321 was not misdirected and that the grounds of withdrawal are legally valid.

The normal practice of the Supreme Court in a criminal appeal by special leave under Art. 136 of the Constitution directed against an order of conviction or acquittal is that Supreme Court does not pursue the evidence on record and reappreciate it to find whether findings of facts recorded by the courts below are correct or erroneous, far less does it peruse the Police Diary to see whether adequate materials were collected by the investigating agency. It accepts the findings of the courts below unless it is shown that the findings are the results of a wrong application of the principles of law and that the impugned order has resulted in grave miscarriage of justice.

Per Misra, J.

All that the Supreme Court has to see is that the Public Prosecutor was not actuated by extraneous or improper considerations while moving the application for withdrawal from the prosecution. Even if it is possible to have another view different from the one taken by the Public Prosecutor while moving the application for withdrawal from prosecution Supreme Court should be reluctant to interfere with the order unless it comes to the conclusion that the Public Prosecutor has not applied his mind to the facts and circumstances of the case, and has simply acted at the behest of the Government or has been actuated by extraneous and improper considerations. If the view of the Public Prosecutor is one, which could in the circumstances be taken by any reasonable man, the court cannot substitute its own opinion for that of the Public Prosecutor by making a roving enquiry into the evidence and materials on the record. That would virtually convert the Court into an appellate court sitting on judgment.

Normally the observation made by the Court that it has perused the relevant records of the case should be presumed to be correct unless a very strong case is made out for holding that it did not do so and the vaunted remark made by the Court that it has done so is incorrect.

Per Tulzapurkar, J. (dissenting)

The trial court's supervisory function of either granting or refusing to grant the permission is a judicial function. Therefore, the same is liable to correction by the High Court under its revisional powers both under the old as well as the present Code of Criminal Procedure, and naturally the Supreme Court would have at least co-extensive jurisdiction with the High Court in an appeal preferred to it by special leave or upon a certificate by the High Court.

The High Court erred in simply putting its seal on the trial court's order. Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1983) 1 SCC 438: 1983 SCC (Cri) 224: AIR 1983 SC 194: 1983 Cri LJ 348.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.D. Tulzapurkar[1], Baharul Islam[2] and R.B. Misra[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1982]

[3548] — Ss. 321 and 397 — Untenability of order permitting withdrawal found in revision or appeal — Preventing adverse effect on losing party — Held, in revision the High Court or in appeal the Supreme Court may have to go into the evidence on record to find a prima facie case for refusing consent for withdrawal if there is no other ground for reversing the order under S. 321 permitting withdrawal. (Per Bhagwati, C.J. and Oza, J.). Sheonandan Paswan v. State of Bihar, (1987) 1 SCC 288: 1987 SCC (Cri) 82: AIR 1987 SC 877: 1987 Cri LJ 793.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J.[1] and E.S. Venkataramiah[2], V. Khalid[3], G.L. Oza[1] and S. Natarajan[4], JJ. [Date of decision: 20-12-1986]

[3549] — Ss. 321, 4 and 5 — Procedure under S. 321, held, not applicable to deemed withdrawal of cases in terms of S. 2(3)(a), Prevention of Terrorism (Repeal) Act, 2004 in which cognizance had been taken by the court — Provision in S. 2(3) for deemed withdrawal of cases in which cognizance had been taken by the court — Inapplicability of S. 321 CrPC to — Held, (per curiam), the said provision is not subject to the procedure contemplated in S. 321 CrPC — Per K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and Raveendran, J., the role of Public Prosecutor in such a case would be limited to bring the Review Committee's direction to the notice of the court which would then, on satisfying itself as to whether such opinion was in fact rendered but without resorting to judicial review thereof, record that the case stood withdrawn — Plain meaning of the words given effect to — Rule against redundancy applied — However, repelling the apprehension that in such a case there would be no remedy in the event of a wrong opinion of the Review Committee, held, a person aggrieved by such opinion still had the remedy of judicial review under Art. 226 of the Constitution — Per Bhandari, J. (concurring), POTA (Repeal), 2004 is a special Act and therefore prevails over a general Act, such as CrPC — Moreover, Ss. 4 and 5 CrPC themselves allow Parliament to deviate from CrPC when necessary — Subjecting the Review Committee's decision to S. 321 CrPC would produce an absurd result and would go against the objective of POTA (Repeal), 2004 contained in its SOR — Remedy of judicial review under Arts. 226 and 136 of Constitution is still available to persons aggrieved by the Review Committee's decision to withdraw cases — Constitution of India — Arts. 226 and 136 — Prevention of Terrorism (Repeal) Act, 2004 — S. 2(3)(a) and Statement of Objects and Reasons (SOR)

The relatives of some persons killed in the Godhra train burning incident and in the Akshardham Temple attack challenged the constitutionality of the provisions of Sections 2(3) & (5) of the Prevention of Terrorism (Repeal) Act, 2004 (the repealing Act) before the Gujarat High Court. The High Court upheld the constitutionality of the said provisions but added that Section 2(3) of the said Act had not dispensed with the requirements of Section 321 CrPC; and where the Review Committee, in regard to any case where cognizance had been taken by the court, held that there was no prima facie case for proceeding against the accused under the provisions of POTA, such opinion of the Review Committee would not have the effect of deemed withdrawal of the case from the court until the procedure prescribed in Section 321 CrPC was complied with. That when the said procedure was complied with, the Special Court would pass appropriate orders by giving due weightage to the opinion of the Review Committee. The relatives of the victims then filed one of the present two sets of appeals by special leave.

The other set of the present appeals was filed by persons charged in respect of offences under the provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism Act, 2002 in terrorism related cases. They were aggrieved by the Gujarat High Court's direction to read Section 2(3) of the repealing Act subject to Section 321 CrPC. Moreover, they challenged other judgments of the said High Court and the judgment of the Bombay High Court which had followed the said decision.

Initially, the present appeals came up before a two-Judge Bench in Mahmadhusen Abdulrahim Kalota Shaikh (1), (2009) 2 SCC 47, which referred them to the present three-Judge Bench.

Before the Supreme Court, the relatives of the victims contended that Sections 2(3) and 2(5) of the repealing Act were unconstitutional as they amounted to encroachment on the judicial power of the State. Alternatively, they supported the decision of the High Court and contended that once the Special Judge took cognizance of the offence, the proceedings could be withdrawn only under Section 321 CrPC. That the Review Committee being purely a committee appointed by the executive, had no right to determine the innocence or otherwise of an accused. They expressed an apprehension that if the Review Committee reached a wrong opinion there would be no remedy. They pointed out that if Section 321 CrPC was applicable, there would at least be a judicial scrutiny before the opinion resulted in withdrawal.

The POTA accused contended that once the Review Committee held that there was no prima facie case to continue the proceedings against the accused, the case should, by virtue of Section 2(3) of the repealing Act, be deemed to have been withdrawn w.e.f. the date of issuance of the direction by such Review Committee. That in such cases, Section 321 CrPC would have no application and there was neither any need for the Public Prosecutor to file any application for withdrawal from prosecution, nor any need or occasion for the court to consider whether consent should be given for such withdrawal from prosecution.

The State of Gujarat contended that the High Court had rightly held that Section 2(3) of the repealing Act did not dispense with the requirements of Section 321 CrPC for withdrawal and that after the Review Committee formed an opinion, the same would have to be placed before the court by the Public Prosecutor with an application and the court would have to independently consider such application and come to a conclusion whether it should consent to the prosecution being withdrawn or not.

The Union of India submitted that the power exercised by the Review Committee under Section 2(3) of the repealing Act, though not subject to the supervising power of the Special Court under Section 321 CrPC, was amenable to the power of judicial review of the High Court under Article 226. That thus there were adequate safeguards against any misuse or abuse of power by the Review Committee under Section 2(3).

Partly allowing the appeals of the POTA accused and granting to the relatives of victims liberty to challenge the opinions of the Review Committee wherever they were aggrieved,

Held :

Per K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and Raveendran, J.

Parliament in its plenary power, can make an outright repeal which will not only destroy the effectiveness of the repealed Act in future, but also operate to destroy all existing inchoate rights and pending proceedings. That is because the effect of repealing a statute is to obliterate it completely from the record, except to the extent of savings. If Parliament specifically excludes any saving clause in a repealing Act, or severely abridges the provision for savings, which it has the power to do, the effect would be that after the repeal of the statute, no proceeding can continue, nor can any punishment be inflicted for violation of the statute during its currency. (Para 36)

When Parliament has the power to repeal a law outright without any savings and thereby put an end to all pending prosecutions and proceedings forthwith (without any need to comply with Section 321 CrPC), it would also have the power to make a provision in the repealing Act for the pending proceeding to continue, but those proceedings to come to an end, when a duly constituted Review Committee with a sitting or retired Judge of the High Court as Chairman, reviews the cases registered under the repealed Act and reaches the opinion that there is no prima facie case for proceeding against the accused. Surely, the wider and larger power includes the narrower and smaller power. The continuation of a proceedings in respect of any offence under an Act, after the repeal of such Act, is itself as a result of a deeming fiction. The natural consequence of repeal is complete obliteration including pending proceedings. Continuation of a pending proceeding is possible only on account of the deeming fiction created by the savings clause in the repealing Act which provides for continuation of the proceedings as if the principal Act had not been repealed. Therefore, any provision in the repealing Act for saving a pending proceeding, with any further provision for termination of such pending proceedings, is a provision relating to "winding-up" matters connected with the repealed Act. By no stretch of imagination can such a provision be termed as interference with judicial power, even assuming that such a provision in a live unrepealed statute may be considered as interference with judicial power. It is, therefore, unnecessary to examine whether Section 2(3) of the repealing Act is an encroachment of judicial power. (Paras 37 and 53)

Many tests applied for deciding the constitutional validity of live and current statutes may not apply to "winding-up" provisions in a savings clause of a repealing Act dealing with repeal. Parliament has the legislative competence to make the repealing Act. The repealing Act repeals POTA and provides for certain savings from repeal to meet the special features of the repealed statute. It does not violate any constitutional provisions. Hence the repealing Act and in particular Sections 2(3) and 2(5) thereof are valid and constitutional. [Paras 38 and 52(i)]

Section 2(3) of the repealing Act does not contemplate or provide for compliance with Section 321 CrPC before the withdrawal comes into effect. The clear intention of Section 2(3) of the repealing Act is that when the Review Committee opines that there is no prima facie case for proceeding against the accused, on review of the pending POTA cases, such cases, even though cognizance has been taken by the court, shall be deemed to have been withdrawn without anything further to be done. In view of expression of such clear legislative intent in Section 2(3) of the repealing Act, there is no question of bringing Section 321 CrPC into play. If Section 321 is held to be applicable, then the provision in Section 2(3) that the cases shall be deemed to be withdrawn, is rendered nugatory and the cases are not actually withdrawn until the requirements of Section 321 are complied with. That would amount to rewriting Section 2(3), which is clearly impermissible. (Para 41)

If Parliament wanted to make the provisions of Section 2(3) of the repealing Act subject to Section 321 CrPC it would have been done by making appropriate provisions therefor. As that is not done, the plain meaning of the words of the legislation has to be given effect to. (Para 48)

Section 2(3) of the repealing Act also contains clear indications which exclude Section 321 CrPC. They are: (i) the review is by the Review Committee with a sitting or retired Judge of the High Court as the Chairman, having the power of a civil court in respect of discovery and production of documents and requisitioning records; (ii) all cases registered under POTA are required to be reviewed irrespective of whether any application was made by an aggrieved person or not, so as to find out whether there was a prima facie case for proceeding against the accused under POTA; (iii) Section 2(3) clearly provides that where a Review Committee opines that there was no prima facie case for proceeding against the accused, cases pending in court also should be deemed to have been withdrawn w.e.f. the date of issuance of such direction by the Review Committee. The wording is clear and unambiguous and does not contemplate or provide for a further application of mind by the Public Prosecutor or grant of consent by the court under Section 321 CrPC. [Paras 49 and 52(ii)]

The opinion of the Review Committee is open to judicial review under Article 226 of the Constitution. Any person aggrieved by the opinion can challenge it in a writ petition. As long as an aggrieved person can challenge the opinion expressed by the Review Committee by invoking judicial review, the apprehension that there would be no remedy in the event of wrong opinion by the Review Committee, is unwarranted. The opinions of the Review Committee under Section 2(3) of the repealing Act are limited in number and are required to be given as a one-time measure with reference to a repealed statute. The availability of judicial review under Article 226 in the event of errors and abuse, is a sufficient safeguard and deterrent against any wrongdoing by the Review Committee. The appeals by the relatives of victims are disposed of reserving liberty to challenge the opinions of the Review Committee, wherever they are aggrieved. [Paras 50 and 52(iii)]

Therefore, it is held that once the Review Committee on review under Section 2(3) of the repealing Act, expresses the opinion that there is no prima facie case for proceeding against the accused, in cases in which cognizance has been taken by the court, such cases shall be deemed to have been withdrawn. The only role of the Public Prosecutor in the matter is to bring to the notice of the court, the direction of the Review Committee. The court on satisfying itself as to whether such an opinion was rendered, will have to record that the case stands withdrawn by virtue of Section 2(3) of the repealing Act. The court will not examine the correctness or propriety of the opinion nor exercise any supervisory jurisdiction in regard to such an opinion of the Review Committee. But, if the opinion of the Review Committee is challenged by any aggrieved party in writ proceedings and is set aside, the court where the proceedings were pending, will continue with the case as if there had been no such opinion. (Para 51)

Per Dalveer Bhandari, J. (concurring)

While Section 321 CrPC itself does not apply to POTA, the principle of judicial review embodied therein does. In other words, Section 321 CrPC is a codified version of judicial review. At the trial court level, Section 321 CrPC ensures that the judiciary makes the final decision by approving the Public Prosecutor's decision to withdraw a case. Even if Section 321 CrPC is made inapplicable by a special law like POTA (Repeal), 2004 or POTA, 2002, judicial review still applies. Section 321 CrPC is a general provision that can be subjected to special laws. (Paras 65 and 63)

A violation of judicial review is another way of saying that the separation of powers between the principal three organs of the State has been violated. Judicial review forms part of the basic structure of the Constitution. And when judicial review is removed—even at the trial court level—the question becomes one of degree: has the basic structure been destroyed? The short answer is that because POTA (Repeal), 2004 has not removed judicial review under Article 226 or Article 136, the basic structure has not been destroyed. (Para 66)

The courts' powers to grant consent to a prosecutor's request to withdraw exits in the absence of Section 321 CrPC. The court's decision to grant consent to an application for withdrawal is a judicial function. If it is granted, the case is over. Resolving legal disputes is the core function of the judiciary. The power to take a final decision once a case is before a court, irrespective of the stage at which the determination is made, should rest with the Judge. To the extent POTA (Repeal), 2004 takes this decision away from the Judge, it implicates the basic structure doctrine. (Para 67)

Separation of powers is a part of the basic structure of the Constitution of India. However, the Constitution does not envisage a strict separation of powers. There is separation by necessary implication. (Paras 70 to 72)

Even a ruling wherein prima facie cases are withdrawn, the decision to withdraw is final and terminates the case in favour of the accused. A case has thus been decided. The question regarding the Review Committee's competence to decide the court case loses some relevance when one considers that the aggrieved party could still file an appeal against such a decision. Nevertheless, the Review Committee is an executive body that is making a judicial decision. The executive appoints the Review Committee. A majority of its members belong to the executive branch. Under POTA (Repeal), 2004, the executive's Review Committee has the power to decide cases. Thus, judicial review has been implicated. Given that judicial review forms part of the basic structure, it has to be determined if POTA (Repeal), 2004 has gone too far. (Paras 79 and 80)

Under POTA (Repeal), 2004, a portion of judicial review has been removed. The trial court no longer has the power to override the Review Committee's decision to withdraw, as it would have had under Section 321 CrPC. But that is not as drastic as it sounds, given that the Review Committee's job is to act as a filter. Where there is obviously no case against the accused, the Review Committee should withdraw the case. Where there is some evidence that suggests that a case against the accused might exist, the Review Committee must allow the proceedings to continue. (Para 89)

A violation of separation of powers need not rise to the level under the provisions at issue in Raj Narain, 1975 Supp SCC 1, Minerva Mills Ltd., (1980) 3 SCC 625, L. Chandra Kumar, (1997) 3 SCC 261 and I.R. Coelho, (2007) 2 SCC 1 before the Supreme Court will consider it an abrogation of the basic structure. (Para 91)

Those who are aggrieved by the Review Committee's decision to withdraw still have judicial recourse under Article 226 of the Constitution. Under that article, it may take appropriate steps in the High Court (or in the Supreme Court) against the Review Committee's decision to withdraw. One cannot say that the aggrieved parties are without a remedy, when those parties can approach the High Court (or the Supreme Court). The High Court should examine the aggrieved parties' cases, if those parties choose to contest the Review Committee's decision to withdraw. POTA (Repeal), 2004 does not strip the higher judiciary of judicial review. As such, POTA (Repeal), 2004 survives. In this view of the matter, the basic principle of separation of power is not violated. (Paras 90 to 92 and 103)

In addition, POTA (Repeal), 2004 is a special Act that trumps a general Act such as CrPC. This is consistent with the general principle of statutory interpretation. What is more, CrPC itself in Sections 4 and 5 allows Parliament to deviate from CrPC when necessary. CrPC says that it is a general law that is subject to special laws. The provisions of the special law must prevail and CrPC must give way. (Paras 94 to 97)

The Statement of Objects and Reasons of POTA (Repeal), 2004 expressly says that it is special. POTA, like TADA before, deviates from the general criminal codes (IPC, 1860 and CrPC, 1973) and provides special substantive and procedural rules for acts of terrorism. It was first reasoned by the legislature that harsher laws were necessary to combat and deter terrorism. (Para 98)

Inserting Section 321 CrPC itself into POTA (Repeal), 2004 defies logic and produces an absurd result. "The object of the construction of a statute being to ascertain the will of the legislature, it may be presumed that neither injustice nor absurdity was intended." (Para 101)

The Statement of Objects and Reasons of POTA (Repeal), 2004 gives guidance in two areas. First, the allegations of misuse of POTA, 2002 were directed at some of the State Governments. That is relevant because it shows that Parliament wanted a mechanism by which it could reverse the State Governments' alleged misuse of POTA, 2002. Subjecting the Central Review Committee's decision to the will of the State Government's Public Prosecutor, as is done when Section 321 CrPC applies, clearly goes against the very objective of POTA (Repeal), 2004. (Para 102). Mahmadhusen Abdulrahim Kalota Shaikh (2) v. Union of India, (2009) 2 SCC 1.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J.[1] and R.V. Raveendran[1] and Dalveer Bhandari[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 21-10-2008]

Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899; Kathi Raning Rawat v. State of Saurashtra, AIR 1952 SC 123: 1952 SCR 435; Special Courts Bill, 1978, In re, (1979) 1 SCC 380, relied on

G.P. Singh: Principles of Statutory Interpretation, 11th Edn., p. 633; Constitution Assembly Debates, Vol. VII, p. 959; Julius Stone: Social Dimensions of Law and Justice, (1966) p. 668; G.P. Singh: Principles of Statutory Interpretation, 11th Edn., 2008, p. 129, referred to

Govt. of T.N. v. Union of India, (2004) 1 CTC 641; Indira Nehru Gandhi v. Raj Narain, 1975 Supp SCC 1; Minerva Mills Ltd. v. Union of India, (1980) 3 SCC 625; L. Chandra Kumar v. Union of India, (1997) 3 SCC 261: 1997 SCC (L&S) 577; I.R. Coelho v. State of T.N., (2007) 2 SCC 1, distinguished

Indira Nehru Gandhi v. Raj Narain, 1975 Supp SCC 1; Minerva Mills Ltd. v. Union of India, (1980) 3 SCC 625; L. Chandra Kumar v. Union of India, (1997) 3 SCC 261: 1997 SCC (L&S) 577; I.R. Coelho v. State of T.N., (2007) 2 SCC 1, considered

Harbans Singh v. State, AIR 1953 All 179; Kirpa Ram v. Ram Asrey, AIR 1951 All 414, impliedly approved

— S. 323 See also S. 347, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1167 in Vol. 2

— S. 323 See Ss. 190, 198-A, 209, 239, 240, 242 and 323

See also Ss. 209, 323 and 465(1)

[3550] — Ss. 323 and 209 — Commitment of cross-cases to Sessions Court — Power of Magistrate regarding — Where one of the counter-cases involved an offence triable by Sessions Court but the other did not, held, the Magistrate could nonetheless commit under S. 323 CrPC even the latter case to Sessions Court — Scope of powers of Magistrate under Ss. 209 and 323 CrPC, explained

Where one of the two cases (relating to the same incident) is charge-sheeted or complained of, involves offences or offence exclusively triable by a Court of Session, but none of the offences involved in the other case is exclusively triable by the Sessions Court, the Magistrate has no escape from committing the former case to the Sessions Court as provided in Section 209 CrPC. Though, the next case cannot be committed in accordance with Section 209 of the Code, the Magistrate has, nevertheless, power to commit the case to the Court of Session. Section 323 is incorporated in CrPC to meet similar cases also. (Para 12)

Section 323 CrPC does not make an inroad into Section 209 because the former is intended to cover cases to which Section 209 does not apply. When a Magistrate has committed a case on account of the legislative compulsion by Section 209, its cross-case, having no offence exclusively triable by the Sessions Court, must appear to the Magistrate as one which ought to be tried by the same Court of Session. Commitment under Sections 209 and 323 might be through two different channels, but once they are committed their subsequent flow could only be through the stream channelised by the provisions contained in Chapter XVIII. (Para 13). Sudhir v. State of M.P., (2001) 2 SCC 688: 2001 SCC (Cri) 387: AIR 2001 SC 826.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-2-2001]

— S. 325 See Ss. 235(2), 248(2), 325, 360 and 361

— S. 325(1) See Ss. 29(2), 5, 4(2), 325(1) and 357

— S. 326 See also S. 350, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1168 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 326 See Ss. 231, 242, 243, 246 and 326

See also Ss. 307/34 or Ss. 326/34

[3551] — S. 326 — Applicability — Conditions for, restated

The appellant was challaned before a Designated Court at Madras (now Chennai) which was constituted under the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987 ("TADA" for short). He was charged of offences under Section 302 read with Section 120-B IPC and Section 4 of the Tamil Nadu Public Property (Prevention of Damage and Loss) Act, 1992, besides Sections 3 and 5 of TADA. During the trial the appellant was released on bail. After the expiry of TADA, the Designated Courts in the State of T.N. were abolished and the appellant's case was transferred to the Sessions Court for trial of the non-TADA offences. The Sessions Court proposed to proceed with the trial acting on the evidence recorded by the Designated Court and rejected the appellant's demand for a de novo trial. After unsuccessfully approaching the High Court, the appellant approached the Supreme Court. Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

Section 18 of TADA, 1987, which permits the transferee court to start from the stage up to which the Designated Court proceeded, is not applicable in the present case because the Designated Court itself had ceased to exist during the progress of the trial. (Paras 8 and 9)

Normally, the offences under Sections 302 and 120-B IPC etc. are triable by the Court of Session. Under Section 12 of TADA, all Designated Courts can try any other offence also, while trying any offence under TADA if such other offence is also triable in the same case together with the offence under TADA. But a Sessions Court cannot try an offence under TADA even in conjunction with other non-TADA offences. The fallout of the non-existence or cessation of the existence of a Designated Court is that no offence under TADA can be tried against any accused. But the offences not falling under TADA, which could be tried in a regular Sessions Court, have to go for trial to a regular court. (Para 10)

Section 326 CrPC, as it originally remained, was meant to apply only to cases before Courts of Magistrates. By Act 45 of 1978 the words "Judge or" were also inserted just before the word "Magistrate". So from 1978 onwards the applicability of the section was extended to all trial courts. (Para 12)

For the application of Section 326 of the Code three postulates must be concatenated together. First is, a Judge should have recorded the evidence in the case either in part or in whole. Next is, the said Judge should have ceased to exercise jurisdiction in that case, and the third is, another Judge should have succeeded him and such successor Judge must have jurisdiction to try the offences concerned. If the above conditions are completed the successor Judge stands empowered to act on the evidence already recorded in the case. (Para 13)

The legislative intention is clear from a reading of the section that the words "succeeded by another Judge" must get a wide amplitude. It is for the said purpose that Section 326(2) is incorporated bringing even cases transferred from one Judge to another, within the scope of the section. The words "such jurisdiction" in Section 326(1) are not intended to narrow down the ambit of the provision to Judges who could have exercised exactly the same jurisdiction which his predecessor Judge exercised. It is enough that the successor Judge has jurisdiction to try the offences sought to be proved against the accused. (Para 14). Bhaskar v. State, (1999) 9 SCC 551: 2000 SCC (Cri) 425: AIR 1999 SC 3539.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-9-1999]

[3552] — S. 326 (as amended by Act 45 of 1978) — Transfer of part-heard case from TADA court to regular court — Procedure of transferee court — TADA courts in T.N. State abolished after expiry of TADA — Consequently part-heard case involving offence under S. 302 read with S. 120-B IPC and S. 4 of the Tamil Nadu Public Property (Prevention of Damage and Loss) Act, 1992, besides Ss. 3 and 5 of TADA transferred to Sessions Court after dropping out offences under TADA — Such a case, held, attracts S. 326(1) — Hence, the Sessions Court can act on the evidence recorded by TADA court and need not try the case de novo — Further, held, S. 18 of TADA is not applicable in such a case — TADA, 1987 — Ss. 3, 5, 12 and 18 — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 120-B — T.N. Public Property (Prevention of Damage and Loss) Act, 1992 (59 of 1992), S. 4. Bhaskar v. State, (1999) 9 SCC 551: 2000 SCC (Cri) 425: AIR 1999 SC 3539.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-9-1999]

Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, (1990) 4 SCC 76: 1991 SCC (Cri) 47: AIR 1990 SC 1962, distinguished

[3553] — S. 326 — Part-heard trial — Evidence partly recorded by one Magistrate/Judge and partly by other — Magistrate/Judge can re-summon a witness already examined only for further examination — Fresh examination of such witnesses for fresh trial not permissible — Accused has no right to claim de novo trial — Effect of amendment of S. 350 of 1898 Code by amending Act of 1955 — CrPC, 1898 — S. 350 (as amended by Act 26 of 1955)

When the Code of 1898 was repealed and replaced by the new Code of 1973 Section 350 was renumbered as Section 326 without any textual change. From a comparative reading of sub-section (1) of Section 350 as it stood prior to its amendment in 1955 and as it stands since then with the change in its numeral and inclusion of the word 'Judge' therein it is clear that the discretion earlier given to the Presiding Officer of the Court to act on the evidence recorded by his predecessor or partly recorded by him still remains. While earlier he could re-summon the witnesses and recommence the inquiry or trial — which necessarily meant a de novo trial — he can now only re-summon a witness who has already been examined for further examination and discharge him after such further examination, cross-examination and re-examination, if any. It is evident therefore that now the Magistrate or Judge can exercise his judicial discretion only for further examination of a witness already examined and not for fresh examination of witnesses for a fresh trial. Obviously, keeping in view the inevitable frequent changes in the office of the Magistrate and Judge and in order to provide a speedy trial the legislature has taken away the well-established right of the accused to claim a de novo trial and that of the court to so direct, by express words of the amending statute of 1955. (Para 20). Ranbir Yadav v. State of Bihar, (1995) 4 SCC 392: 1995 SCC (Cri) 728: AIR 1995 SC 1219: 1995 Cri LJ 2665.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-3-1995]

Payare Lal v. State of Punjab, (1962) 3 SCR 328: AIR 1962 SC 690, distinguished

[3554] — S. 326 (as amended by Act 45 of 1978) — Legislative history of, and reasons for, restated — External aids — History of the Legislation — Law Commission's 41st Report — Considered

The archaic concept was that the very same judicial personage who heard and recorded the evidence must decide the case. But over the years it was revealed in practice that fossilisation of the said concept, instead of fostering the administration of criminal justice, was doing the reverse. Hence the legislature wanted to discontinue the aforesaid antediluvian practice and decided to afford option to the successor judicial officer. The legislature conferred such option only on the Magistrates at the first instance and as the new experiment showed positive results towards fostering the cause of criminal justice the Law Commission recommended that such option should advisedly be extended to Judges of all other trial courts also. The said recommendation was later accepted by the Government and was finally approved by Parliament through Section 27 of Act 45 of 1978. (Paras 15, 17 and 21). Bhaskar v. State, (1999) 9 SCC 551: 2000 SCC (Cri) 425: AIR 1999 SC 3539.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-9-1999]

— S. 327 See also S. 352, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1168 in Vol. 2

— S. 327 See Ss. 9(6), 194, 327 and 2(p)
See also Ss. 273 to 275, 284, 285 and 327

[3555] — S. 327 — Open trial — Purpose and need for open trial — Explained — Held (per Bhandari, J.), public trial ensures fairness and creates public confidence in functioning of courts — It is a facet of the rule of law — Constitution of India — Article 21. [Paras 136, 143(iv), 143(v) and 144]. Mohd. Shahabuddin v. State of Bihar, (2010) 4 SCC 653.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dalveer Bhandari[1] and Dr. M.K. Sharma[2], JJ. [Date of decision : 25-3-2010]

[3556] — S. 327 — "Open Court" — Meaning of — Restrictions which can be imposed by Court — Sessions Court holding trial within jail premises pursuant to order of High Court under S. 9(6), having regard to the unprecedented violent situation then prevailing, held, deemed to be an open court. Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1988) 3 SCC 609: 1988 SCC (Cri) 711: AIR 1988 SC 1883.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.L. Oza[1], B.C. Ray[2] and K. Jagannatha Shetty[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 3-8-1988]

See fully under Ss. 9(6), 194, 327, 2(p), supra

[3557] — S. 327 — Open trial/court — What is and importance of — Need for compliance with requirements of S. 327 — Holding of trial in jail premises — If can be in compliance with S. 327 — Held (per curiam), a trial does not lose its quality of being an open trial merely because it is conducted inside jail premises, provided the public has free access — On facts held, S. 327 was not violated by conducting trials against appellant inside jail premises when lawyers, press and public were free to watch court proceedings subject to security procedures — Constitution of India — Article 21

The appellant's second objection was that his right to open trial was violated by conducting trials against him in jail premises.

Rejecting this objection,

Held :

Per Bhandari, J.

In all civilised countries governed by the rule of law, all criminal trials have to be public trials where public and press have complete access. Public access is essential if trial adjudication is to achieve the objective of maintaining public confidence in administration of justice. Publicity is the authentic hallmark of judicial functioning distinct from administrative functioning. Open trial serves an important prophylactic purpose, providing an outlet for community concern, hostility, and emotion. Public trial restores the balance in cases when a shocking crime occurs in society. People have an inherent distrust for secret trials. One of the demands of democratic society is that the public should know what goes on in court while being told by the press or what happens there, to the end that the public may judge whether the Indian system of criminal justice is fair and right. Criminal trial is a public event. What transpires is a public property. Open trial is the universal rule and must be scrupulously adhered to except under exceptional and extraordinary circumstances. The right to public trial has also been recognised under Section 327 CrPC. (Paras 133 to 135 and 136 & 144)

The importance of public trial in a democratic country governed by the rule of law can hardly be overemphasised but at the same time the fact cannot be overlooked that the primary function of the judiciary is to do justice between parties which bring their causes before it. It is difficult to accede to proposition that there cannot be any exception to the universal rule that all cases must be tried in open court. In a case of extraordinary nature, the universal rule of open trial may not be adhered to. The High Court looking to exceptional and extraordinary circumstances can take such a decision and no personal hearing is warranted before taking such a decision. Apart from 38 lawyers, public and press had access to court proceedings. Jail premises are only one kilometre from Siwan Court. Court proceedings were regularly reported in the press. No real prejudice has been caused to the appellant. The case in hand would fall in the category of those extraordinary and exceptional cases where in the interest of justice, it became imperative to shift the venue of trial. [Paras 136, 143(iv), 143(v) and 144]

There are situations where the action of the State is prima facie void and therefore has to be set aside. If the denial of a public trial was a prima facie case of vitiation of natural justice, the court would be justified in exercising judicial review. However, when there is no prima facie violation of principles of natural justice, then it has to be tested whether there is need for a judicial review of the orders for shifting trials. There is no presumption that trial in prison is not an open trial. To hold that the appellant's right to a public trial has been denied the appellant has to prove more than mere shifting of the location of the trial. In the present case, there is no violation of the principles of natural justice in shifting the trials of the cases of the appellant from a regular court to a Special Court. (Paras 99, 101, 107, 109 and 100)

In the present case, it is necessary to maintain the discipline of the court which is not only trying the appellant's case but a large number of other cases which were getting delayed by the presence of a large number of supporters of the appellant. The appellant is claiming that his right to a public trial has been vitiated by the court being set up inside the jail. The State must demonstrate that: (a) nobody is being denied entry to courtroom as long as they agree to regular security checks; and (b) there is a clear and logical reason as to why case was transferred from Siwan Courthouse to Siwan Jail. (Para 129)

In this case though the trials are taking place in jail but in fact no real prejudice has been caused to the appellant. It has been shown by the respondent that no one has been denied from attending or watching trial. The appellant is being represented by 38 lawyers. The press and those who want to attend the trial or case have access to remain present during court proceedings. [Paras 109, 111, 117, 139 to 142 and 143(v)]

Per Sharma, J. (concurring)

An "open court" is a court to which the general public has a right to be admitted and access to the court is granted to all the persons desirous of entering the court to observe the conduct of the judicial proceedings. Although the general rule still remains that a trial must be conducted in an open court, it may sometimes become necessary or rather indispensable to hold a trial inside a jail. Considerations of public peace and tranquillity, maintenance of law and order situation, safety and security of the accused and the witnesses may make the holding of a trial inside the jail premises imperative as is the situation in the present case. (Paras 214 and 215)

A trial does not stand vitiated solely because it is conducted inside jail premises. However, at the same time, there must be compliance with the provisions contained in Section 327 CrPC which guarantees certain safeguards to ensure that a trial is an open trial. (Para 217)

An invitation to the public to witness the appellant's trial was affixed on the jail gate, the appellant was represented by 38 advocates who regularly attended court in the jail premises, day-to-day court proceedings were reported in newspapers and entry was allowed to all persons after entering their personal details into a register maintained by the jail authorities. A retired judicial officer who was the appellant's relative had attended all court proceedings. All the aforesaid facts have not been controverted by the appellant. The Court had also not been shown or made aware of any fact that any permission sought for by any intending person to witness the proceedings was refused by the authority. Presence of a press person in the audience, present on one occasion at least was vehemently objected to by the appellant himself. In view of the aforesaid, there was sufficient compliance with Section 327 CrPC. (Paras 218 and 219). Mohd. Shahabuddin v. State of Bihar, (2010) 4 SCC 653.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dalveer Bhandari[1] and Dr. M.K. Sharma[2], JJ. [Date of decision : 25-3-2010]

Kailash Nath Agarwal v. Emperor, AIR 1947 All 436; M.R. Venkataraman, In re, AIR 1950 Mad 441; T.R. Ganeshan, In re, AIR 1950 Mad 696; Prasanta Kumar Mukerjee v. State, AIR 1952 Cal 91; Narwarsingh v. State, AIR 1952 MB 193; Richmond Newspapers Inc. v. Commonwealth of Virginia, 65 L Ed 2d 973: 448 US 555 (1980); Naresh Shridhar Mirajkar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1967 SC 1: (1966) 3 SCR 744; State of Oregon v. James Donald Jackson, 178 or App 233: 36 P 3d 500 (2001), referred to

Cora Lillian McPherson v. Oran Leo McPherson, AIR 1936 PC 246; Scott v. Scott, 1913 AC 417: (1911-13) All ER Rep 1 (HL); Richmond Newspapers Inc. v. Commonwealth of Virginia, 65 L Ed 2d 973: 448 US 555 (1980); Mueller, Problems Posed by Publicity to Crime and Criminal Proceedings, 110 U Pa L Rev 1, 6 (1961); Oliver, In re, 92 L Ed 682: 333 US 257: 68 S Ct 499 (1947); Craig v. Harney, 91 L Ed 1546: 331 US 367: 67 S Ct 1249 (1946); Estes v. Texas, 14 L Ed 2d 543: 381 US 532: 85 S Ct 1628 (1964); Gannett Co. Inc. v. DePasquale, 61 L Ed 2d 608: 443 US 368: 99 S Ct 2898 (1978); A.K. Roy v. Union of India, (1982) 1 SCC 271: 1982 SCC (Cri) 152; Sahai Singh v. Emperor, AIR 1917 Lah 311, cited

F. Pollock: The Expansion of Common Law (1904), pp. 31-32; E. Jenks: The Book of English Law, 6th Edn. (1967), pp. 73-74; Sources of Our Liberties, R. Perry Edn., 1959, p. 188; B. Schwartz: The Bill of Rights: A Documentary History, 1971, p. 129; J. Bentham: Rationale of Judicial Evidence, 1827, p. 524; H. Weihofen: The Urge to Punish, (1956), pp. 130-131; Mueller, Problems Posed by Publicity to Crime and Criminal Proceedings, 110 U Pa L Rev 1, 6 (1961), cited

Gannett Co. Inc. v. DePasquale, 61 L Ed 2d 608: 443 US 368: 99 S Ct 2898 (1978); Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1988) 3 SCC 609: 1988 SCC (Cri) 711; Sheppard v. Maxwell, 16 L Ed 2d 600: 384 US 333 (1966); Press-Enterprise Co. v. Superior Court, 92 L Ed 2d 1: 478 US 1 (1986); Stephen Gary Howard v. Commonwealth of Virginia, 6 Va App 132 (1988); Adolph Dammerau v. Commonwealth of Virginia, 3 Va App 285 (1986); People v. Robert England, 83 Cal App 4th 772 (2000); Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Court for the County of Norfolk, 73 L Ed 2d 248: 457 US 596 (1981); Richmond Newspapers Inc. v. Commonwealth of Virginia, 65 L Ed 2d 973: 448 US 555 (1980); Naresh Shridhar Mirajkar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1967 SC 1: (1966) 3 SCR 744; Sahai Singh v. Emperor, AIR 1917 Lah 311; Malloch v. Aberdeen Corpn., (1971) 1 WLR 1578: (1971) 2 All ER 1278 (HL); K.L. Tripathi v. SBI, (1984) 1 SCC 43: 1984 SCC (L&S) 62; George v. Secy. of State for the Environment, (1979) 77 LGR 689 (CA); R. Balakrishna Pillai v. State of Kerala, (2000) 7 SCC 129: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1293; Jankinath Sarangi v. State of Orissa, (1969) 3 SCC 392; R. v. Denbigh Justices, ex p Williams, 1974 QB 759: (1974) 3 WLR 45: (1974) 2 All ER 1052, relied on

Cooley's Constitutional Law, Vol. I, 8th Edn., p. 647; Black's Law Dictionary, 6th Edn., 1990, p. 1091, relied on [3558] — S. 327 — Open trial — Deviation from, in exceptional circumstances — Permissibility — Requirements of natural justice — Held (per Bhandari, J.), in a case of extraordinary nature, the universal rule of open trial may not be adhered to — High Court looking to exceptional and extraordinary circumstances can take such a decision and no personal hearing is warranted before taking such a decision — If the denial of a public trial was a prima facie case of vitiation of natural justice, the court would be justified in exercising judicial review — However, when there is no prima facie violation of principles of natural justice, then it has to be tested whether there is need for a judicial review of the orders of shifting trials — Constitution of India — Arts. 21 and 14. [Paras 136, 143(iv), 143(v) and 144]. Mohd. Shahabuddin v. State of Bihar, (2010) 4 SCC 653.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dalveer Bhandari[1] and Dr. M.K. Sharma[2], JJ. [Date of decision : 25-3-2010]

[3559] — Ss. 327 and 9(6) — In the context of open trial — Held (per Bhandari, J.), if denial of public trial is a prima facie case of violation of natural justice, court is justified in exercising power of judicial review in such situation — However, when there is no prima facie violation of principles of natural justice then one must test whether there is need for a judicial review of the orders for shifting the trials — In present case, there is no violation of the principles of natural justice in shifting trials of cases of appellant from a regular court to a Special Court

The appellant was aggrieved by Notification dated 20-5-2006 issued by Patna High Court under Section 9(6) of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973, declaring that premises of District Jail, Siwan, would be the place of sitting of the Court of Session for trial of sessions cases pending against the appellant. The reason given in the Notification for selecting the District Jail as the venue for conducting trials against the appellant was the "expeditious trial of sessions cases". Pursuant to this Notification, the State Government also issued two notifications making available the jail premises for conducting trial against the appellant.

The appellant challenged the Notification dated 20-5-2006 inter alia on the ground that no opportunity of hearing was given to him before issuing the notification. The High Court dismissed the appellant's writ petition.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

Per Bhandari, J.

Since exercise of power under Section 9(6) is an administrative function, the test is whether decision of the High Court stands up to the test of judicial review of administrative decisions. Wording of Section 9(6) shows that there is no need for the High Court to give a hearing while deciding venue of trial. It is only if Sessions Court is moving the place of trial that parties have a right to a hearing. There is no statutory right for the appellant to be heard. However, common law and the principles laid down in the Constitution lay down that even in administrative action there must be minimum standards that are to be maintained. Thus, it has to be seen whether right to fair hearing has been denied to the appellant even if there is no statutory provision for it. The principles of natural justice are essential to the framework of our laws and a protection against arbitrary actions. There is every duty of the courts to judicially review administrative actions. However, this is usually not to be applied blindly. (Paras 91 to 94 and 97)

There are situations where the action of the State is prima facie void and therefore has to be set aside. If the denial of a public trial was a prima facie case of vitiation of natural justice, the court would be justified in exercising judicial review. However, when there is no prima facie violation of the principles of natural justice then one must test whether there is need for a judicial review of the orders of shifting the trials. In the present case, there is no violation of the principles of natural justice in shifting the trials of the cases of the appellant from a regular court to a Special Court. (Paras 99 to 101)

The High Court in view of the extraordinary facts and circumstances of a particular case is empowered to change the venue of a pending case/trial without hearing the appellant and this would not violate the appellant's fundamental rights under Articles 14 and 21 or any other provision of the Constitution. [Para 143(iv)]

A large number of the appellant's supporters may create unrest in front of courtroom and much larger security would be required to protect witnesses, court officers and the appellant. The letter written by the Superintendent of Police of Siwan indicates that it is not possible to hold the appellant's trials in open court as it may affect trials of other civil and criminal cases that are going on in the same court building. There is no violation of principles of natural justice in shifting trials of cases of the appellant from a regular court to a Special Court. In the instant case apart from the appellant's 38 lawyers, the public and the press had access to the court proceedings. Siwan Jail is only one kilometre from the Siwan Court. The court proceedings were regularly reported in the press. So in the instant case no real prejudice has been caused to the appellant. [Paras 100, 109, 111, 117, 139 to 142 and 143(v)]

Per Sharma, J. (disagreeing)

It is a well-settled principle in law that the court cannot read anything into a statutory provision which is plain and unambiguous. The language employed in a statute is a determinative factor of the legislative intent. If the language of the enactment is clear and unambiguous, it would not be proper for the courts to add any words thereto and evolve some legislative intent, not found in the statute. (Para 179)

Further, it is a well-established principle of statutory interpretation that the legislature is specially precise and careful in its choice of language. Thus, if a statutory provision is enacted by the legislature, which prescribes a condition at one place but not at some other place in the same provision, the only reasonable interpretation which can be resorted to by the courts is that such was the intention of the legislature and that the provision was consciously enacted in that manner. In such cases, it will be wrong to presume that such omission was inadvertent or that by incorporating the condition at one place in the provision the legislature also intended the condition to be applied at some other place in that provision. (Para 180)

The power of the High Court under Section 9(6) to notify a particular place or places where the Court of Session should ordinarily hold its sitting is an administrative power unlike the power of the Court of Session under the second part of Section 9(6) which is judicial in nature. Being so, the High Court was under no obligation to observe rule of audi alteram partem. The second part of Section 9(6) expressly requires the Court of Session to afford opportunity of hearing but there is no such requirement in first part. The omission is to be construed as a conscious decision on the part of the legislature for it intended to exclude such a requirement when such power is to be exercised by the High Court. An administrative order when passed by a competent authority may not necessarily be required to be issued only after due compliance with the principles of natural justice. (Paras 173, 177 and 178)

The intention of the legislature for providing an opportunity of hearing in matters of transfer of criminal cases can be gathered from the language used in Section 9(6) wherein the legislature desired that there should be an opportunity of hearing that is so specifically stated in the language itself and where the legislature desired that there should be a power of the High Court to fix place or places of sittings of a Sessions Court for holding its trial, it has so mentioned explicitly by excluding the rules of natural justice from its ambit thereby excluding the principles of audi alteram partem. (Para 174)

On a detailed and proper interpretation of Section 9(6) CrPC there can be only one opinion that it was not necessary for the High Court to observe or comply with the rule of audi alteram partem before notifying a shift in the venue of the trial. Consequently, the High Court was under no requirement to follow and to comply with the rule of audi alteram partem before issuing the impugned Notification dated 20-5-2006. (Para 181). Mohd. Shahabuddin v. State of Bihar, (2010) 4 SCC 653.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dalveer Bhandari^{1} and Dr. M.K. Sharma^{2}, JJ. [Date of decision : 25-3-2010]

[3560] — Ss. 327, 231, 233, 242 to 244, 247, 273 and 283 — Mode of taking and recording of evidence — Embarrassment likely to be caused to judge(s) and witnesses due to nature of subject-matter of proceedings — Held, such adjustments/arrangements could be made by the judge(s) in the taking and recording of evidence so as to minimise the embarrassment caused to herself/himself and the witnesses — This is a matter of procedure to be adopted by the judge(s) — Evidence Act, 1872 — Ss. 137, 146, 148, 151, 152 and 155(4) — Cross-examination/taking of evidence of witnesses/accused in case of offences relating to pornographic acts/material — Minimising embarrassment/harassment/humiliation — Arrangements/adjustments that may be made by judge(s) (Paras 12 and 14). Fatima Riswana v. State, (2005) 1 SCC 582: 2005 SCC (Cri) 427: AIR 2005 SC 712: 2005 Cri LJ 900: (2005) 116 DLT 382: (2005) 26 AIC 73 (SC): (2005) 1 KLT 502.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-2005]

State of Punjab v. Gurmit Singh, (1996) 2 SCC 384: 1996 SCC (Cri) 316, followed

[3561] — S. 327 — Witness protection — Restrictions on entry of persons into courtrooms — Permissibility — Balancing needs of accused and victims — Duty and powers of court — While accused shall have right to fair trial, rights of victims and perception that perpetrator of crime be punished, cannot be ignored — In order to balance need for a public trial with need to ensure that victims/witnesses are not intimidated within courtrooms, held, court can impose reasonable restrictions on entry of persons into courtroom

It needs to be emphasised that the rights of the accused have to be protected. At the same time the rights of the victims have to be protected and the rights of the victims cannot be marginalised. Accused persons are entitled to a fair trial where their guilt or innocence can be determined. But from the victims' perception the perpetrator of a crime should be punished. They stand poised equally in the scales of justice. In order to ensure that the trials are conducted in a fair manner and within the realm of protecting the rights of the victims it is important that the decorum of the court is maintained at all times. In order to balance the need for a public trial with the need to ensure that victims/witnesses are not intimidated within the courtrooms, it is necessary for the court to impose reasonable restrictions on the entry of persons into the courtroom. (Paras 21 and 22)

Moreover, it was apprehension of some learned counsel that unruly situations may be created in court to terrorise witnesses. It needs no indication that the court shall have to deal with such situations sternly and pass necessary orders. SIT shall also look into this area. [Para 40(xii)]. NHRC v. State of Gujarat, (2009) 6 SCC 767.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-5-2009]

[3562] — S. 327(1) proviso — Proximate security to Prime Minister/former Prime Minister — Held, extends even when the protectee summoned as an accused in court for trial — Protection under the Act will be available wherever he goes like his shadow — In view of SPG's apprehensions and perception of threat to life of the protectee based on its assessment of the situation, assistance of the summoning court for change in venue of the trial can be sought by it so as to provide proximate security to the protectee — Suggestions made by a sitting Judge of the Supreme Court (J.S. Verma, J.), who sat in Commission to report the security failures relatable to the assassination of late Prime Minister Shri Rajiv Gandhi, on which SPG's prayer for change in venue was also based, entitled to great respect — Court obliged to provide conducive conditions for fair trial to which the protectee as undertrial entitled under Art. 21 —

Though trial has to be in open court but in view of proviso to S. 327(1) CrPC, court can regulate its proceedings in accordance with the circumstances of the case — Change of venue being for person afforded special protective cover by the Act and being based on assessment of peculiar fact situation, would not constitute a precedent — However, suggestion to shift timings of the court for trial of the protectee to after regular court hours instead of changing the venue, not acceptable — Constitution of India — Art. 21 — Special Protection Group Act, 1988 — Ss. 14, 2(g) & 4(1). Commr. of Police, Delhi v. Registrar, Delhi High Court, (1996) 6 SCC 323: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1325: AIR 1997 SC 95.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-10-1996]

— S. 327(2) See Ss. 164, 273 and 327(2)
See also Ss. 237(2) and 327(2)

[3563] — S. 327(2) — Inquiry or conduct of trial in-camera — Applicability of, to offences committed under Ss. 354 and 377 IPC — Deposition of the victims for said offences can at times be very embarrassing and therefore S. 327(2) CrPC ought to be applicable to offences under the said sections — Failure of amending Act 43 of 1983 to include these provisions noted

The provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 327 CrPC shall, in addition to the offences mentioned in the sub-section, also apply in inquiry or trial of offences under Sections 354 and 377 IPC. Sakshi v. Union of India, (2004) 5 SCC 518: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1645: AIR 2004 SC 3566: (2004) 98 Cut LT 491: (2004) 112 DLT 457.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu, C.J. and G.P. Mathur, J. [Date of decision: 26-5-2004]

[3564] — Ss. 327(2) and (3) — Trial in camera — Rape cases — Courts obliged to hold the trial in camera — Trial of rape cases in camera should be the rule and an open trial an exception — High Courts directed to impress upon the Presiding Officers to invariably hold the trial in camera — Cases of sexual assault should be tried by lady Judges, if available — Court should, as far as possible, avoid to disclose names of the victims in its orders to maintain anonymity of the victim — Press or anyone else not to print or publish any matter in relation to the proceedings except by permission under S. 327(3), CrPC — Contempt of Courts Act, 1971 — S. 7

Sub-sections (2) and (3) of Section 327 inserted by Act 43 of 1983 are in the nature of exception to the general rule of an open trial. In spite of the amendment, however, it is seen that the trial courts either are not conscious of this amendment or do not realise its importance for hardly does one come across a case where the inquiry and trial of a rape case has been conducted by the court in camera. The expression that the inquiry into and trial of rape "shall be conducted in camera" as occurring in sub-section (2) of Section 327 CrPC is not only significant but very important. It casts a duty on the court to conduct the trial of rape cases etc. invariably "in camera". The courts are obliged to act in furtherance of the intention expressed by the legislature and not to ignore its mandate and must invariably take recourse to the provisions of Sections 327(2) and (3) CrPC and hold the trial of rape cases in camera. It would enable the victim of crime to be a little comfortable and answer the questions with greater ease in not too familiar a surroundings. Trial in camera would not only be in keeping with the self-respect of the victim of crime and in tune with the legislative intent but is also likely to improve the quality of the evidence of a prosecutrix because she would not be so hesitant or bashful to depose frankly as she may be in an open court, under the gaze of the public. The improved quality of her evidence would assist the courts in arriving at the truth and sifting truth from falsehood. The High Courts would therefore be well-advised to draw the attention of the trial courts to the amended provisions of Section 327 CrPC and to impress upon the Presiding Officers to invariably hold the trial of rape cases in camera, rather than in the open court as envisaged by Section 327(2) CrPC. When trials are held in camera, it would not be lawful for any person to print or publish any matter in relation to the proceedings in the case, except with the previous permission of the court as envisaged by Section 327(3) CrPC. This would save any further embarrassment being caused to the victim of sex crime. Wherever possible, it may also be worth considering whether it would not be more desirable that the cases of sexual assaults on the females are tried by lady Judges, wherever available, so that the prosecutrix can make her statement with greater ease and assist the courts in properly discharging their duties, without allowing the truth to be sacrificed at the altar of rigid technicalities while appreciating evidence in such cases. The courts should, as far as possible, avoid disclosing the name of the prosecutrix in their orders to save further embarrassment to the victim of sex crime. The anonymity of the victim of the crime must be maintained as far as possible throughout. The trial courts should take recourse to the provisions of Sections 327(2) and (3) CrPC liberally. Trial of rape cases in camera should be the rule and an open trial in such cases an exception. State of Punjab v. Gurmit Singh, (1996) 2 SCC 384: 1996 SCC (Cri) 316: AIR 1996 SC 1393.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and S. Saghir Ahmad, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-1-1996]

— S. 327(3) See Ss. 327(2) and (3)

[3565] — Ch. XXV and Ss. 328 to 339 — Detention, retention and release of accused in/from a lunatic asylum — Procedural compliance with, directed — Enforcement of rights of lunatic undertrials — Compliance with CrPC (Ch. XXV, Ss. 328 to 339) and Mental Health Act, 1987 (Ss. 37 to 40) — General directions and guidelines given to Chief Secretaries of different States and Registrars of different High Courts for compliance with said statutory provisions — Judicial notice taken of long illegal detention of lunatic undertrials under CrPC and negligence of mental asylums with regard to periodic inspection and examination and Magistrate's authorisation for detention of lunatic undertrials under Mental Health Act, 1987 — Registrars General and Chief Secretaries further directed to take necessary steps and submit report in this regard — Mental Health Act, 1987, Ss. 37 to 40 — Prisoners Act, 1900, S. 30 — Constitution of India — Arts. 32, 21, 22, 19 and 14

A news item was published on 14-10-2005 in the Indian Express, New Delhi stating that one M continued to languish as an undertrial prisoner in a psychiatric hospital for a period of thirty-eight years even after he was declared fit by the hospital in 1967. The Supreme Court took judicial note of this fact and a series of orders were passed requiring the High Courts' Registries to collect and furnish the particulars of undertrial prisoners lodged in mental asylums. The reports received from the High Courts showed that there were several such cases in various States.

Whether these persons have been subjected to periodic medical check-up was not known. The nature of their ailments was not very clear. In some cases, it was vaguely stated that they suffered from "mental abnormality". Many of these undertrial prisoners were charged with offences of trifle nature, for which maximum sentence prescribed is hardly six months.

The Supreme Court stated the provisions of Chapter XXV CrPC relating to (1) inquiry regarding fact of unsoundness, (2) postponement of proceedings on the finding of such fact, (3) resumption of proceedings when the person concerned ceases to be of unsound mind so that he is able to defend himself, (4) the procedure of release of such persons by appointment of Commission and (5) the delivery of such person to the care of a relative or friend.

The Supreme Court also stated the provisions of Mental Health Act, 1987 (which repealed the Lunacy Act, 1912) to admission of such persons to mental hospitals and periodic inspection by visitors and their remarks.

Adjourning the matter for three months, for compliance with directives given,

Held :

In many of these cases, the undertrial prisoners have been confined to a psychiatric hospital for more than the period of maximum sentence. It is clear that in such cases, the trial courts have not considered whether the undertrial prisoners could be released pending investigation or trial under Section 330(1) CrPC. It is also not possible that no friend or relative of the prisoner came forward with sufficient security and seek release under the said provision. There are also several cases where the undertrial prisoners have been charged for offence under Section 302 IPC. In such cases also, it appears that there is no periodic medical check-up, nor periodic consideration by the court as to whether they would be in a position to face trial. (Paras 7 and 8)

From the reports filed by the Registries of various High Courts it is evident that the monthly, quarterly and half-yearly inspections/examinations are not regularly being carried out as required under Sections 38 and 39 Mental Health Act, 1987 (the Act) and the Magistrates/courts authorising the prisoners to be detained are not receiving the quarterly/half-yearly reports under Sections 39(1), (3) and (4) of the Act. It is unfortunate that the provisions of Sections 38 and 39 of the Act are not being implemented effectively. (Para 26)

As there are a large number of mentally ill undertrial prisoners in various psychiatric hospitals/nursing homes, we consider it just and proper to issue some general directions to avoid such mentally ill persons languishing in psychiatric hospitals for long periods: (i) Whenever a persons of unsound mind is ordered to be detained in any psychiatric hospital/nursing home under Section 330(2) CrPC, the reports contemplated under Section 39 shall be submitted to the court/Magistrate concerned periodically. The court/Magistrate shall also call for such reports if they are not received in time. When the reports are received, the court/Magistrate shall consider the reports and pass appropriate orders wherever necessary. In regard to prisoners covered Section 30(1) of the Prisoners Act, 1900, the procedure prescribed by Sections 30(2) and (3), Prisoners Act, 1900 read with Section 40 of the Mental Health Act, 1987 shall be followed. (ii) Wherever any undertrial prisoner is in jail for more than the maximum period of imprisonment prescribed for the offence for which he is charged (other than those charged for offences for which life imprisonment or death is the punishment), the Magistrate/court shall treat the case as closed and report the matter to the medical officer in charge of the psychiatric hospital, so that the medical officer in charge of the hospital can consider his discharge as per Section 40 of the Act. (iii) In cases where the undertrial prisoners who are not being charged with offence for which the punishment is imprisonment for life or death penalty, their cases may be considered for release in accordance Section 330(1) CrPC, if they have completed five or more years as in-patients. (iv) As regards the undertrial prisoners who have been charged with grave offences for which life imprisonment or death penalty is the punishment, such persons shall be subjected to examination periodically as provided in Sections 39 (1), (3) and (4) of the Act and the officers named therein (visitors, medical officer in charge of the hospital and the examining medical officer respectively) should send the reports to the court as to whether the undertrial prisoner is fit enough to face the trial to defend the charge. The Sessions Courts where the cases are pending should also seek periodic reports from such hospitals and every such case shall be given a hearing at least once in three months. The Sessions Judge shall commence the trial of such cases as soon as it is found that such mentally ill person has been found fit to face trial. (Para 27)

Copy of this order is directed to be sent to the Registrars-General of various High Courts and the Chief Secretaries of the State Governments/Union Territories to take necessary steps and follow up action, and submit report to the Supreme Court as to the steps taken in pursuance of this order. (Para 28). News Item "38 Yrs In Jail Without Trial" Published in The Hindustan Times, In Re, (2007) 15 SCC 18. Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and R.V. Raveendran and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-10-2007]

[3566] — S. 330 — Release of lunatic pending investigation or trial — When proper — Held, in case the appellant (accused) was lunatic, procedure as laid down in Ch. 25 CrPC had to be followed — It was for the appellant to make an appropriate motion before the trial court — If the trial court came to the conclusion that the appellant was insane, order in terms of S. 330 CrPC should have been passed, without being influenced by earlier rejection of the bail applications (Para 2). Sarfu Khan v. State of Jharkhand, (2004) 13 SCC 460. Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-9-2004]

— S. 330(2) See Ss. 320(4)(a), 330(2), 335(1)(b) and 339

— S. 330(2) r/w Ss. 335(1)(b) See Ss. 320(4)(a), 330(2) r/w Ss. 335(1)(b) and 339

— S. 335(1)(b) See Ss. 320(4)(a), 330(2), 335(1)(b), 339

— S. 339 See Ss. 320(4)(a), 330(2), 335(1)(b) and 339

See also Ss. 320(4)(a), 330(2) r/w Ss. 335(1)(b) and 339

— S. 340 See also Ss. 476 and 476-A, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1252 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 340 See Ss. 156, 195 & 340 and 341
See also Ss. 156(3), 340 and 195
See also Ss. 195, 190 and 340
See also Ss. 195 and 340
See also Ss. 195(1)(b) and 340
See also Ss. 195(1)(b)(i) and 340
See also Ss. 231 and 340
See also Ss. 341, 340, 2(d) and 482
See also Ss. 344 and 340

[3567] — S. 340 — "Expedient in the interests of justice" — Delay in making request for prosecution — Filing of fabricated documents in the High Court by a company in a proceeding relating to the payment of excise duty — Revenue seeking dismissal of writ petition on ground of fabrication of false evidence alone and no request made for the prosecution of the company and other persons responsible — Writ petition disposed of by the High Court providing for payment of duties by the company — No reference made to the said fabricated documents — After about 15 months the Revenue moving a notice of motion to prosecute the company, its officers and dealers under S. 193 IPC — Held, in the circumstances of the case an order levying penal interest would meet the ends of justice instead of making any direction for prosecution of the company and other persons responsible — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 192 and 193. Phiroze Dinshaw Lam v. Union of India, (1996) 8 SCC 209. Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.P. Jeevan Reddy and K.S. Paripoornan, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-2-1996]

[3568] — S. 340 — Locus standi to lodge complaint under — Any citizen, even a stranger to the proceedings, can file a complaint

It is not necessary to consider the submission of the appellant that the respondent has a habit of making such complaints and he is not a person who is interested in the matter in any way and no public interest would be served by entertaining an application made by him and he is a total stranger to the proceedings. In criminal law a complaint can be lodged by anyone who has become aware of a crime having been committed and thereby set the law into motion. In respect of offences adverted to in Section 195 CrPC there is a restriction that the same cannot be entertained unless a complaint is made by a court because the offence is stated to have been committed in relation to the proceedings in that court. Section 340 CrPC is invoked to get over the bar imposed under Section 195 CrPC. In ordinary crimes not adverted to under Section 195 CrPC, if in respect of any offence, law can be set into motion by any citizen of this country, there is no reason why any citizen of this country cannot approach even under Section 340 CrPC. For that matter, the wording of Section 340 CrPC is significant. The court will have to act in the interest of justice on a complaint or otherwise. Assuming that the complaint may have to be made at the instance of a party having an interest in the matter, still the court can take action in the matter otherwise than on a complaint, that is, when it has received information as to a crime having been committed, covered by the said provision. (Paras 7 and 8). N. Natarajan v. B.K. Subba Rao, (2003) 2 SCC 76: 2003 SCC (Cri) 437: AIR 2003 SC 541: 2003 Cri LJ 820.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-12-2002]

[3569] — S. 340 — Nature and scope of inherent power under — Expression "in or in relation to a proceeding in that court"

S. 340 confers an inherent power on a court to make a complaint in respect of an offence committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that court, or as the case may be, in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in a proceeding in that court, if that court is of opinion that it is expedient in the interest of justice that an enquiry should be made into an offence referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of S. 195 and authorises such court to hold preliminary enquiry as it thinks necessary and then make a complaint thereof in writing after recording a finding to that effect as contemplated under sub-section (1) of S. 340. The words "in or in relation to a proceeding in that court" show that the court which can take action under this section is only the court operating within the definition of S. 195(3) before which or in relation to whose proceeding the offence has been committed. There is a word of caution inbuilt in that provision itself that the action to be taken should be expedient in the interest of justice. Therefore, it is incumbent that the power given by S. 340 of the Code should be used with utmost care and after due consideration. K.T.M.S. Mohd. v. Union of India, (1992) 3 SCC 178: 1992 SCC (Cri) 572: AIR 1992 SC 1831: 1992 Cri LJ 2781: (1992) 197 ITR 196: (1992) 75 Comp Cas 321.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1992]

[3570] — Ss. 340 and 341 — Order passed under S. 340 whether appealable or revisionable — Appeal by a person not making the complaint under S. 340, if maintainable — Held, revision does not lie against an order passed under S. 340 in view of the legal embargo created under S. 341(2) — Held, the case being initiated suo motu, High Court rightly held that the State could not file appeal in present case (Paras 6 and 7). K. Sudhakaran v. State of Kerala, (2009) 4 SCC 168.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-2-2009]

State of Kerala v. K. Sudhakaran, 2001 Cri LJ 3658, partially reversed

[3571] — Ss. 340 and 195 — Arbitrator, held, cannot be termed a "court" within the meaning of S. 195 — Therefore the question of applicability of S. 340 to arbitral proceedings does not arise — Arbitrator, held, not a court for purposes of S. 195 CrPC — Arbitration and Conciliation Act, 1995 — S. 27

The body of sub-section (1)(b) of Section 195 CrPC refers to the expression "court" and the same stands explained in sub-section (3). Without a reading of sub-section (3), "court" may be interpreted in a narrow context, but with the inclusion of sub-section (3), widest possible connotation is to be made available provided however, the statute declares it to be so. The language "if declared by that Act" is significant. (Para 6)

The inclusion of sub-section (3) under Section 195 cannot but be taken to be an explanatory provision. The body of Section 195(1)(b) refers to the expression "court" and the same stands thus explained in sub-section (3). The restriction imposed is easily ascertainable by reason of the inclusion of the words "if declared by that Act to be a court for the purposes of this section" (emphasis supplied) — the user of the words is very significant. One of the golden canons of interpretation is that the legislature always avoids surplusage and attributes a definite meaning to each of the words mentioned in the statute. By the very inclusion of sub-section (3) and the language, the intent of the legislature cannot thus be far to seek — it is connotative of a definite meaning. (Para 7)

The clear language of Section 195(3) CrPC unmistakably depicts the restrictive intent of the legislature and if the intent was otherwise to include an Arbitral Tribunal within the fold of Section 195(3) of the Code, that is to say, if the legislature wanted to confer such a status there was no difficulty as such in incorporating thereunder a provision as is contained in the Debt Recovery Act (vide Section 22); Income Tax Act (vide Section 136); Motor Vehicles Act [vide Section 169(2)]; Administrative Tribunals Act [vide Section 22(3)]; Consumer Protection Act; MRTP Act; and Companies Act etc. etc. since these statutes have definitely included and declared the Tribunal being ascribed to be a court within the meaning of Section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The inclusion of explanatory provision by way of sub-section (3) makes the situation abundantly clear. (Para 16). Manohar Lal v. Vinesh Anand, (2001) 5 SCC 407: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1322: AIR 2001 SC 1820: 2001 Cri LJ 2044.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Misra and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-4-2001]

Baliram Waman Hiray (Dr.) v. Justice B. Lentin, (1988) 4 SCC 419: 1988 SCC (Cri) 941, relied on

Sailaja Kanta Mitra v. State of W.B., AIR 1971 Cal 137: 75 CWN 804, overruled

Puhupram v. State of M.P., 1968 MPLJ 629, approved by implication

Virindar Kumar Satyawadi v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 153: 1956 Cri LJ 326; H.C. Ganti v. F.L. Harcourt, AIR 1931 Cal 436: 32 Cri LJ 826, distinguished

[3572] — Ss. 340, 192 to 196, 227 and 482 — Appellate power of Supreme Court under Art. 136 vis-à-vis statutory appeals under S. 19, TADA — This power is conferred notwithstanding statutory provisions for regular appeals — It is not restricted by any statutory limitations including appellate provisions under CrPC — Appeal before Supreme Court against interim order — Application under S. 340 CrPC filed before Designated Court under TADA Act in Bombay Blast Cases by respondent, a stranger to the proceedings, alleging that conduct of Public Prosecutor concerned in taking contradictory stands by seeking to withdraw certain charges against the accused person at a subsequent stage attracted Ss. 192 to 196 and 227 CrPC — Interim order passed by Designated Court to register the application taking the view that even a stranger like respondent had locus standi to file such an application and Designated Court had jurisdiction to entertain such application — Appeal before Supreme Court against such order of Designated Court, held, maintainable — Exercise of extraordinary jurisdiction under Art. 136 or 226 or under S. 482 CrPC does not amount to deprivation of statutory appeal — Order of the Designated Court set aside — Constitution of India — Art. 136 — TADA, 1987 — S. 19

The respondent filed an application under Section 340 CrPC before the Designated Court dealing with what was popularly known as "Bombay Blast Cases", alleging that the appellant, who was conducting the cases as Chief Public Prosecutor, had at one stage of the proceedings both orally and in writing had submitted to the court that the material on record was sufficient to frame charges against various offences arising under Chapter VI of the Indian Penal Code like waging war against the State etc., after adverting to the decisions of the Supreme Court. It was contended in the course of the application that the conduct of the Public Prosecutor had "polluted the course of administration of justice, notwithstanding the fact that there is material or not to frame the charge. This kind of conduct on the part of the Public Prosecutor if not dealt with according to law would leave wide scope in our judicial system to injure and cause injustice to ill-placed citizens". Therefore, it was contended in the application, a judicial examination of the conduct of the Public Prosecutor "will be in public interest, as it would act as a deterrent against Public Prosecutors indulging in unfair practices". He submitted that this conduct on the part of the appellant would attract the provisions of Sections 192 to 196 and 227 CrPC.

Though the appellant was not notified of the said application, the Designated Judge heard the Special Public Prosecutor in the matter. He contended that there can be only two parties before the court, that is, the Public Prosecutor or the complainant, as the case may be, and on the other side the accused represented by his advocate and in those circumstances the respondent could not be heard in the matter. However, the court by an order recorded its satisfaction as to the locus standi of the respondent and directed to register the application and to issue notice to the Public Prosecutor. The Public Prosecutor noted to have taken notice of the matter. Against this order of the Designated Judge, the present appeal has been filed by the appellant. The respondent appeared in person and contended that the Supreme Court should not entertain a petition on appeal under Article 136 of the Constitution inasmuch as the order passed by the Designated Judge being under the TADA Act is an interim order and no appeal lies against such order in view of Section 19 thereof. He further contended that inasmuch as an appeal lies under Section 341 CrPC against an order made under Section 340 CrPC in the event of a complaint having been made against the appellant. In this context, he also drew the Court's attention to the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 340 CrPC to point out that the power conferred on the court under Section 340(1) CrPC in respect of an offence could be exercised by an appellate court in case the subordinate has neither made a complaint under sub-section (1) in respect of that offence nor rejected an application for the making of such complaint. He, therefore, submitted that the powers of the Supreme Court under Article 136 should not be exercised as exercise of such power would affect a statutory right of appeal.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

Article 136 of the Constitution enables the Supreme Court to exercise in its discretion appellate powers by granting special leave from any judgment, decree, determination, sentence or order in any cause or matter passed or made by any court or tribunal in India. This power is conferred on the Supreme Court notwithstanding the provisions for regular appeal from proceedings in different enactments being available and there may remain some cases where justice might require interference by the Supreme Court with the decisions of the High Courts or the tribunals of the land. The power of the Supreme Court to grant leave to appeal from any decision of any court or tribunal is not subject to any limitation and is left entirely to the discretion of the Supreme Court. Though the Supreme Court is circumspect in its exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 136, it has a duty to interfere in cases of grave miscarriage of justice. It is trite to say that the extraordinary power conferred under Article 136 of the Constitution cannot be taken away by any legislation, short of constitutional amendment. The nature of the statute or limitations imposed within a statute cannot deter the Supreme Court from exercising its jurisdiction. It is not even restricted by the appellate provisions enumerated in the Criminal Procedure Code or any other statute. Therefore, contentions urged, which are preliminary in nature, cannot detain this Court in entertaining this matter or examining the correctness of the proceedings before the Designated Judge. There is no substance in the submission based on Antulay case, (1988) 2 SCC 602 that one of the considerations in exercise of its power by the Supreme Court is not to deprive any party of a statutory appeal and if such deprivation occasions then the matter will have to be reopened as was done in that case as it proceeds on a misconception of the position in law. An appeal lies when a matter is finally and conclusively decided by a court or a tribunal. If the High Court or the Supreme Court, in exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction under Article 226 or Article 136 of the Constitution or Section 482 CrPC, as the case may be, quashes certain proceedings, a party cannot complain that his right to statutory appeal had been deprived. (Para 6)

The stand of the respondent that the Supreme Court should not interfere in this matter as relevant facts are before the Designated Court and not before the Supreme Court does not hold water. What the Court is examining is whether the complaint made by the respondent, taking it as a whole, deserves to be proceeded with. (Para 12)

It is also not necessary to consider the submission of the appellant that the respondent has a habit of making such complaints and he is not a person who is interested in the matter in any way and no public interest would be served by entertaining an application made by him and he is a total stranger to the proceedings. In criminal law a complaint can be lodged by anyone who has become aware of a crime having been committed and thereby set the law into motion. In respect of offences adverted to in Section 195 CrPC there is a restriction that the same cannot be entertained unless a complaint is made by a court because the offence is stated to have been committed in relation to the proceedings in that court. Section 340 CrPC is invoked to get over the bar imposed under Section 195 CrPC. In ordinary crimes not adverted to under Section 195 CrPC, if in respect of any offence, law can be set into motion by any citizen of this country, there is no reason why any citizen of this country cannot approach even under Section 340 CrPC. For that matter, the wording of Section 340 CrPC is significant. The court will have to act in the interest of justice on a complaint or otherwise. Assuming that the complaint may have to be made at the instance of a party having an interest in the matter, still the court can take action in the matter otherwise than on a complaint, that is, when it has received information as to a crime having been committed, covered by the said provision. (Paras 7 and 8)

Issue of notice on an application of this nature would have serious impact upon the Public Prosecutor in conduct of the case particularly when at every stage he has got to be conscious whether any of his statements would attract Section 340 CrPC. This is not the kind of atmosphere where a Public

Prosecutor can function effectively, independently and fearlessly. In the conduct of the case a Public Prosecutor must have full freedom and he can even give up certain cases and request the court to discharge or acquit any accused. If that kind of autonomy is to be enjoyed by the Public Prosecutor, he cannot be fettered in conducting the proceedings. By initiating the proceedings against him, the learned Designated Judge has crippled the freedom of the Public Prosecutor in functioning effectively and such a matter certainly results in serious miscarriage in administration of justice and no advocate would be safe if such proceedings are initiated on the basis of the allegations of the nature made in the complaint. Either the learned Designated Judge has not applied his mind or he has not understood the scope of the application and if he had done either, he would have dismissed the application. (Para 15)

Therefore, the order made by the Designated Court is set aside and the application filed by the respondent under Section 340 CrPC is dismissed. At the same time it is made clear that the respondent shall not engage in this kind of litigation hereafter and he is restrained from making any applications of this nature and, if any such application is made before any court, the same shall be dismissed in limine and appropriate proceedings be initiated against him. (Para 16). N. Natarajan v. B.K. Subba Rao, (2003) 2 SCC 76: 2003 SCC (Cri) 437: AIR 2003 SC 541: 2003 Cri LJ 820.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-12-2002]

A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372, distinguished [3573] — Ss. 340 and 195 — Only the court falling within the definition under S. 195(3) competent to take action under S. 340 — Exercise of power under S. 340 should be on a careful consideration as regards expediency in the interest of justice. K.T.M.S. Mohd. v. Union of India, (1992) 3 SCC 178: 1992 SCC (Cri) 572: AIR 1992 SC 1831: 1992 Cri LJ 2781: (1992) 197 ITR 196: (1992) 75 Comp Cas 321.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1992]

[3574] — Ss. 340 and 195(1)(b) — Inquiry under S. 340 CrPC for offences specified under S. 195(1)(b) CrPC — Who can initiate — Commission of fraud by Subordinate Judge concerned and others while awarding compensation under Land Acquisition Act — Inquiry by District Judge in case of, held, was impermissible — Under Land Acquisition Act, appeal from judgment of Land Acquisition Judge lie only to High Court and not to District Court — Thus, under the said Act, Land Acquisition Judge/Subordinate Judge would not be subordinate to District Judge but to High Court — Subordination of courts as specified in S. 3 CPC not applicable herein — Hence, judgment of Division Bench of High Court setting aside order of District Judge was proper — Legal fiction under S. 195(4) CrPC that the court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the court to which appeals ordinarily lie — Purpose of, explained — Plea that Division Bench failed to notice the effect and purport of the term "ordinarily" in its proper perspective, rejected

Interpretation of the provisions of Section 340 CrPC was in question in the instant appeal.

Lands in the village concerned were acquired by the State of Andhra Pradesh for providing house-sites to the weaker sections of society. Awards in respect of the said acquisition were made by the Land Acquisition Collector. Reference thereagainst was made to the civil court at the instance of the owners of the land. A large-scale fraud, allegedly, took place in awarding compensation wherein the Subordinate Judge concerned, his staff, the advocates of the claimants, the advocates appearing on behalf of the State and other officials were said to be involved. Upon obtaining requisite permission from the High Court, CBCID registered a case and investigation thereinto was carried on. In its report the Additional Director General of Police, CID, Hyderabad indicated about a large-scale conspiracy and fraud committed by the accused persons. Allegations made as against the accused came within the purview of the offences specified under Section 195 CrPC. Therefore, an inquiry under Section 340 CrPC was imperative. The High Court got the matter examined by a special committee. It was opined that an inquiry may be conducted by the District Judge concerned. The report of the said committee having been approved by the Full Court of the High Court, an inquiry was made by the District Judge. The District Judge examined a large number of witnesses and ultimately filed a complaint pursuant to the findings recorded therein. An appeal came to be filed thereagainst by the respondents herein before the High Court. The Single Judge of the High Court, in view of the importance of the question involved, referred the matter to a Division Bench.

The Division Bench, vide the impugned judgment, allowed the appeal holding that the inquiry conducted by the District Judge was impermissible in law. It held that the court under the Land Acquisition Act is a court subordinate to the High Court as all appeals lie to the High Court. Hence, the Division Bench would have ordered an inquiry under Section 340 CrPC by the Sub-Judge himself. But as the matter had earlier been considered by two Judges of the High Court, though administratively and the report of such committee had been approved by the Full Court, it was directed that the matter be heard and decided by the High Court reminding itself of the old maxim that justice must not only be done but also seen to have been done.

The State challenged the decision of the Division Bench before the Supreme Court. The appellant submitted that the High Court committed a manifest error in passing the impugned judgment insofar as it failed to take into consideration that Section 340 CrPC read with Section 195 thereof specifies the courts being civil, criminal or revenue, which are genus and, as the Land Acquisition Judge is governed by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure in terms of Section 53 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, thus, being subordinate to the District Judge, the statutory requirements in relation to filing of complaint petition in terms of Section 340 CrPC stood fulfilled. The respondents, on the other hand, urged that the Land Acquisition Judge being not a court subordinate to the District Judge, the complaint petition at the instance of the latter was not maintainable.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The Division Bench of the High Court cannot be said to have committed any error in passing the impugned judgment. (Para 26)

The Court of the Subordinate Judge may be subordinate to the District Judge for administrative purpose. He may be a court subordinate to it under the Code of Civil Procedure. But in relation to a proceeding under the Land Acquisition Act, it would not be. In terms of Section 53 of the Land Acquisition Act, the procedures laid down under the Civil Procedure Code would apply but the same is subject to the exceptions specified therein viz. save insofar as they may be inconsistent with anything contained therein. The Land Acquisition Act is a special statute. It provides for the forums, both original and appellate. The subordination of courts as specified in Section 3 CPC, is only for the purpose of the said Code and not for the purpose of a special Act, although the provisions thereof may be applicable to a case arising thereunder. The civil courts exercise their jurisdiction not only in respect of a suit filed before it, they do so under various special statutes. The hierarchy of the courts for the purpose of Section 195 CrPC, therefore, will have to be determined, having regard to the nature of the proceedings and the statutes under which the same is required to be determined. The Act makes a distinction between filing a complaint by a public servant and a court. Whereas clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Section 195 contemplates administrative subordination, clause (b) contemplates judicial subordination. Each expression used in CrPC, therefore, must be understood upon reading the provisions thereof in their entirety and not in isolation. (Paras 16, 17 and 25)

It is one thing to say that an appeal, depending upon the valuation, would lie before different forums, but if under the provisions of a special statute an appeal shall lie only before the High Court and to no other, the District Court would not be a court where an appeal would ordinarily lie from a judgment of the Land Acquisition Judge. The Land Acquisition Act being self-contained code; in relation to the matters falling within the purview of the Land Acquisition Act, the civil courts would have no jurisdiction. (Paras 17 and 12)

Emphasis laid on the word "ordinarily" occurring in sub-section (4) of Section 195 CrPC is not of much importance. Sub-section (4) of Section 195 must be read with sub-section (3) thereof. Sub-section (3) broadly divides the courts into civil, revenue or criminal as also a Tribunal constituted by or under a Central, Provincial or State Act. If a statute constitutes such Tribunal and declares it to be a court for the purport of the said section, Section 195 CrPC shall apply. It is, thus, the presiding officers of those forums only, which are specified under sub-section (3) of Section 195 CrPC, who may file a complaint petition in relation to the offences punishable under the sections specified in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 195 CrPC. It is only for that purpose a legal fiction has been created, stating that the court shall be deemed to be subordinate to the court to which appeals ordinarily lie. If an appeal exclusively lies to the High Court, the Court of Land Acquisition Judge shall be subordinate to the High Court and not the Principal Civil Court, although appeal may lie before the latter from the judgments and decrees passed by it in the suits which may be filed before it. (Para 18). State of A.P. v. V. Sarma Rao, (2007) 2 SCC 159: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 535: AIR 2007 SC 137: 2007 Cri LJ 289.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-11-2006]

Laxmi Chand v. Gram Panchayat, Kararia, (1996) 7 SCC 218, relied on

[3575] — Ss. 340 and 195(1)(b) — Making complaint regarding commission of an offence referred to in S. 195(1)(b) — Power of the court concerned in respect of — Held, the court is not bound to make such complaint — Complaint will be made only if it is expedient in the interests of justice and not in every case — This expediency will normally be judged by the court by weighing not the magnitude of injury suffered by the person affected by the offence, but having regard to the effect or impact of that offence upon administration of justice

In view of the language used in Section 340 CrPC the court is not bound to make a complaint regarding commission of an offence referred to in Section 195(1)(b), as the section is conditioned by the words "court is of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice". This shows that such a course will be adopted only if the interest of justice requires and not in every case. Before filing of the complaint, the court may hold a preliminary enquiry and record a finding to the effect that it is expedient in the interests of justice that enquiry should be made into any of the offences referred to in Section 195(1)(b) CrPC. This expediency will normally be judged by the court by weighing not the magnitude of injury suffered by the person affected by such forgery or forged document, but having regard to the effect or impact, such commission of offence has upon administration of justice. The broad view of clause (b)(ii) i.e. extending it to cases where forgery of a document is committed prior to that document being produced or given in evidence in a proceeding in any court would render the victim of such forgery or forged document remediless in cases where the court may not consider it expedient in the interests of justice to make a complaint. Any interpretation which leads to a situation where a victim of a crime is rendered remediless, has to be discarded. (Para 23). Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1101: AIR 2005 SC 2119: (2005) 3 Mah LJ 530: 2005 Cri LJ 2161.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: R.C. Lahoti, C.J. and B.N. Agrawal, H.K. Sema, G.P. Mathur and P.K. Balasubramanyan, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-3-2005]

M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, 1954 SCR 1144: AIR 1954 SC 397: 1954 Cri LJ 1019, followed

Affirmed in Rugmini Ammal v. V. Narayana Reddiar, (2007) 12 SCC 611*

[3576] — Ss. 340 and 195(1)(b)(i) — Applicability — Held, not applicable to a party answering a question put to it under Or. 10 R. 2 CPC — Civil Procedure Code, 1908, Or. 10 R. 2 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 195

The power under Section 340 CrPC read with Section 195 IPC can be exercised only where someone fabricates false evidence or gives false evidence. By no stretch of imagination, can a party giving an answer to a question put under Order 10 Rule 2 CPC when not under oath and when not being examined as a witness, attract Section 195 IPC and consequently cannot attract Section 195(1)(b) and Section 340 CrPC. (Paras 28, 29 and 31)

Consequently, the decision of the Court to consider initiation of proceedings under Section 340 CrPC read with Section 195 IPC in regard to an answer to a question put under Order 10 Rule 2 of the Code is ill-conceived and wholly without jurisdiction. (Paras 32 and 33). Kapil Corepacks (P) Ltd. v. Harbans Lal, (2010) 8 SCC 452.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : R.V. Raveendran and H.L. Gokhale, JJ. [Date of decision : 3-8-2010]

Satish Kumar v. Union of India, (2009) 108 DRJ 317, overruled

B.K. Gupta v. Damodar H. Bajaj, (2001) 9 SCC 742: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1103, distinguished

[3577] — Ss. 340 and 195(1)(b)(ii) — Applicability — Interpretation of S. 195(1)(b)(ii), considered — Allegation of commission of forgery in respect of document produced/given in evidence in a proceeding in court — Initiation of proceeding under S. 340 — Sustainability — On facts, following Iqbal Singh case, (2005) 4 SCC 370, held, High Court rightly placed reliance on Sachida Nand case, (1998) 2 SCC 493 and held that initiation of proceeding under S. 340 was without jurisdiction and accordingly allowed the writ appeal — Present appeal, therefore, held, was without merit — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 463, 471, 475 and 476

Challenge in this appeal was to the judgment of Division Bench of the High Court by which the judgment of the Single Judge was set aside and the writ appeal was allowed.

Matter related to tenancy of a building by lease agreement where lease deed enabled tenant, Respondent 1, to make alterations in it. Accordingly, tenant effected some alterations in the building for which he received an order from the Municipality directing him to demolish the structure, citing it to be unauthorised. Tenant approached Government thereagainst which directed him to submit application to local authority seeking regularisation of additional structure made by him.

Appellant's contention in writ was that there was no lease agreement and construction was unauthorised which could not be legalised on other grounds. Tenant then filed counter-affidavit annexing photocopy of lease agreement. Contention of appellant thereafter was that purported lease agreement was a forged document for which she had sought opinion of handwriting expert. Fabrication of lease agreement was denied by tenant.

The Single Judge of High Court relied on the opinion given by the handwriting expert and prima facie came to the conclusion that the lease agreement was fabricated and hence there was a reasonable likelihood to establish the offences punishable under Sections 463, 471, 475 and 476 IPC. The Single Judge directed Registrar of the Court to make a complaint for the purpose in writing and send it to the Magistrate of the First Class having jurisdiction. Against this order the writ appeal was filed which was allowed. Hence the present appeal.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

It is to be noted that in view of the conflict of language between two decisions of the Supreme Court, each rendered by a Bench of three learned Judges in Sachida Nand case and Surjit Singh case regarding interpretation of Section 195(1)(b)(ii) CrPC, the matter was placed before a five-Judge Bench in Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah. After referring to the provisions contained in Sections 190, 195(1)(b)(ii) and 340 CrPC it was held that the decision in Sachida Nand case was correctly decided and the view taken is the correct view. (Para 11)

The Division Bench of High Court was, therefore, right in placing reliance on Sachida Nand case and holding that stage for initiation of the proceeding, if any, under Section 340 CrPC had not come, and therefore, initiation of the proceeding under Section 340 CrPC was without jurisdiction. The appeal is, therefore, without merit. (Paras 12, 8 and 13). Rugmini Ammal v. V. Narayana Reddiar, (2007) 12 SCC 611: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 309: AIR 2008 SC 895: (2008) 61 AIC 46 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 1405.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-12-2007]

Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1101, followed

Sachida Nand Singh v. State of Bihar, (1998) 2 SCC 493: 1998 SCC (Cri) 660, affirmed

Francis Bennion: Statutory Interpretation, 3rd Edn., para 313, cited

[3578] — S. 340 — Notice against police officials for fabrication of record and setting up a false case against two ladies — Finding of Additional District Judge that the said ladies were too weak to pelt stones and kick the police officers based on statement of witnesses under S. 161 and physical features of the said ladies — Witnesses not examined in the court — Held, order issuing notice under S. 340 is unjustified and liable to be quashed — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 194 and 195. Omkar Namdeo Jadhao v. Second Additional Sessions Judge, (1996) 7 SCC 498: AIR 1997 SC 331.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Ramaswamy and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-1-1996]

[3579] — Ss. 340 and 195 — Different statements at different stages of the proceedings made by Public Prosecutor would not constitute any offence so as to attract S. 340 — Bombay Blast case — At one stage of the proceedings before Designated Court under TADA Act, Public Prosecutor submitting that material on record was sufficient to frame charges relating to offences under Ch. VI IPC like waging war against the State etc. but at a later stage Public Prosecutor praying for dropping of charges under Ss. 121 and 121-A IPC against the accused as there was no material — Held, such shifting of stand by the Public Prosecutor would not amount to offences adverted to under S. 195 CrPC and hence would not attract S. 340

In the present case, the hearing as to framing of charges has gone on for nearly eight months. Considering the nature of the charges to be framed in the case, the voluminous record of the case presented before the court, the seriousness and magnitude of the matter when several hundreds of persons have been killed and property worth crores of rupees has been destroyed, in what manner the case should be conducted is a very serious affair. If the Public Prosecutor had been supporting at one stage of the proceedings the charge-sheet that had been laid in respect of the offences arising under Sections 121 and 121-A IPC, later on he realises that evidence is not available at that stage of the case, seeks that for the time being these charges need not be proceeded with, and if further investigation discloses such offences as having been committed, supplementary charge-sheet would be filed before the court later, such shift in the stand would not attract offences enumerated under Section 195 CrPC. The submissions made by the learned Public Prosecutor — however contradictory they may be — in a case cannot amount to fabrication of evidence by any stretch of imagination. The substance of the complaint should have been looked into and should have been decided. (Para 14)

The stand of a counsel, howsoever inconsistent it may be at different stages of the proceedings, cannot amount to offences adverted to under Section 195 CrPC. If the courts begin to issue notice for prosecution or as to why the inquiry should not be made in the matter or to launch a prosecution, no advocate can function with safety nor can he assist the court with the necessary fearlessness which is required of him. It is not unknown that even in criminal cases even after committal proceedings are over at the stage of sessions trial before charges are framed by the court or at the stage of final arguments, many Public Prosecutors have entered nolle prosequi in cases where they thought that a charge could not be framed or the accused concerned should be acquitted. However, that does not mean that such a stand could not have been taken or attracts the wrath of Section 340 CrPC. (Para 10). N. Natarajan v. B.K. Subba Rao, (2003) 2 SCC 76: 2003 SCC (Cri) 437: AIR 2003 SC 541: 2003 Cri LJ 820.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-12-2002]

[3580] — Ss. 340 and 195(3) — Perjury — Prosecution for, should be expedient in the interest of justice — Conditions for applicability — Statements made under S. 39/40, FERA before officers of Enforcement Department, admitting receipt of large sum of money for distribution to some persons, subsequently retracted alleging that the statements were extracted by inducement, coercion, threat or promise — Prosecuting authority not applying its mind to reach the subjective satisfaction that the statements were obtained voluntarily — Held on facts, conviction under S. 193 or under S. 193/120-B not sustainable — FERA, 1973 — Ss. 39 and 40 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 193

Appellants 1 and 2 in Crl. A. No. 631 of 1990 received a cash of Rs 6 lakhs, brought by a person from Bombay for distributing the said amount to various persons as per the instructions received from a person at Singapore. While he was engaged in the said illegal transaction, the Enforcement Directorate, raided his premises and recovered a sum of Rs 4,28,713 and certain documents in coded language relating to the disbursement of the cash. After the search, the two appellants were interrogated by Enforcement Officers on Oct. 19, 1966 and their statements were recorded. The first appellant in his statement admitted that he received a sum of Rs 6 lakhs from a person of Bombay on the previous day for being disbursed to various parties in accordance with information received from one 'G' of Singapore whose full address he did not know. The second appellant in his statement admitted the receipt of the amount by the first appellant and the disbursement to two named persons as instructed by the first appellant in compliance with the instructions received from Singapore. However, on October 20, 1966, both the appellants sent their retraction to the Deputy Director of Enforcement Directorate through their advocate stating that their statements recorded on the previous day were not voluntary statements but obtained under threat and force and the facts stated therein were not correct. The Income Tax Officer (ITO) on coming to know about the raid, issued summons to the first appellant who was then an assessee within his jurisdiction and recorded a statement from him on November 16, 1966. The first appellant denied of having any connection with the cash of Rs 4,28,713 said to have been recovered from his premises and reiterated that the statement by the Enforcement Officers was taken from him under force. The second appellant also gave a similar statement on January 11, 1974 when examined after 8 years. The appellant in Crl. A. No. 632 of 1990, arrayed as accused 3 (referred to as appellant 3) sent a letter dated November 4, 1966 to the Enforcement Officers claiming the money seized as belonging to him and explaining that he was negotiating with some film producers for financing film production and the seized amount included a sum of Rs 2,79,000 being the sale proceeds of his mother's jewels and Rs 70,000 being his father's money and therefore the said amount should be returned to him. Thereafter, the third appellant gave a statement before the Enforcement Officers on December 22, 1966 reiterating what he has stated in his letter dated November 4, 1966. In view of the subsequent developments, proceedings were initiated against the third appellant under the provisions of the I.T. Act. The ITO on the basis of the statement of the first appellant given before the Enforcement authorities found that the amount of Rs 6 lakhs was the income from other sources of the assessee (the first appellant) and that the explanation given by him was not satisfactory and included that amount in his taxable income. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner agreed with the ITO but the Income Tax Appellate Tribunal held that the department had not brought any material to show that the assessee was the owner of the money in question and that the evidence only indicated that the assessee had been engaged for disbursing the money not belonging to him but belonging to a third party. On the above finding, the Tribunal set aside the assessment order and referred the case back to the ITO to make a fresh assessment. In the meantime criminal proceedings were initiated against the three appellants in January 1977 pursuant to a complaint lodged by the ITO alleging that all the appellants have conspired together to give false evidence at all stages of the proceedings under the I.T. Act and to fabricate false evidence intending that the same might cause the Income Tax Officer to arrive at an erroneous opinion touching the nature and source of the sum of Rs 4,28,713 which is alleged to have been recovered from the first appellant and that all the appellants thereby have committed the offences punishable under S. 120-B IPC read with S. 193 IPC, under S. 120-B read with S. 277 of the I.T. Act and under S. 193 (simpliciter) of Indian Penal Code and in addition appellants 1 and 3 were indicted under S. 277 (simpliciter) of the Act. The trial court convicted the appellants accordingly but taking into consideration of the fact that the appellants were detained under COFEPOSA in respect of the amount seized and they have also undergone the ordeal of enquiries and trial for a considerable length of time sentenced each of them to undergo imprisonment till the rising of the Court for each of the offences and to pay a total fine of Rs 2,000, Rs 600 and Rs 1,500 respectively with the default clause. The appellate court and the High Court in revision confirmed the conviction and sentence. Allowing the appeals

Held :

The words "in or in relation to a proceeding in that court" in S. 340 CrPC show that the court which can take action under this section is only the court operating within the definition of S. 195(3) before which or in relation to whose proceeding the offence has been committed. There is a word of caution in-built in that provision itself that the action to be taken should be expedient in the interest of justice. Therefore, it is incumbent that the power given by S. 340 of the Code should be used with utmost care and after due consideration.

It has not been shown that either the sanctioning authority or the prosecuting authority applied its mind even subjectively and found that the accused-appellants 1 and 2 gave their earlier inculpatory statements voluntarily but not under any inducement, coercion, threat or promise; that the deponents intentionally gave a false statement before the ITO at the subsequent stage within the ambit of S. 193 IPC and that it was expedient in the interest of justice to initiate the criminal proceedings for perjury. The statements were initially recorded under S. 39 of FERA. But the subsequent statements recorded by the ITO were in exercise of the powers under the provisions of the I.T. Act. It is not the case of the prosecution that these two appellants gave any inculpatory statement before the ITO and thereafter retracted. In fact, appellants 1 and 2 had retracted their earlier statements even on the very next day which retraction was not taken note of by the ITO. In the circumstances the convictions recorded by the courts below under Ss. 120-B read with 193 IPC and 193 (simpliciter) as against appellants 1 and 2 cannot be sustained. K.T.M.S. Mohd. v. Union of India, (1992) 3 SCC 178: 1992 SCC (Cri) 572: AIR 1992 SC 1831: 1992 Cri LJ 2781: (1992) 197 ITR 196: (1992) 75 Comp Cas 321.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-4-1992]

[3581] — S. 340 — Application for taking proceedings in perjury against owner of the land on ground of deliberately misleading the Court by suppressing facts and making untrue allegations — Supreme Court's interim order prohibiting construction on the land in dispute — Land sold to third parties by original owner while retaining possession of a portion thereof, and purchasers commencing construction thereon — Yet the original owner without appearing before the Court assuring through his counsel and contesting that no construction was going on on the land — Held, though technically the owner was right as he was not making any construction on the portion of the land in his occupation, but factually he was wrong as construction was going on on the plot and hence his statement was apt to mislead the Court — Though he may not be guilty of contempt or perjury but he was unfair to the Court — While not taking any action for perjury, the original owner directed to pay a cost of Rs 10,000 which shall be deposited by him within one month with the Supreme Court Legal Aid Committee. State of Maharashtra v. Pandurang K. Pangare, 1995 Supp (2) SCC 119: AIR 1995 SC 1202.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.M. Sahai and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-2-1995]

[3582] — S. 340 — PIL — Abduction and alleged murder of an advocate, his wife and minor child — Lawyers going on indefinite strike demanding inquiry by an independent agency — Petition in the nature of public interest litigation filed by a stranger — Bar associations directed to be impleaded as parties to the writ petition — Report of 'Action Committee' of bar association and other relevant documents placed before the High Court — On application of the petitioner High Court dismissing the petition as withdrawn — Held, the High Court wholly unjustified in dismissing the petition which had shocked the lawyer fraternity in the region — Ordinarily after completion of investigation and submission of charge-sheet to the court the Supreme Court does not reopen the investigation — However, in facts and circumstances of the case, to do complete justice and to instil confidence in the public mind the Supreme Court directed the CBI to make fresh investigation in the matter — CBI to exercise all the powers available to it under CrPC and other provisions of law — Constitution of India, Arts. 226 and 136. Punjab & Haryana High Court Bar Assn. v. State of Punjab, (1994) 1 SCC 616: 1994 SCC (Cri) 455: AIR 1994 SC 1023: 1994 Cri LJ 1368.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Kuldip Singh and S.C. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-12-1993]

[3583] — S. 340 — After about 10 years of the alleged incident State succeeding in restoring its application which had been dismissed for default — Held, continuance of proceedings of such lapse of time not justified — State free to file suits to recover any amounts wrongly paid on the basis of the false statement — CrPC, 1898 — S. 476 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 193

It is not the function of the court hearing an application under S. 476 to cater to the acrimonious and vengeful attitudes taken up by the parties and to advance their interests elsewhere. K.N. Mishra v. Jiwaji University, 1980 Supp SCC 415: 1981 SCC (Cri) 356: AIR 1981 SC 174(5).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-9-1980]

[3584] — S. 340 — Detenu falsely claiming to have sent his written representation to the President of India through another person — Government preferring application under S. 340 Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 for prosecution of the persons responsible for forging the documents and making interpolations in dak register of President's Secretariat — CBI enquiring into the matter — Hence passing of final orders on the application under S. 340 deferred till completion of investigation by CBI — Preventive Detention — Representation to appropriate authority/Government — Generally. Pushpa Devi M. Jatia v. M.L. Wadhawan, (1987) 3 SCC 367: 1987 SCC (Cri) 526: AIR 1987 SC 1748: 1987 Cri LJ 1888: (1987) 12 ECC 356.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-1987]

[3585] — S. 340 — Doubtful signature — Remedy — Inquiry directed in terms of S. 340 CrPC

There being no merit in the appeal, it is dismissed accordingly. However, keeping in view the fact that there appears to be an apparent dissimilarity in the signatures of the deponent, there exists a necessity for conducting an enquiry in this behalf. Therefore, the Registrar (Judicial) is directed to conduct an enquiry in terms of Section 340 CrPC. (Paras 22 and 7 to 9). Radhey Shyam Garg v. Naresh Kumar Gupta, (2009) 13 SCC 201: (2009) 80 AIC 54 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2009]

[3586] — S. 340 — When invocable — Held, provisions of S. 340 can be invoked by the court only when it is established that offence of forgery had already been committed (in respect of document produced or given in evidence in the proceedings in that court) — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 463, 471, 475 and 476

The appellant purchased land from one M (vendor) and pursuant to the execution of sale deed in his favour, he was handed over possession. Respondent-accused (Respondents 2 to 4 herein) contended that land in question was recorded in their names. On inquiries made by both appellant and vendor in Tahsildar's court, they came to know that accused, in collusion with the Area Lekhpal, got their names mutated on the basis of Area Lekhpal's report. Area Lekhpal had given a totally untrue statement, and by showing an alive person, appellant's vendor as dead had got the names of the accused mutated. Appellant filed an application before SDM to set aside such mutation order, which was allowed and appeal of respondent-accused thereagainst dismissed. Thus, matter relating to mutation proceedings came to an end.

However, the appellant initiated criminal proceedings against respondent-accused by filing application/complaint under Section 156(3) CrPC, alleging the aforesaid facts. The said application/complaint of the appellant was allowed and police registered the FIR and started investigation. Ultimately, after further litigation, police completed the investigation and the investigating officer submitted the charge-sheet for commission of alleged offences under Sections 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120-B IPC and criminal case was registered against the respondents and cognizance taken against them. Respondent-accused then filed petition under Section 482 CrPC before the High Court for quashing the charge-sheet and taking cognizance thereof, which was allowed.

The High Court held that the application under Section 156(3) CrPC was barred in view of the provisions of Section 195 CrPC. However, appellant complainant was given liberty to move an application before the court concerned for taking action against the accused persons in accordance with the provisions of Section 340 CrPC.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The High Court further committed a gross error in resorting to Section 340 CrPC as provisions of the said section can be invoked only when it is established that offence of forgery had already been committed. (Para 24)

The accused had miserably failed for grant of any relief under Section 482 CrPC. The limit of exercising jurisdiction conferred on the High Court under Section 482 CrPC is well defined and by no stretch of imagination, it could be said that petition filed by the accused under Section 482 CrPC had fulfilled the requirement as contemplated in this section. (Para 25)

Hence, the impugned order cannot be sustained. The same is, accordingly, set aside and quashed. As a necessary consequence thereof, the Magistrate is directed to proceed with the criminal complaint filed by the appellant against respondent-accused in accordance with law and on merits. (Para 26). Mahesh Chand Sharma v. State of U.P., (2009) 15 SCC 519: (2009) 82 AIC 227 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-8-2009]

Sachida Nand Singh v. State of Bihar, (1998) 2 SCC 493: 1998 SCC (Cri) 660; Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1101, followed [3587] — S. 340 — Arms Act, 1959 — S. 7 — Alleged recovery of arms and ammunition made on 8-3-1990 at 5.30 p.m. — Telegram sent by father of the appellant to the higher authorities on 8-3-1990 at 5 a.m. complaining that his son was illegally arrested by the police on 6-3-1990 — Identical complaint made to the Metropolitan Magistrate on same day on which the Magistrate directed the SHO to report on the following day — Held, in the circumstances, it can be presumed that the application was filed during the court hours which ended at 5.00 p.m. making the defence version probable — Interpolations in the relevant entries of Daily Diary Book of police post making changes in time of departure of police party from 6 p.m. to 5 p.m. — Conviction and sentence of the appellant set aside and Delhi Government directed to pay to the appellant a sum of Rs 50,000 as compensation — Notice issued to the police personnel concerned to show cause why a complaint should not be made against them for offences under Ss. 193, 195 and 211 IPC — TADA, 1987 — S. 5 — Constitution of India — Art. 21. Mohd. Zahid v. Govt. of NCT of Delhi, (1998) 5 SCC 419: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1327: AIR 1998 SC 2023: 1998 Cri LJ 2908.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-5-1998]

[3588] — S. 340 — Identification for regularisation — Filing false certificates before Supreme Court for seeking — Effect — Industrial Tribunal passing an award for regularisation of workmen of BCCL — On BCCL's application, Supreme Court directing the workmen to furnish a list of workmen concerned to the counsel of BCCL so as to enable their identification — Workmen furnishing the list accordingly and filing a copy thereof with Supreme Court — S filing for himself and for other workmen certain certificates along with counter-affidavit, claiming themselves to be the real workmen to be regularised as per the Industrial Tribunal's award — Objecting to those certificates, the respondent-workmen by an IA under S. 340 CrPC read with Or. 47 of Supreme Court Rules, 1966, seeking a direction for enquiry into the correctness or otherwise of the said documents — Pursuant to Supreme Court's order, Chief Judicial Magistrate submitting a report to the effect that the individual certificates filed before Supreme Court were not reliable and were intended to deprive the actual workmen from getting jobs — In such circumstances, S and other filing the certificates in question, held, not entitled to claim before the management that they were the workmen to be regularised — Supreme Court Rules, 1966, Or. 47 — Application under S. 340 CrPC read with Or. 47 SC Rules — Relief. Bharat Coking Coal Ltd. v. Raghunath Balmiki, (1999) 1 SCC 177: 1999 SCC (L&S) 188.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Venkataswami and A.P. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-9-1998]

— S. 340(1) See Ss. 195(1)(b)(ii) and 340(1)
See also Ss. 344 and 340(1)

[3589] — S. 340(1) — Court is not obliged to make a preliminary inquiry or a complaint — But if court decides to do so it should make a finding that on facts it is expedient in the interest of justice that offence should be further probed into

The court at the stage envisaged in Section 340 is not deciding the guilt or innocence of the party against whom proceedings are to be taken before the Magistrate. At that stage the court only considers whether it is expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be made into any offence affecting administration of justice. The would-be accused is not necessary for the court to decide the question of expediency in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be held. The persons against whom proceedings were instituted have no such right to participate in the preliminary inquiry. (Paras 16 and 18). Pritish v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 1 SCC 253: 2002 SCC (Cri) 140: AIR 2002 SC 236: 2002 Cri LJ 548.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, S.N. Phukan and Y.K. Sabharwal, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-11-2001]

Nimmakayala Audi Narrayanamma v. State of A.P., AIR 1970 AP 119: 1970 Cri LJ 443, overruled

M. Muthuswamy v. Special Police Establishment, 1985 Cri LJ 420 (Mad), approved

Pritish R. Tayde v. State of Maharashtra, 2001 Cri LJ 1594 (Bom), affirmed

[3590] — S. 340(1) — Preliminary inquiry under — Purpose of — Held, the purpose is not to find whether a person is guilty or not but is only to decide whether it is expedient in the interest of justice to inquire into the offence

The nub of Section 340(1) CrPC is formation of an opinion by the court (before which proceedings were to be held) that it is expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be made into an offence which appears to have been committed. Pritish v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 1 SCC 253: 2002 SCC (Cri) 140: AIR 2002 SC 236: 2002 Cri LJ 548.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, S.N. Phukan and Y.K. Sabharwal, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-11-2001]

[3591] — S. 340(1) — Scope of — Departure in the new Code in the matter of appeal — Ss. 476 and 476-B, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, compared

Section 340, Criminal Procedure Code, 1973, corresponds to old S. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898. Significant change has been made in respect of right of appeal under old S. 476-B. Now an order of the High Court made under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) of S. 340 is specifically excluded for the purpose of appeal to the superior Court under S. 341(1), Criminal Procedure Code, (new). This is, therefore, a new restriction in the way of the appellant when he approaches the Supreme Court under Art. 136 of the Constitution. K. Karunakaran v. T.V. Eachara Warrier, (1978) 1 SCC 18: 1978 SCC (Cri) 32: AIR 1978 SC 290: 1978 Cri LJ 339: 1978 MLJ (Cri) 237.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.K. Goswami and V.D. Tulzapurkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-11-1977]

[3592] — S. 340(1)(b) — Conditions for making complaint under, against a person who made false affidavit and adduced false evidence in proceedings before court — In case of non-application of mind by court in respect of any of the conditions, order for filing complaint would be vitiated

There are two conditions on fulfilment of which a complaint can be filed against a person who has given a false affidavit or evidence in a proceeding before a court. Firstly, that a person has given a false affidavit in a proceeding before the court and, secondly, in the opinion of the court it is expedient in the interest of justice to make an enquiry against such a person in relation to the offence committed by him. (Para 3)

In the present case the High Court has recorded a finding that the appellant has made a false statement on oath and has also used evidence known to be false and fabricated. But there is no material on record to show that the Court applied its mind regarding the second condition as to whether it was expedient in the interest of justice to make an enquiry into the false evidence given by the appellant and a complaint was to be filed. In the absence of application of mind in that regard, the order passed by the High Court directing the Prothonotary and Senior Master of the High Court to file a complaint against the appellant was vitiated. (Para 3). B.K. Gupta v. Damodar H. Bajaj, (2001) 9 SCC 742.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.N. Khare and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-1-2001]

[3593] — Ss. 340(1)(b) and 341 to 344 & 238 to 243 — Opportunity of hearing to person concerned during preliminary inquiry — During preliminary inquiry under S. 340(1) by court into offence committed in relation to a proceeding in that court or in respect of any document produced or given in evidence, held, the court is not required to afford any opportunity of hearing to the person against whom it might file a complaint before Magistrate for initiating prosecution proceedings — Provision for appeal under S. 341 does not indicate that such person has any right to participate in the preliminary inquiry

An area of 3.9 acres of land was acquired by the State Govt. and a total of Rs 24,000 was awarded as compensation by the Land Acquisition Officer. But the Reference Court (a civil court) under Section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, on the basis of evidence adduced by the parties, enhanced the amount of compensation to rupees ten lakhs thirty thousand, besides other benefits under Section 23 of the Act. The appellant was one of the beneficiaries of the said award. Thereupon some persons of the locality brought to the notice of the Reference Court that the claimants had wangled the enhancement by producing forged copies of sale deeds. The Reference Court conducted an inquiry, got down the relevant records from the Sub-Registry and on examining the same, found that the appellant and another person had committed offences affecting the administration of justice by using forged documents. The court then passed the following order:

"Therefore, it is expedient in the ends of justice on my part to file the complaint in writing against them before Judicial Magistrate of the First Class having jurisdiction to take appropriate and proper criminal action against them, as it appears that they have not only cheated the public at large and the Government but have misguided or tried to misguide my learned predecessor by preparing and producing false documentary evidence as well as by giving false oral evidence just to have a wrongful gain."

The persons who had moved the Reference Court bringing the fact regarding forgery of the documents to its notice, having felt that the other persons who also had secured advantage of such enhancement were also to be proceeded against, filed an appeal before the District Court. The District Judge ordered that the complaint shall be filed against five more persons besides the appellant and another person. The five persons moved the High Court and got themselves extricated from the prosecution proceedings. The appellant then filed an appeal before the High Court purportedly under Section 341 CrPC in challenge of the order of the Reference Court. The main contention he raised before the High Court was that the Reference Court had overlooked the basic principles of natural justice and proceeded to make an inquiry without giving an opportunity to him to be heard in the matter and hence great prejudice had been caused to him as he had been deprived of the opportunity to be heard. The High Court rejected the contention. Before the Supreme Court it was contended on behalf of the appellant that the scheme of Sections 340 to 344 of the Code contains an inbuilt safety for the persons sought to be proceeded against, by obliging the court to afford an opportunity of being heard to them and that thus the basic principle of natural justice was violated when the Reference Court ordered prosecution against the appellant without affording him an opportunity of being heard. Rejecting the contention and dismissing the appeal

Held:

The appellant cannot complain that he was not heard during the preliminary inquiry conducted by the Reference Court under Section 340 of the Code. (Para 19)

The nub of Section 340(1) CrPC is formation of an opinion by the court (before which proceedings were to be held) that it is expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be made into an offence which appears to have been committed. In order to form such opinion the court is empowered to hold a preliminary inquiry. It is not peremptory that such preliminary inquiry should be held. Even without such preliminary inquiry the court can form such an opinion when it appears to the court that an offence has been committed in relation to a proceeding in that court. Even when the court forms such an opinion it is not mandatory that the court should make a complaint. This sub-section has conferred a power on the court to do so. It does not mean that the court should, as a matter of course, make a complaint. But once the court decides to do so, then the court should make a finding to the effect that on the fact situation it is expedient in the interest of justice that the offence should further be probed into. If the court finds it necessary to conduct a preliminary inquiry to reach such a finding it is always open to the court to do so, though absence of any such preliminary inquiry would not vitiate a finding reached by the court regarding its opinion. (Para 9)

The definition of "inquiry" in Section 2(g) CrPC refers to the pre-trial inquiry, and in the present context it means the inquiry to be conducted by the Magistrate. Once the court which forms an opinion, whether it is after conducting the preliminary inquiry or not, that it is expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be made into any offence the said court has to make a complaint in writing to the Magistrate of the First Class concerned. As the offences involved are all falling within the purview of "warrant case" [as defined in Section 2(x)] of the Code the Magistrate concerned has to follow the procedure prescribed in Chapter XIX of the Code. The Magistrate on receiving the complaint shall proceed under Section 238 to Section 243 of the Code. From those provisions it is clear that the person against whom the complaint is made has a legal right to be heard whether he should be tried for the offence or not, but such a legal right is envisaged only when the Magistrate calls the accused to appear before him. The person concerned has then the right to participate in the pretrial inquiry envisaged in Section 239 of the Code. It is open to him to satisfy the Magistrate that the allegations against him are groundless and that he is entitled to be discharged. Thus the scheme delineated above would clearly show that there is no statutory requirement to afford an opportunity of hearing to the persons against whom that court might file a complaint before the Magistrate for initiating prosecution proceedings. (Paras 10, 13 and 15)

There is no substance in the contention that even if there is no specific statutory provision for affording such an opportunity during the preliminary inquiry stage, the fact that an appeal is provided in Section 341 of the Code to any person aggrieved by the order is indicative of his right to participate in such preliminary inquiry. Section 341 confers a power on the party on whose application the court has decided or not decided to make a complaint, as well as the party against whom it is decided to make such complaint, to file an appeal to the court to which the former court is subordinate. But the mere fact that such an appeal is provided, it is not a premise for concluding that the court is under a legal obligation to afford an opportunity (to the persons against whom the complaint would be made) to be heard prior to making the complaint. There are other provisions in the Code for reaching conclusions whether a person should be arrayed as accused in criminal proceedings or not, but in most of those proceedings there is no legal obligation cast on the court or the authorities concerned, to afford an opportunity of hearing to the would-be accused. In any event the appellant has already availed of the opportunity of the provisions of Section 341 by filing the appeal before the High Court. (Paras 13 and 14). Pritish v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 1 SCC 253: 2002 SCC (Cri) 140: AIR 2002 SC 236: 2002 Cri LJ 548.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas, S.N. Phukan and Y.K. Sabharwal, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-11-2001]

M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397: 1954 Cri LJ 1019, relied on

— S. 340(3) See also Ss. 195(1)(a) and 340(3)

[3594] — S. 340(3) — Need for amendment of stressed to eliminate perjury which has become a way of life in law courts

Perjury has also become a way of life in the law courts. A trial Judge knows that the witness is telling a lie and is going back on his previous statement, yet he does not wish to punish him or even file a complaint against him. He is required to sign the complaint himself which deters him from filing the complaint. Perhaps law needs amendment to clause (b) of Section 340(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure in this respect as the High Court can direct any officer to file a complaint. To get rid of the evil of perjury, the court should resort to the use of the provisions of law as contained in Chapter XXVI of the Code of Criminal Procedure. (Para 36). Swaran Singh v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 668: 2001 SCC (Cri) 190: AIR 2000 SC 2017: 2000 Cri LJ 2780.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Wadhwa[2] and Ruma Pal[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 26-4-2000]

— S. 341 See also S. 476-B, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1256 in Vol. 2

— S. 341 See Ss. 156, 195 & 340 and 341

See also Ss. 340 and 341

See also Ss. 340(1)(b) and 341 to 344 & 238 to 243

See also Ss. 482, 341 and 397(2)

[3595] — Ss. 341, 340, 2(d) and 482 — Order of the Additional District and Sessions Judge directing the Rent Control Officer to file complaint cannot be treated as complaint within the meaning of S. 2(d) — Hence no appeal can be filed against it under S. 341. Surendra Gupta v. Bhagwan Devi, (1994) 4 SCC 657: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1318: AIR 1996 SC 509.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.M. Sahai and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-4-1994]

— S. 342 See Ss. 340(1)(b) and 341 to 344 & 238 to 243

See also Ss. 482, 148(3), 342, 359, 357, 358 and 227

[3596] — S. 342 — Scope of — Rebuttable presumption under S. 4, PC Act, 1947 — Extent of burden of proof on accused under — Not of the same degree and character as under Evidence Act, 1872 — S. 101 — Explanation under S. 342, CrPC when enough — Prosecution story militating against the fact presumed — Effect of — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 — S. 4(1)

The operation of S. 4(1), in terms, is confined to a trial of an offence punishable under S. 161 or S. 165, Penal Code or under cl. (a) or (b) of S. 5(1) read with sub-section (2) of that section of the Act. If at such a trial, the prosecution proves that the accused has accepted or obtained gratification other than legal remuneration, the court has to presume the existence of the further fact in support of the prosecution case, viz., that the gratification was accepted or obtained by the accused as a motive or reward such as mentioned in S. 161, Penal Code. The presumption, however, is not absolute. It is rebuttable. The accused can prove the contrary.

The quantum and the nature of proof required to displace this presumption may vary according to the circumstances of each case. Such proof may partake the shape of defence evidence led by the accused, or it may consist of circumstances appearing in the prosecution evidence itself, as a result of cross-examination or otherwise. But the degree and the character of the burden of proof which S. 4(1) casts on an accused person to rebut the presumption raised thereunder, cannot be equated with the degree and character of proof which under S. 101, Evidence Act rests on the prosecution. While the mere plausibility of an explanation given by the accused in his examination under S. 342, CrPC, 1898, may not be enough, the burden on him to negate the presumption may stand discharged, if the effect of the material brought on the record, in its totality, renders the existence of the fact presumed, improbable.

The accused may rebut the presumption by showing a mere preponderance of probability in his favour; it is not necessary for him to establish his case beyond a reasonable doubt.

The sole purpose of the presumption under S. 4(1) is to relieve the prosecution of the burden of proving a fact which is an essential ingredient of the offence under S. 5(1)(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act and S. 161, Penal Code. The presumption therefore can be used in furtherance of the prosecution case and not in derogation of it. If the story set up by the prosecution inherently militates against or is inconsistent with the fact presumed, the presumption will be rendered sterile from its very inception. Trilok Chand Jain v. State of Delhi, (1975) 4 SCC 761: 1975 SCC (Cri) 725: AIR 1977 SC 666: (1976) 1 SCR 348: 1977 Cri LJ 254.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, P.N. Bhagwati and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-8-1975]

[3597] — Ss. 342, 345 and 348 — Perjury — Lying on oath before court — Imposition of heavy costs as punishment instead of prosecution for perjury — Issue left open — Contempt of Courts Act, 1971, Ss. 2(c) and 12 — Constitution of India, Arts. 129 and 215 — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 177, 181, 182, 191, 193, 196 and 209

The question involving moral and ethical issues, as to whether a court, having reached a conclusion that a party deserves to be prosecuted for perjury, should let him off with what it considers to be a stiff penalty by way of costs, on the ground that courts are overburdened with work, is left open for the present. (Para 11). Ashok Kumar Mittal v. Ram Kumar Gupta, (2009) 2 SCC 656.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-1-2009]

[3598] — S. 342 — Application made by Co-accused before magistrate alleging that police had already arrested the accused and was also trying to falsely implicate him — Held, the application is relevant under S. 11(2), Evidence Act and could be considered as a part of the co-accused's statement made under S. 342, CrPC. Satbir v. State of Haryana, (1981) 4 SCC 508: 1981 SCC (Cri) 860: AIR 1981 SC 2074: 1981 Cri LJ 1702.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-1-1981]

— S. 343 See Ss. 340(1)(b) and 341 to 344 & 238 to 243

— S. 344 See also S. 479-A, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1257 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 344 See also Ss. 340(1)(b) and 341 to 344 & 238 to 243

[3599] — S. 344 — Scope and applicability of — Mere falsity of statements made not enough — They should have been made "intentionally" — Official in the department swearing on the instructions of his superiors, held, cannot be said to have made the statements intentionally — CrPC, 1898 — S. 479-A

Held :

That the facts stated are not true is not enough for sanctioning the prosecution. An essential prerequisite of S. 479-A is that the court must form the opinion that the witnesses had made the statement complained of "intentionally".

Again under S. 479-A, CrPC, not only is it necessary that the court must form the opinion that the witness had intentionally given false evidence, but it is further necessary that the court must come to the conclusion that for the eradication of the evils of perjury and in the interests of justice it is expedient that the witness should be prosecuted for the offence which appears to have been committed by him. Mohd. Ibrahim v. B. Rama Rao, (1976) 2 SCC 33: 1976 SCC (Cri) 233: AIR 1976 SC 1822: 1976 Cri LJ 1385.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud and A.C. Gupta, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-11-1975]

[3600] — S. 344 — Essential ingredients for invocation of — Held, are: (i) Court at the time of delivery of judgment or final order must at the first instance express an opinion to the effect that the witness before it has either intentionally given false evidence or fabricated such evidence; (ii) Court must come to the conclusion that in the interest of justice the witness concerned should be punished summarily by it for the offence which appears to have been committed by the witness; and (iii) Before commencing the summary trial for punishment the witness must be given reasonable opportunity of showing cause why he should not be so punished — All these conditions are mandatory (Para 10). Mahila Vinod Kumari v. State of M.P., (2008) 8 SCC 34: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 414: AIR 2008 SC 2965: (2008) 3 KLT 509: (2008) 69 AIC 189 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 3867.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-7-2008]

Narayanswami v. State of Maharashtra, (1971) 2 SCC 182: 1971 SCC (Cri) 507, followed

[3601] — S. 344 — Perjury — Petitioner filing false report against two persons alleging rape — On basis of the report charge-sheet filed and accused put to trial — During trial petitioner resiling from her statement made during investigation and even denying lodging of FIR or having given any statement to police — Accused were acquitted but cognizance taken against petitioner in terms of S. 344 — Before the trial court petitioner admitting that she had lodged false report of rape against the accused and hence sentenced to undergo three months' simple imprisonment — Appeal filed thereagainst dismissed by High Court — Submission before the Supreme Court that being a girl of tender age, she was pressurised by her mother and uncle to give a false report was found at variance with the statement made in court during trial to the effect that she had not reported anything to the police — Held, it is a settled position in law that so far as sexual offences are concerned, sanctity is attached to the statement of a victim — It has been repeatedly held that evidence of the prosecutrix alone is sufficient for the purpose of conviction if it is found to be reliable, cogent and credible — In the present case, on the basis of the allegations made by the petitioner, two persons were arrested and had to face trial and suffered the ignominy of being involved in a serious offence like rape — Their acquittal, may, to a certain extent, have washed away the stigma, but that is not enough — Hence, no infirmity in the order of the trial court and the High Court to warrant interference (Paras 4 to 8 and 13). Mahila Vinod Kumari v. State of M.P., (2008) 8 SCC 34: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 414: AIR 2008 SC 2965: (2008) 3 KLT 509: (2008) 69 AIC 189 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 3867.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-7-2008]

[3602] — Ss. 344, 311 and 391 — Enforcement of rule of law — Politically and/or financially influential persons — Enforcement of law against, despite their attempts to coerce/buy witnesses to turn hostile — Role of courts in — Held, if the court acts contrary to the role it is expected to play, it will be the destruction of the fundamental edifice on which the justice delivery system stands — Judiciary — Fundamental duty of — Evidence Act, 1872 — S. 165

The complex pattern of life which is never static requires a fresher outlook and a timely and vigorous moulding of old precepts to some new conditions, ideas and ideals. If the court acts contrary to the role it is expected to play, it will be destruction of the fundamental edifice on which the justice delivery system stands. People for whose benefit the courts exist shall start doubting the efficacy of the system. Increasingly, people are believing that laws are like spiders' webs: if some light or powerless thing falls into them, it is caught, but a bigger one can break through and get away. (Paras 22 and 24)

Zahira's role in the whole case is an eye-opener for all concerned with the administration of criminal justice. The criminal justice system is likely to be affected if persons like Zahira are to be left unpunished. Not only the role of Zahira but also of others whose conduct and approach before the inquiry officer has been highlighted needs to be noted. The inquiry officer has found that Zahira could not explain her assets and the explanations given by her in respect of the sources of bank deposits, etc. have been found to be unacceptable. There is no reason to take a different view. Zahira has committed contempt of the Supreme Court. (Paras 18 and 20). Zahira Habibullah Sheikh (5) v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 3 SCC 374: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 8: AIR 2006 SC 1367: (2006) 2 KLT 350: 2006 Cri LJ 1694: (2006) 2 Guj LR 1493.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-3-2006]

Sukhdev Singh Sodhi v. Chief Justice and Judges of the Pepsu High Court, 1954 SCR 454: AIR 1954 SC 186: 1954 Cri LJ 460, clarified

Supreme Court Bar Assn. v. Union of India, (1998) 4 SCC 409, discussed

T.N. Godavarman Thirumulpad (67) v. Union of India, (2003) 10 Scale 1126, relied on [3603] — Ss. 344 and 340 — Whether S. 344 or S. 340 attracted — Order issued by Magistrate while acquitting an accused in a criminal case directing that notices be sent to the ASI and the Head Constable to show cause as to why proceedings be not initiated against them under Ss. 191, 192 and 193 IPC — No notices having been issued, application filed by appellant intimating the Magistrate about that fact — Held, order of the Magistrate directing issuance of the notices was one under S. 344 and not under S. 340 — Hence Sessions Judge in revision and High Court committed gross error in quashing the proceedings on the erroneous assumption that the application filed by the appellant intimating about non-issuance of notices was an application for initiation of criminal proceedings pursuant to which Magistrate had started criminal action. Gurnam Singh v. State of Punjab, (2000) 10 SCC 359.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-9-1999]

[3604] — S. 344 and S. 340(1) — Purpose of S. 344 — Held, object of the legislature underlying enactment of the provision is that the evil of perjury and fabrication of evidence has to be eradicated and can be better achieved now as it is open to courts to take recourse to S. 340(1) in cases in which they have failed to take action under S. 344 — It was to further arm the court with a weapon to deal with more flagrant cases and not to take away the weapon already in its possession — It introduced an additional alternative procedure to punish perjury by the very court before which it was committed — Further held, evil of perjury has assumed alarming proportions in cases depending on oral evidence and in order to deal with the menace effectively it is desirable for the courts to use the provision more effectively and frequently than it is presently done (Paras 8, 9 and 12). Mahila Vinod Kumari v. State of M.P., (2008) 8 SCC 34: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 414: AIR 2008 SC 2965: (2008) 3 KLT 509: (2008) 69 AIC 189 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 3867.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-7-2008]

— S. 345 See also S. 480, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1260 in Vol. 2

— S. 345 See Ss. 342, 345 and 348

See also CONTEMPT OF COURT in Vol. 12

[3605] — S. 345 — Offences under, held, per se do not amount to contempt — They are contempt only if they are committed "in the view or presence of the court" — Otherwise they remain offences under IPC simpliciter — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 175, 178, 179, 180 or 228 (Para 17). Arun Paswan v. State of Bihar, (2004) 5 SCC 53: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1503: AIR 2004 SC 721.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2003]

[3606] — S. 345 — Abusive slogans raised against judiciary and a District Judge outside the courtroom within the court premises — Bar to jurisdiction of High Court under proviso to S. 10, Contempt of Courts Act, 1971, held, not attracted since offences under Ss. 175, 178 to 180 or S. 228 IPC were not committed in the view or presence of the court but outside and such court took no action under S. 345 CrPC — Also, if the alleged conduct is one which scandalises the court and impairs administration of justice, the said bar would not apply — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 175, 178, 179, 180 or 228 — Contempt of Courts Act, 1971 — S. 10 proviso

Appellant police officers [three Sub-Inspectors and a Deputy Superintendent of Police (Dy. SP)] were convicted and sentenced in a contempt proceeding initiated against them before the High Court, Patna on a complaint lodged by the District and Sessions Judge, Sasaram. In the said complaint, the District Judge alleged that since the contemner AP had failed to comply with his order whereby he was directed to produce a case diary before the court, AP was ordered to remain present in court till the rising of the court at 4.30 p.m. The complainant further stated that while he was hearing another criminal matter in the court after recess, a group of persons in plain clothes as also in police uniform were seen on the road in front of his courtroom in the civil court premises and after some time the said persons started raising abusive slogans against him. The District Judge stated that the said police officials were led by Dy. SP, Sasaram, Sub-Inspector SY [President of Bihar Police Officers' Association (BPOA)] and Sub-Inspector AK (Secretary of BPOA). It was also stated that they were present in the court premises with their official arms with them for creating trouble and causing disruption in the functioning of the court. A meeting was said to have been held in the chamber of the Deputy Superintendent of Police for creating pandemonium and to assault the District Judge. An FIR was also lodged against the said District Judge.

On receipt of the complaint, the High Court issued notices to the contemners to show cause as to why contempt proceedings should not be initiated against them. The High Court also directed the Director General of Police and the Additional Director General of Police to appear before the Court. The Additional Director General of Police made spot enquiry and submitted a report to the Court. The High Court, after examining the said report and other material on record, found the contemners guilty and recorded the sentence.

Before the Supreme Court, the contemner AP submitted (i) that he was the second IO of the case and had not received any information to produce the case diary, (ii) that he was present inside the courtroom at the time when slogans in abusive language were being shouted against the Judge and the judiciary, (iii) that he had not played any role therein, and (iv) that pursuant to the show-cause notice he had tendered apology which ought to have been accepted. Further, the Deputy Superintendent of Police, Sasaram submitted that at the time of the incident he was sitting in the SDM's office and he had no knowledge as to what was happening in the civil court. It was only after he came to know about the same that he went to the spot and pacified the officers. The remaining two contemners i.e. SY (President of BPOA) and AK (Secretary of BPOA) urged (a) that there was breach of principles of natural justice inasmuch as the contemners were not afforded an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses who had deposed against them, (b) that their names were not mentioned in the complaint, (c) that they were not at all present on the spot as they were at Dehri Police Lines at that particular time, and (d) that the contempt proceedings initiated against the contemners by the High Court were incompetent and were hit by proviso to Section 10 of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1971 as Section 345 CrPC, 1973 empowers any civil, criminal or revenue court to punish summarily a person who is found guilty of committing any offence under Sections 175, 178, 179, 180 or Section 228 of the Penal Code in the view or presence of the court.

Dismissing the appeals,

Held:

(i) In relation to the submissions made by the contemner AP

Before the Additional Director General of Police, Sub-Inspector AP admitted that he had written the FIR PS Case No. 46 of 2002 lodged on 19-1-2002 under Sections 342/504 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act against the District and Sessions Judge. It is unthinkable that SI, who is a part and parcel of the administration of justice, could have filed an FIR against the District and Sessions Judge for such offences. This itself disclosed the frame of mind of the contemner towards the judicial officers and judicial administration. (Para 8)

(ii) In relation to the submissions made by the Deputy Superintendent of Police

The office of the SDM is situated on the north of G.T. Road and the civil court is situated on the south of G.T. Road. In such a situation, it is difficult to believe that the Dy. SP, when sitting with the SDM, would not know as to what was happening in the adjacent building. This apart, SK who was posted as Police Inspector-cum-Officer-in-charge of Police Station Sasaram and was present in the meeting held in the office of the SDM, had stated that the information about the detention of AP was received by him and other Junior Inspectors who were sitting with him in the said meeting. It is hard to believe that all the junior police officers assembled at that place had received the information but Dy. SP, who is the senior police officer, would not know about the incident. SK had stated that the said information was within the knowledge of Dy. SP but he did not stop the Junior Inspectors from going towards the court nor he went to the court premises promptly. The argument that the contemner had not received the information about the incident is, therefore, inherently unbelievable and cannot be accepted. (Para 10)

(iii) In relation to the submissions made by the contemners SY (President of Bihar Police Officers' Association) and AK (Secretary of the said Association)

(b) The names of the contemners were clearly mentioned in the complaint. (Para 13)

(c) The facts clearly show that the two contemners were at Sasaram at the time of the incident and in fact they led the mob in shouting slogans in abusive language and vandalism against the Judge and the judicial officers. It is, therefore, clear that these two officers set up a false defence to escape punishment. The fact that they put up false defence is also clearly indicative of their presence at the spot and participation at the time of the incident. (Para 14)

(d) The bar of the jurisdiction of the High Court imposed by proviso to Section 10 of the Contempt of Courts Act is not attracted in the cases where the offences under Sections 175, 178, 179, 180 or 228 IPC are not committed in the view or presence of the court. In the present case, the alleged slogan-shouting and levelling abusive language against the Judge took place outside the court. Therefore, the District and Sessions Judge rightly has not taken any action under Section 345 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and, therefore, the jurisdiction of the High Court would not be ousted. (Para 18)

Further, as held by the Supreme Court in State of M.P. v. Revashankar, AIR 1959 SC 102, if the conduct is one which scandalises the court and impairs administration of justice, the jurisdiction of the High Court would not be barred. In the present case also it is not a mere personal insult to the District Judge. Such conduct of police officers scandalises the court itself and impairs administration of justice inasmuch as it tends to demoralise the judicial officers and makes it difficult for them to perform their duties fearlessly. (Para 20). Arun Paswan v. State of Bihar, (2004) 5 SCC 53: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1503: AIR 2004 SC 721.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2003]

Bathina Ramakrishna Reddy v. State of Madras, AIR 1952 SC 149: 1952 Cri LJ 832, followed

State of M.P. v. Revashankar, AIR 1959 SC 102: 1959 Cri LJ 251, applied

Report of District & Sessions Judge, Rohtas, In re, (2003) 1 BLJR 799 (Pat) (FB), affirmed

[3607] — S. 345 — Interfere or obstruct administration of justice — Contempt of court — Acts not amounting to — Holding departmental enquiry into the contemptuous conduct of the

contemner police officer under directions of superiors issued pursuant to complaint made by the Judge — Judge making a complaint to IGP that Station Officer C had entered in his court hall and threatened him, Judge requesting IGP to take action against C — IGP directing SP to conduct an inquiry and take action against C — SP, in turn, directing SDO (Police) to look into the matter and report — SDO (Police) accordingly holding a preliminary inquiry in respect of the conduct of C — He recording statements of C and his defence witnesses who denying the occurrence of any such incident as reported by Judge — No contempt proceedings or other proceedings pending before any court in regard to the said incident at that time — SDO (Police), in his inquiry report, holding C guilty and recommending punishment — In such circumstances, SDO (Police), held, not guilty of contempt — As it was necessary to give an opportunity to C, the recording of statements of C or his witnesses would not amount to holding of an inquiry into the conduct of the Judge necessitating High Court's permission — Even falsity of the statements of C and his witnesses would not render the enquiry officer [SDO (Police) in this case], liable or responsible therefor — Moreover, in the absence of pendency of any judicial proceedings in regard to the incident in question at that time, holding of the departmental enquiry against C did not amount to interference with administration of justice — Hence, High Court's order awarding to the SDO (Police) punishment for contempt of court, held, improper — More so, when High Court had exonerated the IGP who had directed the inquiry — Constitution of India, Arts. 129 and 215 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 228 — Contempt of Courts Act, 1971 — Ss. 2(a) & (c), 10, 12 and 19

A Magistrate sent a report to the IG of Police stating that one C, Station Officer had come to his court hall and threatened him. Reproducing the words uttered by C, the Magistrate complained that such an act was unbecoming of a police officer and the misbehaviour warranted stern action. The Magistrate enclosed a copy of the order-sheet of the relevant date and statements of two witnesses to the incident. The IGP sent the complaint to the SP under cover of a letter with a direction to take necessary action. The subject of the letter stated: "Regarding conducting an inquiry and taking disciplinary action against C". The SP, in turn, forwarded the IG's letter along with the Magistrate's complaint and its enclosures to the appellant herein, the then SDO (Police), with a direction to personally look into the matter and send a detailed report. Accordingly, the appellant conducted an inquiry. He recorded the statements of C and witnesses cited by C. The witnesses denied the occurrence of the incident. The appellant sent a report to the SP recording a finding of guilty against C and recommending punishment.

In an earlier matter, the same Magistrate had made a reference to the High Court consequent to which the High Court had initiated a contempt proceedings against C. The second reference made by the Magistrate against C was also placed before the High Court in the said contempt proceedings. The High Court took note of the second proceedings and issued a show-cause notice to C who in his reply denied to have misbehaved with the Judge. The High Court held C guilty in respect of both the incidents and imposed sentence. Moreover, the High Court directed notices to be issued to the IGP and the appellant to show cause why they should not be punished for contempt of court, for having enquired into the conduct of a Judge, without the permission of the High Court. Accordingly, notices were issued to them. The IGP stated that he had merely written to the SP to enquire into the matter and take disciplinary action against C, that there was no intention to hold any inquiry into the conduct of the Judge and that consequent to the enquiry report submitted by the appellant a penalty of Rs 50 was imposed on C for misbehaviour. The High Court accepted the said explanation and dropped the proceedings against the IGP. The appellant also filed a similar reply with an unconditional apology but the High Court rejected the same. After issuing a chargesheet to the appellant and receiving his reply, the High Court held that holding an inquiry in respect of the conduct of C in the Magistrate's court amounted to holding an inquiry into the conduct of the Magistrate which was not permissible without the permission of the High Court. It further held that recording the evidence of several witnesses by the appellant to the effect that C had not misbehaved with the Judge (which contradicted the Magistrate who had reported that C had misbehaved with him), was with the ulterior intention of helping C to create a defence of malice on the part of Magistrate. The High Court concluded that the said acts amounted to scandalising the court and interfering with the administration of justice and imposed the punishment of seven days' simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs 2000. The appellant then filed the present appeal under Section 19 of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1971.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

When C misbehaved in the court, the Magistrate did not take any action under Section 228 IPC nor under Section 345 CrPC read with Section 228 IPC. Even before making a reference to the High Court for initiating action for contempt, the Magistrate sent a complaint to the IGP requiring action against C. The action that was required was, obviously departmental disciplinary action. It was only in pursuance of the directive from his superiors that the appellant held a preliminary inquiry in respect of the conduct of C. The inquiry was not in regard to the conduct of the Judge. As the inquiry was against C, the appellant had to give an opportunity to him, to make his statement. He also had to record the statements of persons, whom C stated were present at the time of the incident. After recording the statements of witnesses, the appellant submitted a report holding C guilty of having used unwarranted language in court and recommending punishment. It cannot, therefore, be said, that recording the statements of C, and several other persons on the request of C, in the course of the preliminary inquiry, amounted to holding an inquiry in regard to the conduct of a Judge. (Para 13)

When the appellant held the preliminary inquiry, no contempt proceedings had been initiated by the High Court in regard to the incident in the Magistrate's court. There was no other proceedings pending before the Magistrate or any other court in regard to the said incident. Unless the inquiry by the appellant was a parallel proceeding with reference to a matter pending in court and unless such parallel proceeding interfered with or, intended to interfere with the pending court proceeding, there was no interference with administration of justice. (Para 14)

Even if C or the witnesses named by him stated something false, the appellant who recorded their statements in the course of preliminary inquiry cannot be held liable or responsible for such statements, unless there was material to show that the appellant was part of a conspiracy to create false evidence. There is nothing to show such conspiracy. The appellant submitted a report holding that C had used unwarranted language in court and that he should be punished. It cannot, therefore, be said that the appellant recorded the statements of witnesses with an ulterior motive of helping C to create a false defence. (Para 16)

The Police Department had issued a Circular dated 14-9-1999 (read with Para 36 of the M.P. Police Regulations) which required that whenever any complaint was received against police, a report should be sent at the earliest after holding necessary inquiry into such complaints. The letters of the IGP and the SP also make it clear that the appellant was required to hold an inquiry in connection with initiating a disciplinary action against C. The report submitted by the appellant has to be treated as one made bona fide in pursuance of the instructions of the official superiors directing him to hold a preliminary inquiry. It was not intended to scandalise the court. Nor was there any attempt by the appellant to sit in judgment over the order-sheet of the Magistrate in his inquiry report. (Para 18)

The Supreme Court has repeatedly cautioned that the power to punish for contempt is not intended to be invoked or exercised routinely or mechanically, but with circumspection and restraint. Courts should not readily infer an intention to scandalise courts or lowering the authority of court unless such intention is clearly established. Nor should they exercise power to punish for contempt where mere question of propriety is involved. (Para 20)

There is no material to show that the appellant acted with any ulterior motive. Any bona fide act in the course of discharge of duties and complying with the directions of the superior officers should not land the inquiry officer in a contempt proceedings. Though common contempt proceedings were initiated against the IGP and the appellant, the High Court dropped the proceedings against the IGP who directed the inquiry, but chose to proceed against the appellant who merely complied with the directions of the IG of Police. Therefore, it is held that the appellant is not guilty of contempt of court. (Paras 22 and 23). Rajesh Kumar Singh v. High Court of Judicature of M.P., (2007) 14 SCC 126: AIR 2007 SC 2725: 2007 Cri LJ 3753.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-5-2007]

Security and Finance (P) Ltd. v. Dattatraya Raghav Agge, (1969) 1 SCC 181, followed

Rizwan-ul-Hasan v. State of U.P., AIR 1953 SC 185: 1953 SCR 581, relied on

[3608] — Ss. 345 and 346 — Rules framed by High Court of Kerala under S. 34(1) of Advocates Act, 1961 regarding conditions of practice of advocates — R. 11 — Provision in, barring an advocate found guilty of contempt of court from appearing, acting or pleading in any court till he got himself purged of the contempt — Validity — Held, neither violative of Arts. 14 and 19(1)(g) nor impinging upon Bar Council of India's jurisdiction under S. 35, Advocates Act nor violative of principles of natural justice — Case-law discussed — Constitution of India — Arts. 14, 19(1)(g), 129 and

215 — Advocates Act, 1961 — Ss. 34(1), 35, 36, 2(j), 19 and S. 30 (not yet brought into force). Bar Council of India v. High Court of Kerala, (2004) 6 SCC 311: AIR 2004 SC 2227: (2004) 3 LLN 74: (2004) 2 KLT 485.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.N. Khare, C.J. and Brijesh Kumar and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2004]

Pravin C. Shah v. K.A. Mohd. Ali, (2001) 8 SCC 650; Ex-Capt. Harish Uppal v. Union of India, (2003) 2 SCC 45; Mohinder Singh Gill v. Chief Election Commr., (1978) 1 SCC 405; N.K. Prasada v. Govt. of India, (2004) 6 SCC 299; Mardia Chemicals Ltd. v. Union of India, (2004) 4 SCC 311; Canara Bank v. Debasis Das, (2003) 4 SCC 557: 2003 SCC (L&S) 507, followed

Supreme Court Bar Assn. v. Union of India, (1998) 4 SCC 409, explained

R.L. Kapur v. State of Madras, (1972) 1 SCC 651: 1972 SCC (Cri) 380; Kapildeo Prasad Sah v. State of Bihar, (1999) 7 SCC 569: 1999 SCC (L&S) 1357; Parashuram Detaram Shamdasani v. R., 1945 AC 264: 114 LJPC 95: 173 LT 400 (PC); D.C. Saxena (Dr.) v. Hon'ble the Chief Justice of India, (1996) 5 SCC 216, relied on

— S. 346 See Ss. 345 and 346

— S. 348 See Ss. 342, 345 and 348

— S. 353 See also S. 366, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1170 in Vol. 2

— S. 353 See Ss. 354 and 353
See also Ss. 386 and 353
See also Ss. 397, 401 and 353

[3609] — S. 353 — Judgment — Application of mind — Mistake in naming the accused who produced the knife — Misdescription of witness — On facts and in the circumstances of the case, mistakes committed by the court either taken individually or collectively do not have the effect of vitiating the conviction. Mehbub Samsuddin Malek v. State of Gujarat, (1996) 10 SCC 480: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1353.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.T. Nanavati, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-8-1996]

[3610] — S. 353 — Contents of judgment — Held, judicial decorum makes it imperative that court's judgments and orders are confined to facts and legal position involved in a case — Court should not deviate from propriety, moderation and sobriety — CPC, 1908, S. 33 and Or. 20 R. 1 [Para 58(III)]. V.K. Jain v. High Court of Delhi, (2008) 17 SCC 538: (2008) 83 AIC 140 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dalveer Bhandari and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-9-2008]

[3611] — Ss. 353 and 354 — Interpretation of judgment — Basic rules of interpretation of documents applicable — Judgment to be read as a whole in case of doubt and stray sentences or casual expression not to be treated as decision — Where language is plain and unambiguous, it has to be understood in that sense without applying any rule of interpretation — Critical comments made in the judgment on certain statement, by itself do not indicate that the court held contrary to the statement — CPC, 1908 — S. 33 — Constitution of India, Arts. 141, 136, 133, 134, 226 and 32

The basic rules of interpreting Court judgments are the same as those of construing other documents. The only difference is that the judges are presumed to know the tendency of parties concerned to interpret the language in the judgments differently to suit their purposes and the consequent importance that the words have to be chosen very carefully so as not to give room for controversy. The principle is that if the language in a judgment is plain and unambiguous and can be reasonably interpreted in only one way it has to be understood in that sense, and any involved principle of artificial construction has to be avoided. Further, if there be any doubt about the decision, the entire judgment has to be considered, and a stray sentence or a casual remark cannot be treated as a decision.

A critical comment made on a certain statement does not, in absence of an expression to that effect, necessarily lead to the inference that the converse is true. It may mean that the statement requires further consideration or that the grounds given in support of the statement are fallacious or inadequate or that the matter requires a fuller examination and until that is done, the assumed correctness of the statement cannot be accepted. CWT v. Karan Singh (Dr.), 1993 Supp (4) SCC 500: (1993) 200 ITR 614: (1993) 2 MLJ 57 (SC).

Bench Strength 5. Coram: L.M. Sharma, C.J. and S. Ratnavel Pandian, S. Mohan, B.P. Jeevan Reddy and S.P. Bharucha, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-2-1993]

[3612] — Ss. 353 and 354 — Judgment of civil court whether binding on criminal court or vice versa — Legal principles — CPC, 1908, S. 33 & Or. 20 — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 43

In K.G. Premshanker case, (2002) 8 SCC 87, the decision made in Karam Chand Ganga Prasad case, (1970) 3 SCC 694, wherein it was categorically held that the decisions of the civil courts will be binding on the criminal courts but the converse is not true, was overruled. Axiomatically, if judgment of a civil court is not binding on a criminal court, a judgment of a criminal court will certainly not be binding on a civil court. (Para 25). Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2009) 5 SCC 528.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.B. Sinha, L.S. Panta and B. Sudershan Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-3-2009]

K.G. Premshanker v. Inspector of Police, (2002) 8 SCC 87: 2003 SCC (Cri) 223, relied on

Karam Chand Ganga Prasad v. Union of India, (1970) 3 SCC 694, held overruled on this point

[3613] — S. 353 — Findings of fact recorded by civil court if binding in criminal trial or vice versa — Legal position summarised — General rule and exception thereto, restated — CrPC, 1973, S. 353 — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 41 to 43

The findings of fact recorded by the civil court do not have any bearing so far as the criminal case is concerned and vice versa. Standard of proof is different in civil and criminal cases. In civil cases it is preponderance of probabilities while in criminal cases it is proof beyond reasonable doubt. There is neither any statutory nor any legal principle that findings recorded by the court either in civil or criminal proceedings shall be binding between the same parties while dealing with the same subject-matter and both the cases have to be decided on the basis of the evidence adduced therein. However, there may be cases where the provisions of Sections 41 to 43 of the Evidence Act, 1872, dealing with the relevance of previous judgments in subsequent cases may be taken into consideration — Civil Procedure Code, 1908, Ss. 33 and 9. (Para 18). Kishan Singh v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P. Sathasivam and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision : 12-8-2010]

M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397: 1954 Cri LJ 1019; K.G. Premshanker v. Inspector of Police, (2002) 8 SCC 87: 2003 SCC (Cri) 223; P. Swaroopa Rani v. M. Hari Narayana, (2008) 5 SCC 765: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 79; Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2009) 5 SCC 528; Vishnu Dutt Sharma v. Daya Sapra, (2009) 13 SCC 729: (2010) 1 SCC (Cri) 1229, relied on

King Emperor v. Khwaja Nazir Ahmad, (1943-44) 71 IA 203: AIR 1945 PC 18; Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1101, considered

Karam Chand Ganga Prasad v. Union of India, (1970) 3 SCC 694; V.M. Shah v. State of Maharashtra, (1995) 5 SCC 767: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1077, held, overruled

[3614] — Ss. 353 and 354 — Judgment/finding of criminal court — Whether binding on civil court — Extent of use of judgment of criminal court in civil proceeding — Relevance of previous judgment/finding in criminal proceedings in civil suit — Extent of application of judgment of criminal court in civil proceeding — Held, a judgment/finding given in a criminal proceeding will not be binding in a civil proceeding — Judgment of a criminal court in a civil proceeding will only have limited application viz. inter alia, for ascertaining who was the accused and what was the result of the criminal proceedings — CPC, 1908, S. 33 & Or. 20 — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 40 and 43

As regards the question as to whether previous judgment of a criminal proceeding would be relevant in a suit, the principle contained in Section 40 of the Evidence Act, 1872 would be applicable, inter alia, if the suit is found to be barred by the principle of res judicata or by reason of the provisions of any other statute. Section 40 does not lay down that a judgment of the criminal court would be admissible in the civil court for its relevance is limited. The judgment of a criminal court in a civil proceeding will only have limited application viz. inter alia, for the purpose as to who was the accused and what was the result of the criminal proceedings. Any finding in a criminal proceeding by no stretch of imagination would be binding in a civil proceeding. If judgment of a civil court is not binding on a criminal court, it is incomprehensible that a judgment of a criminal court will be binding on a civil court. (Paras 23 and 28)

Further, Section 43 of the Evidence Act, 1872 categorically states that judgments, orders or decrees, other than those mentioned in Sections 40, 41 and 42 are irrelevant, unless the existence of such judgment, order or decree, is a fact in issue, or is relevant under some other provisions of the said Act, no other provisions of the Evidence Act or for that matter any other statute had been brought to the notice of the Supreme Court. (Para 28). Vishnu Dutt Sharma v. Daya Sapra, (2009) 13 SCC 729.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2009]

Seth Ramdayal Jat v. Laxmi Prasad, (2009) 11 SCC 545; M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397; K.G. Premshanker v. Inspector of Police, (2002) 8 SCC 87: 2003 SCC (Cri) 223; Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1101; P. Swaroopa Rani v. M. Hari Narayana, (2008) 5 SCC 765: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 79, relied on

Karam Chand Ganga Prasad v. Union of India, (1970) 3 SCC 694, held, overruled

[3615] — Ss. 353 and 354 — Judgment of criminal court is superseded by judgment of civil court — CPC, 1908 — S. 33. V.M. Shah v. State of Maharashtra, (1995) 5 SCC 767: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1077: AIR 1996 SC 339.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Ramaswamy and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-1995]

Overruled in K.G. Premshanker v. Inspector of Police, (2002) 8 SCC 87

[3616] — S. 353 — Judgment written after the retirement of one of the members of the Bench of CEGAT — Validity of — Held, such judgment/order cannot stand — Matter directed to be disposed of afresh by a new Bench — Customs Act, 1962 — S. 129-B — Central Excise Act, 1944 — S. 35-C — CPC, 1908 — S. 33 — Administrative Tribunals Act, 1985 — S. 22(2) — Administrative Tribunal Rules of Practice, 1993, R. 105. Toyo Engineering India Ltd. v. Collector of Customs, (2001) 9 SCC 608.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.P. Bharucha and V.N. Khare, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-10-1999]

[3617] — S. 353 — Instead of trial Judge conveying result of the trial, Sheristedar translating to the accused the concluding part of the judgment — Held, procedure introducing no infirmity in the instant case — CPC, 1898 — S. 366(1). Iqbal Ismail Sodawala v. State of Maharashtra, (1975) 3 SCC 140: 1974 SCC (Cri) 764: AIR 1974 SC 1880: (1975) 1 SCR 710: 1974 Cri LJ 1291: (1975) 12 ACC 27.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.R. Khanna and Y.V. Chandrachud, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-8-1974]

[3618] — S. 353(1) — Delay in pronouncing judgment by High Court — Unexplained long interval between conclusion of arguments and delivery of judgment shakes the confidence of the people in the judicial system and affects rights of the parties under Art. 21 — Detailed guidelines regarding expeditious pronouncement of judgments laid down by way of remedial measure — These guidelines have to be followed and implemented until more effective measures are evolved by High Courts or Parliament makes suitable enactment to deal with the problem — Inspiration to be drawn from S. 353(1) CrPC for pronouncement of judgment "immediately" after termination of trial — Constitution of India — Arts. 21 and 142 & 141 — Maxims — Actus curiae neminem gravabit

In this case the Sessions Court convicted nine persons on different counts, including murder as per its judgment dated 4-5-1991. Thereupon all the convicted persons, while remaining in jail, filed appeals before the High Court of Patna. When the arguments before a Division Bench of the High Court concluded the judgment was reserved by it on 23-8-1995. In the meanwhile one of the convicted persons died in jail. It was only when one of the Judges of the Division Bench reached near the date of his superannuation that the Bench ultimately pronounced the judgment on 14-8-1997.

Held :

Per Sethi, J. (Thomas, J. concurring)

Justice should not only be done but should also appear to have been done. Similarly whereas justice delayed is justice denied, justice withheld is even worse than that. The inordinate, unexplained and negligent delay in pronouncing the judgment is alleged to have actually negatived the right of appeal conferred upon the convicts under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Right of appeal in a criminal case culminating in conviction is the basis of the civilised jurisprudence. Conferment of right of appeal to meet the requirement of Article 21 of the Constitution cannot be made a fraud by protracting the pronouncement of judgment for reasons which are not attributable either to the litigant or to the State or to the legal profession. Delay in disposal of an appeal on account of inadequate number of Judges, insufficiency of infrastructure, strike of lawyers and circumstances attributable to the State is understandable but once the entire process of participation in the justice delivery system is over and the only thing to be done is the pronouncement of judgment, no excuse can be found to further delay for adjudication of the rights of the parties, particularly when it affects any of their rights conferred by the Constitution under Part III. (Paras 4 and 2)

The prevalence of such a practice and horrible situation in some of the High Courts in the country has necessitated the desirability of considering the effect of such delay on the rights of the litigant public. (Para 3)

Under the prevalent circumstances in some of the High Courts, it is appropriate to provide some guidelines regarding the pronouncement of judgments which, shall be followed by all concerned, being the mandate of the Supreme Court. Such guidelines, as for the present, are as under:

(i) The Chief Justices of the High Courts may issue appropriate directions to the Registry that in a case where the judgment is reserved and is pronounced later, a column be added in the judgment where, on the first page, after the cause-title, date of reserving the judgment and date of pronouncing it be separately mentioned by the Court Officer concerned.

(ii) That Chief Justices of the High Courts, on their administrative side, should direct the Court Officers/Readers of the various Benches in the High Courts to furnish every month the list of cases in the matters where the judgments reserved are not pronounced within the period of that month.

(iii) On noticing that after conclusion of the arguments the judgment is not pronounced within a period of two months, the Chief Justice concerned shall draw the attention of the Bench concerned to the pending matter. The Chief Justice may also see the desirability of circulating the statement of such cases in which the judgments have not been pronounced within a period of six weeks from the date of conclusion of the arguments amongst the Judges of the High Court for their information. Such communication be conveyed as confidential and in a sealed cover.

(iv) Where a judgment is not pronounced within three months from the date of reserving it, any of the parties in the case is permitted to file an application in the High Court with a prayer for early judgment. Such application, as and when filed, shall be listed before the Bench concerned within two days excluding the intervening holidays.

(v) If the judgment, for any reason, is not pronounced within a period of six months, any of the parties of the said lis shall be entitled to move an application before the Chief Justice of the High Court with a prayer to withdraw the said case and to make it over to any other Bench for fresh arguments. It is open to the Chief Justice to grant the said prayer or to pass any other order as he deems fit in the circumstances. (Para 10)

Per Thomas, J. (supplementing)

The later years have shown slackness on the part of a few Judges of the superior courts in India with the result that once arguments in a lis concluded before them the records remain consigned to hibernation. Judges themselves normally forget the details of the facts and niceties of the legal points advanced. Sometimes the interval is so long that the Judges forget even the fact that such a case is pending with them expecting judicial verdict. Though it is an unpleasant fact, it is a stark reality. Many cases remain in the area of "judgment reserved" for long periods. It is disheartening that a few handful are unmindful of their obligation and the oath of office they have solemnly taken as they cause such inordinate delay in pronouncing judgments. (Paras 42 and 44)

It is in this background that I reiterate the remedial measures mentioned above in the judgment of Sethi, J. (para 10) as instructions. If the Chief Justice of a High Court thinks that more effective measures can be evolved by him for slashing down the interval between conclusion of arguments and delivery of judgment in that particular court, it is open to him to do so as a substitute for the measures suggested by us hereinbefore. But until such measures are evolved by the Chief Justice of the High Court concerned, we expect that the measures suggested above would hold the field. The above-enumerated measures are intended to remain only until such time as Parliament would enact measures to deal with this problem. (Paras 45 and 46). Anil Rai v. State of Bihar, (2001) 7 SCC 318: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1009: AIR 2001 SC 3173.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas^{2} and R.P. Sethi^{1}, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-8-2001]

Madhav Hayawadanrao Hoskot v. State of Maharashtra, (1978) 3 SCC 544: 1978 SCC (Cri) 468; R.C. Sharma v. Union of India, (1976) 3 SCC 574: 1976 SCC (L&S) 463; Bhagwandas Fatechand Daswani v. H.P.A. International, (2000) 2 SCC 13; Hussainara Khatoon (I) v. Home Secy., State of Bihar, (1980) 1 SCC 81: 1980 SCC (Cri) 23; Hussainara Khatoon (IV) v. Home Secy., State of Bihar, (1980) 1 SCC 98: 1980 SCC (Cri) 40; Abdul Rehman Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225: 1992 SCC (Cri) 93; Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569: 1994 SCC (Cri) 899; Raj Deo Sharma v. State of Bihar, (1998) 7 SCC 507: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1692; Raj Deo Sharma (II) v. State of Bihar, (1999) 7 SCC 604: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1324; Akhtari Bi v. State of M.P., (2001) 4 SCC 355: 2001 SCC (Cri) 714, relied on

[3619] — S. 353(1) — Period subsequent for pronouncement of judgment when not pronounced immediately — Words "at some subsequent time" in S. 353(1), held, contemplate pronouncement of judgment without undue delay — Such period cannot extend beyond six weeks — CPC, 1908 — S. 33 and Or. 20 R. 1 — In civil matters judgment must be pronounced within two months of the close of the hearing of the case

The intention of the legislature regarding pronouncement of judgments can be inferred from the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Sub-section (1) of Section 353 of the Code provides that the judgment in every trial in any criminal court of original jurisdiction, shall be pronounced in open court immediately after the conclusion of the trial or on some subsequent time for which due notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders. The words "some subsequent time" mentioned in Section 353 contemplate the passing of the judgment without undue delay, as delay in the pronouncement of judgment is opposed to the principle of law. Such subsequent time can at the most be stretched to a period of six weeks and not beyond that time in any case. The pronouncement of judgments in the civil case should not be permitted to go beyond two months. (Para 8)

It is true, that for the High Courts, no period for pronouncement of judgment is contemplated either under the Civil Procedure Code or the Criminal Procedure Code, but as the pronouncement of the judgment is a part of the justice dispensation system, it has to be without delay. In a country like ours where people consider the Judges only second to God, efforts be made to strengthen that belief of the common man. Delay in disposal of the cases facilitates the people to raise eyebrows, sometimes genuinely which, if not checked, may shake the confidence of the people in the judicial system. A time has come when the judiciary itself has to assert for preserving its stature, respect and regards for the attainment of the rule of law. For the fault of a few, the glorious and glittering name of the judiciary cannot be permitted to be made ugly. It is the policy and purpose of law, to have speedy justice for which efforts are required to be made to come up to the expectation of the society of ensuring speedy, untainted and unpolluted justice. (Para 9). Anil Rai v. State of Bihar, (2001) 7 SCC 318: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1009: AIR 2001 SC 3173.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas^{2} and R.P. Sethi^{1}, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-8-2001]

— S. 354 See also Ss. 367 and 368, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1170 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 354 See Ss. 320 and 354
See also Ss. 353 and 354
See also Ss. 368 and 354
See also Ss. 399, 401 and 354
See also Ss. 401 and 354
See also Ss. 401 & 399 and 354 & 235
See also Ss. 482 & 354

[3620] — S. 354 — Age — Appellant 55 at the time of offence now 70 — Conviction for Ss. 302/34, IPC upheld — Murder bearing features of ruthlessness, unrelenting and determined vindictiveness — Retributive more than therapeutic approach in awarding punishment in the present facts essential — No interference with award of life imprisonment called for — Penology — Objects of punishment — Stephen's views relied on — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34. Guvala China Venkatesu v. State of A.P., 1991 Supp (2) SCC 727: AIR 1991 SC 1926: 1991 Cri LJ 2326.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.N. Saikia and M.M. Punchhi, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-12-1990]

Stephen: A History of the Criminal Law of England, (1883) pp 81-82, relied on

[3621] — Ss. 354 and 353 — Judgment — Considerations while rendering judgment — Held, while rendering judgments, courts should only deal with the subject-matter of the case and issues involved therein — Courts should desist from issuing directions affecting executive or legislative policy, or general directions unconnected with the subject-matter of the case — A court may express its views on a particular issue in appropriate cases only where it is relevant to the subject-matter of the case — The subject-matter of an appeal, whether civil or criminal, is the correctness of the decision of the court below — There is no question of the appellate court travelling beyond and making observations alien to the case — Even when it becomes necessary for a court for whatsoever reason, to decide or comment upon an issue not raised by the parties, it may do so only after notifying parties concerned so that they can put forth their views on such issue — Herein, observations, recommendations and directions in the concurring judgment, do not relate to subject-matter of the criminal appeal and being the expression of an expectation or hope by only one of the Judges constituting the Bench and not agreed to by the other, is not a decision, order or direction of the Court — Hence, directions issued to Secretary General of the Supreme Court, State Governments and Union Territories, and recommendations to the Government of U.P. in the concurring judgment are not directions to be complied with — CPC, 1908 — S. 33

The second issue involved the recommendations made to the Government of U.P. and directions issued to all States and Union Territories in the concurring judgment. The appeal related to the question whether the complaint against the appellant disclosed the ingredients of an offence under Section 25 of the Karnataka Shops and Commercial Establishments Act, 1961. The appeal did not relate to grant of anticipatory bail nor did it relate to rights of arrested persons. While rendering judgments, courts should only deal with the subject-matter of the case and issues involved therein. The courts should desist from issuing directions affecting executive or legislative policy, or general directions unconnected with the subject-matter of the case. A court may express its views on a particular issue in appropriate cases only where it is relevant to the subject-matter of the case. (Para 10)

The subject-matter of an appeal, whether civil or criminal, is the correctness of the decision of the court below. There is no question of the appellate court travelling beyond and making observations alien to the case. Any opinion, observation, comment or recommendation dehors the subject of the appeal, may lead to confusion in the minds of litigants, members of public and authorities as they will not know how to regulate their affairs, or whether to act upon it. Another aspect that requires to be kept in view is the fact that even when it becomes necessary for a court for whatsoever reason, to decide or comment upon an issue not raised by the parties, it may do so only after notifying the parties concerned so that they can put forth their views on such issue. (Para 11)

Insofar as the observations, recommendations, and directions in the concurring judgment are concerned, suffice it to say that they do not relate to the subject-matter of the criminal appeal and being the expression of an expectation or hope by only one of the Judges constituting the Bench and not agreed to by the other, is not a decision, order or direction of the court. That being so, the directions issued to the Secretary General of the Supreme Court, State Governments and Union Territories, and recommendations to the Government of U.P. in the concurring judgment are not directions to be complied with. (Para 13) . Som Mittal v. Govt. of Karnataka, (2008) 3 SCC 574: (2008) 1 SCC (L&S) 910: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 1: AIR 2008 SC 1528: 2008 Cri LJ 1927: (2008) 63 AIC 42 (SC).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan, C.J. and R.V. Raveendran and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-2-2008]

Distinguished in V. Sivamurthy v. State of A.P., (2008) 13 SCC 730*

[3622] — S. 354 — Judgment — How to be read and how its effect to be ascertained — Held, a judgment is not to be read as a statute — It must be read reasonably and in its entirety — Effect of judgment must be found out from wordings used by it and attending circumstances in which they have been used (Para 18). Prem Singh v. State of Haryana, (2009) 14 SCC 494: AIR 2009 SC 2573.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-2009]

Jayaseelan v. State of T.N., (2009) 12 SCC 275; Mani v. State, (2009) 12 SCC 288, relied on

[3623] — S. 354 — Power of Judge to determine the appropriate sentence is based on the principle of proportionality so that punishment fits with the crime

The criminal law adheres in general to the principle of proportionality in prescribing liability according to the culpability of each kind of criminal conduct. It ordinarily allows some significant discretion to the Judge in arriving at a sentence in each case, presumably to permit sentences that reflect more subtle considerations of culpability that are raised by the special facts of each case. Punishment ought always to fit with the crime. (Para 54)

In view of the above facts and legal position, the accused-appellants deserve death sentence which has been awarded by the trial court. (Para 55). Krishna Mochi v. State of Bihar, (2002) 6 SCC 81: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1220: AIR 2002 SC 1965: 2002 Cri LJ 2645.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.B. Shah^{3}, B.N. Agrawal^{1} and Arijit Pasayat^{2}, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-4-2002]

[3624] — S. 354 — Factors required to be taken into consideration before awarding appropriate sentence to the accused, stated — Penal Code, 1860, S. 53

These are some factors which are required to be taken into consideration before awarding appropriate sentence to the accused. These factors are only illustrative in character and not exhaustive. Each case has to be seen from its special perspective. The relevant factors are as under:

(a) Motive or previous enmity;

(b) Whether the incident had taken place on the spur of the moment;

(c) The intention/knowledge of the accused while inflicting the blow or injury;

(d) Whether the death ensued instantaneously or the victim died after several days;

(e) The gravity, dimension and nature of injury;

(f) The age and general health condition of the accused;

(g) Whether the injury was caused without premeditation in a sudden fight;

(h) The nature and size of weapon used for inflicting the injury and the force with which the blow was inflicted;

(i) The criminal background and adverse history of the accused;

(j) Whether the injury inflicted was not sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death but the death was because of shock;

(k) Number of other criminal cases pending against the accused;

(l) Incident occurred within the family members or close relations;

(m) The conduct and behaviour of the accused after the incident. Whether the accused had taken the injured/the deceased to the hospital immediately to ensure that he/she gets proper medical treatment? (Para 23). Gurmukh Singh v. State of Haryana, (2009) 15 SCC 635: (2009) 82 AIC 83 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dalveer Bhandari and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-2009]

[3625] — S. 354 — FIR mentioning all necessary details about the assault including the role and weapon used by each accused — Evidence of the brother of the deceased found reliable and no material brought out during cross-examination to discredit him — His evidence corroborated by his uncle who narrated the entire story in the same sequence without any omission or mistake — Held, in the circumstances of the case, the High Court was not justified in reversing conviction of all the four accused persons — Judgment and order passed by the trial court restored — However, in view of passage of time death sentence awarded to one of the accused commuted to imprisonment for life — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34. State of U.P. v. Abdul, (1997) 10 SCC 135: 1997 SCC (Cri) 804: AIR 1997 SC 2512: 1997 All LJ 1432: 1997 Cri LJ 2997.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-1997]

[3626] — S. 354 — Contents of judgment — CrPC, 1898 — S. 367

Where the High Court dealt with the case in a very superficial manner and statement of reasons was not elaborate enough, held, the judgment did not comply with S. 367 of CrPC, 1898. (Para 19). Jamuna Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (1974) 3 SCC 774: 1974 SCC (Cri) 250: AIR 1974 SC 1822: (1974) 2 SCR 609: 1974 Cri LJ 890.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.H. Beg and Y.V. Chandrachud, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-12-1973]

[3627] — S. 354 — High Court's judgment acquitting all accused including those sentenced to death and life imprisonment — In absence of proper formulation of points for decision, examination of evidence and specific pointwise findings, held, judgment not in accordance with S. 354 and not proper — Hence judgment set aside and case sent back to the High Court for decision in accordance with law. State of A.P. v. Gowthu Ranghunayakulu, (1986) 4 SCC 764: 1986 SCC (Cri) 540: AIR 1987 SC 40.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-11-1986]

[3628] — S. 354 — Judgment becomes complete and appealable only after conviction is recorded and also sentence is awarded

Under the Criminal Procedure Code there are two stages in a criminal trial before a Sessions Court, the stage up to the recording of a conviction and the stage post-conviction up to the imposition of sentence. After the conviction is recorded, Section 235(2) inter alia provides that the Judge shall hear the accused on the question of sentence and then pass sentence on him according to law. After the court records a conviction, the accused has to be heard on the question of sentence and it is only after the sentence is awarded that the judgment becomes complete and can be appealed against under Section 374 of the Code. (Paras 15, 12 and 13). Rama Narang v. Ramesh Narang, (1995) 2 SCC 513: (1995) 83 Comp Cas 194.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and R.M. Sahai and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-1-1995]

[3629] — S. 354 — Observations and directions made outside the scope of the case — Legality — Expunging of adverse remarks — Making of disparaging remarks against the State and Police Department on matters beyond the scope of the case — Impropriety — High Court while rejecting the State's petition for leave to appeal against acquittal in a case under S. 307 IPC, requiring the Home Secretary and Home Minister to express their reaction to the adverse remarks of High Court against poor investigation and insincere conduct of prosecution which resulted in acquittal in cases of murder, atrocities against women, harassment of young married women including bride-burning and molestation of women and rape — Said matters, held, were not germane to, and beyond the scope of, the case — Hence, such remarks were uncalled for — Therefore, the direction issued by High Court to the Secretary (Home) and Home Minister, set aside — CPC, 1908, Or. 20 R. 5

Certain persons charged of various serious offences including the offence under Section 307 IPC were acquitted by the trial court which disbelieved the testimony of the prosecution witnesses and also criticised the delay in dispatching the FIR to the Magistrate. The State of Karnataka filed a petition for leave to appeal against the said order of acquittal. A Division Bench of the High Court, while refusing leave, required the Home Secretary and Home Minister to report to the High Court their reaction to the observations made by the Bench to the effect that poor investigation followed by a total lack of interest in the conduct of the prosecution had been resulting in acquittal in criminal cases. Referring to (1) murders committed with impunity, (2) increase in cases involving atrocities against women, (3) harassment inflicted on young married women including "bride-burning", and (4) molestation and rape of girls and young women, the Division Bench attributed the inefficiency of the police to recruitment of unfit persons on the basis of political considerations. The Division Bench also criticised the investigating agency's failure to ensure that the vital witnesses were present and that they produced the type of evidence expected of them. Allowing the State's appeal against the said directions

Held :

The problems posed by the High Court Judges have already engaged the attention of the Law Commission. On more than one occasion the Commission has submitted its report for consideration by Parliament. But putting the blame largely on the police force of the State for all the ills pointed out by the learned Judges, without data or material or evidence in the present case, is not a course which can meet the Supreme Court's approval. (Para 9)

None of the fields to which the Judges of the High Court pointed their fingers covered the present case. Thus, they dealt with subjects which were totally not germane and far beyond the scope of the present case as if it were presentation of a paper in a seminar. There is no reason for the Home Minister and the Home Secretary to react to the observations which were absolutely uncalled for, on the facts of the case. (Paras 9 and 10)

Judicial disposition is definitely different from a paper presented for seminar discussion. Nor can it be equated with a dissertation. Judicial decorum requires that judgments and orders should confine to the facts and legal points involved in the particular cases which Judges deal with. Maybe, sometimes Judges would, perhaps wittingly or even unwittingly, jut outside the contours of the litigation, but even such overlappings should be within the bounds of propriety and sobriety. But there is no justification for traversing so far beyond the canvass or to cover areas which are grossly extraneous to the subject-matter of the case. If the subordinate courts are also to be tempted and encouraged to follow suit by travelling far outside the scope of the lis, the consequences would be far too many. Demoralisation of departments would badly erode the already impaired efficiency of the forces. (Para 11). State of Karnataka v. Registrar General, High Court of Karnataka, (2000) 7 SCC 333: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1359: AIR 2000 SC 2626: 2000 Cri LJ 3958.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-8-2000]

State of U.P. v. Mohd. Naim, AIR 1964 SC 703: (1964) 2 SCR 363: (1964) 1 Cri LJ 549; R.K. Lakshmanan v. A.K. Srinivasan, (1975) 2 SCC 466: 1975 SCC (Cri) 654; Niranjan Patnaik v. Sashibhusan Kar, (1986) 2 SCC 569: 1986 SCC (Cri) 196; S.K. Viswambaran v. E. Koyakunju, (1987) 2 SCC 109: 1987 SCC (Cri) 289, followed

[3630] — S. 354 — While acquitting an accused on benefit of doubt court cannot direct that he was not entitled to reinstatement in service and back wages — These matters to be considered by Government. Jagdish Prasad v. State of Rajasthan, 1987 Supp SCC 163: 1988 SCC (L&S) 104: (1987) 5 ATC 245: 1987 SCC (Cri) 782.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-1987]

[3631] — Ss. 354, 355, 361, 264, 412 and 384(3) — Reasoned order — Necessity of — Held, reasons are the flesh and blood of judicial adjudication and such reasons must be shown in the orders which are liable to be challenged in the superior court — CPC, 1908 — S. 33 and Or. 20 Rr. 4 and 5 — Constitution of India — Art. 226 — Consumer Protection Act, 1986 — Ss. 14, 18 and 22 — Administrative Tribunals Act, 1985 — Ss. 19(3), 22 and 24. Notified Area Committee v. Addl. Director, Consolidation, (2002) 10 SCC 87.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and Y.K. Sabharwal, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-5-2001]

[3632] — Ss. 354 and 353 — Omission to mention S. 34 IPC in the judgment — Effect — Mention of this section in the judgment is not the requirement of law for conviction if the ingredients of the section are present — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 34 (Para 16). Narinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2000) 4 SCC 603: 2000 SCC (Cri) 855: AIR 2000 SC 2212: 2000 Cri LJ 3462.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: D.P. Wadhwa and Ruma Pal, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-4-2000]

[3633] — Ss. 354 and 368 — Death sentence — When not justified — Appellants committing ghastly murders of a housewife and her two children and thereafter looting their ornaments, other valuable articles and cash — Held, in the circumstances of the case, offence does not come within "rarest of rare cases" — Death sentence converted to imprisonment for life — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34, 394/397 and 449. Mukund v. State of M.P., (1997) 10 SCC 130: 1997 SCC (Cri) 799: AIR 1997 SC 2622: 1997 Cri LJ 3182.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S. Saghir Ahmad, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-5-1997]

[3634] — Ss. 354 and 465 — Non-compliance with procedural requirement the matter of signing of judgment — Sessions Judge failing to append his signature to the judgment because judgment had not till then been transcribed — Judgment ultimately transcribed and signed by Sessions Judge and copy of judgment thereafter, supplied to accused — Accused filing appeal against judgment of trial court — Appeal dismissed by High Court — Sessions Judge's failure to sign the judgment did not occasion failure to justice — CrPC, 1898 — Ss. 367(1) and 537. Iqbal Ismail Sodawala v. State of Maharashtra, (1975) 3 SCC 140: 1974 SCC (Cri) 764: AIR 1974 SC 1880: (1975) 1 SCR 710: 1974 Cri LJ 1291: (1975) 12 ACC 27.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.R. Khanna and Y.V. Chandrachud, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-8-1974]

[3635] — Ss. 354 and 482 — Happenings in court — What transpired at the hearing in court — Statement recorded in the judgment in respect of, held, is conclusive and cannot be contradicted on affidavit or by other evidence — Party believing them to be erroneously recorded should promptly approach the judges who made the record while the matter is still fresh in their minds, for necessary rectification — That being the only remedy, it cannot challenge the same in appeal — CPC, 1908 — S. 33

It was specifically recorded in the judgment of the High Court that only two points were raised before it. But, the accused-appellant raised several other issues also before the Supreme Court and contended that the High Court did not consider his arguments properly.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The statement of, as to what transpired at the hearing, the record in the judgment of the court is conclusive of the facts so stated and no one can contradict such statement on affidavit or by other evidence. If a party thinks that the happenings in court have been erroneously recorded in a judgment, it is incumbent upon the party, while the matter is still fresh in the minds of the judges who have made the record, to make necessary rectification. That is the only way to have the record corrected. It is not open to the appellant to contend before the Supreme Court to the contrary. (Para 9). Ram Bali v. State of U.P., (2004) 10 SCC 598: 2004 SCC (Cri) 2045: AIR 2004 SC 2329: 2004 Cri LJ 2490.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-4-2004]

State of Maharashtra v. Ramdas Shrinivas Nayak, (1982) 2 SCC 463: 1982 SCC (Cri) 478; Bhavnagar University v. Palitana Sugar Mill (P) Ltd., (2003) 2 SCC 111; Roop Kumar v. Mohan Thedani, (2003) 6 SCC 595, relied on [3636] — Ss. 354 and 482 — Disparaging remarks and strictures made by High Court against an Additional Sessions Judge directed to be expunged from the judgment — Attributing improper motive to subordinate courts deprecated. K.P. Tiwari v. State of M.P., 1994 Supp (1) SCC 540: 1994 SCC (Cri) 712: AIR 1994 SC 1031: 1994 Cri LJ 1377: (1994) 31 ACC 27.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.B. Sawant and Yogeshwar Dayal, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-10-1993]

[3637] — Ss. 354 and 482 — Remarks in judgments in nature of comments or criticism — Held, remarks must be relevant to subject-matter of adjudication — Presence of persons against whom remarks made and opportunity to rebut imperative — Natural justice principles to be observed — Restraint to be exercised in respect of recalcitrant subordinate judicial officers to apply with equal force in case of persons not present before court — CPC, 1908, Or. 20 R. 4

In these three appeals, certain observations made by the High Court are questioned by the appellants. According to them, the High Court has directly and/or at any rate indirectly cast aspersions on their credibility and bona fides in helping certain persons to approach the Supreme Court for redressal of their grievances. The case before the High Court related to an alleged communal carnage on 27-2-2002. According to the appellants, being human rights activists, they wanted to find out what the truth is and in the process, though after conclusion of the trial, it was reliably felt by them on the basis of verifications made that truth had been the resultant casualty. They made a detailed study of the situation and also met the riot-affected persons. They helped the victims in lodging FIRs, and setting up legal-aid clinics for the affected victims. They claimed to be anti-fundamentalists and public activists with the avowed object of helping victims of communal violence. Their main and sincere objective is to maintain and preserve the secular image of the nation, secured firmly under the Constitution, the supreme law of the land. Certain persons, who were not happy with the verdicts rendered by the trial court in the case commonly known as "Best Bakery case" also approached the appellants and they helped them in obtaining legal assistance. Unfortunately the High Court, while dealing with the appeal filed by the State of Gujarat against the acquittal of the accused persons and other connected cases made some caustic observations casting serious aspersions on their bona fides and used strong words like "super investigators", "anti-social" and "anti-national" elements.

Grievance is made that not only were the observations unnecessary and contrary to the truth but were also made against persons who were not even given an opportunity to justify their action. Principles of natural justice were said to have been grossly violated. Prayer is made, therefore, for deletion of the offending portions from the judgment.

Allowing the appeals to the extent indicated in the terms below,

Held :

Time and again the Supreme Court has deprecated the practice of making observations in judgments, unless the persons in respect of whom comments and criticisms were being made were parties to the proceedings, and further were granted an opportunity of having their say in the matter, unmindful of the serious repercussions they may entail on such persons. Apart from that, when there is no relevance to the subject-matter of adjudication, it is certainly not desirable for the courts to make any comments or observations reflecting on the bona fides or credibility of any person or their actions. Observations should not be made by courts against persons and authorities, unless they are essential or necessary for decision of the case. Rare should be the occasion and necessities alone should call for its resort. (Paras 7 and 9)

Even while dealing with recalcitrant subordinate judicial officers, the Supreme Court has advised restraint and observations of the Supreme Court in this regard apply with equal force to all such parties who were not before court and not merely could not be before the court in the proceedings concerned. (Paras 11 and 14)

The appellants were not parties in the case before the High Court. It is beyond comprehension as to how the learned Judges in the High Court could afford to overlook such a basic and vitally essential tenet of the "rule of law", that no one should be condemned unheard, and risk themselves to be criticised for injudicious approach and/or render their decisions vulnerable for challenge on account of violating judicial norms and ethics. The observations objected to by the appellants do not prima facie appear to have any relevance to the subject-matter of the dispute before the High Court. (Para 7)

It is therefore directed that the observations of the High Court as against the appellants shall stand expunged and deleted from the judgment of the High Court, and consequently must be treated as having never existed or been part of the High Court judgment. The decision in this case is confined to the claim of the above appellants only and has nothing to do with the claims of others before the High Court and the Supreme Court in the other related appeals. (Para 15). Testa Setalvad v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 10 SCC 88: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1675: AIR 2004 SC 1979: 2004 Cri LJ 2022.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

Ishwari Prasad Misra v. Mohd. Isa, AIR 1963 SC 1728; K.P. Tiwari v. State of M.P., 1994 Supp (1) SCC 540: 1994 SCC (Cri) 712; Braj Kishore Thakur v. Union of India, (1997) 4 SCC 65: 1997 SCC (Cri) 514, relied on

[3638] — S. 354(1)(b) — Contents of judgment — Trial court must notice, consider and discuss the evidences of the witnesses and arguments addressed at the bar — Judgment of trial court merely containing conclusions and not reasons for arriving at the conclusions is not sustainable — 'Decision' does not merely means 'conclusion' but includes 'reasons' — Since under S. 14 of Terrorist Affected Areas (Special Court) Act, 1984 first appeal lies to the Supreme Court, instead of itself determining the guilt or otherwise of the accused, the Supreme Court remanding the case to the trial court for fresh judgment in accordance with law — Terrorist Affected Areas (Special Courts) Act, 1984 — Ss. 10 and 14

On the plainest requirement of justice and fair trial the least that was expected of the trial court was to notice, consider and discuss, howsoever briefly, the evidence of various witnesses as well as the arguments addressed at the bar. The trial court has not done so. The trial court apparently failed in the discharge of its essential duties. There is no mention in the judgment as to what various witnesses deposed at the trial, except for the evidence of the medical witness. The judgment does not disclose as to what was argued before it on behalf of the prosecution and the defence. The judgment of the trial court is truly speaking not a judgment in the eyes of the law. The trial court appears to have been blissfully ignorant of the requirements of Section 354(1)(b) CrPC. Since, the first appeal lay to the Supreme Court, the trial court should have reproduced and discussed at least the essential parts of the evidence of the witnesses besides recording the submissions made at the bar to enable the appellate court to know the basis on which the 'decision' is based. A 'decision' does not merely mean the 'conclusion' — it embraces within its fold the reasons which form the basis for arriving at the 'conclusions'. The judgment of the trial court contains only the 'conclusions' and nothing more. The judgment of the trial court cannot, therefore, be sustained. (Paras 10 and 4)

In the present case the occurrence took place more than a decade ago and the conviction was recorded almost 9 years ago. But, looking to the manner in which the judgment has been rendered by the trial court, it appears appropriate to remand the case to the trial court for writing a fresh judgment, after providing opportunities of hearing to both the parties, on the basis of the material which is already on the record. (Para 11). Mukhtiar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1995) 1 SCC 760: 1995 SCC (Cri) 296: AIR 1995 SC 686: (1995) 1 Crimes 293: (1995) 32 ACC 341.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-1-1995]

[3639] — S. 354(1)(b) — Contents of judgment — Reasons not rendered by High Court while giving order, indicating that they would be subsequently given — Propriety of — Highlighted that such a practice on part of High Courts had been deprecated by the Supreme Court in several cases, and was impermissible — Explained why such a practice was permissible in the case of the Supreme Court and not the High Courts — CPC, 1908, Or. 20 R. 5

The High Court after hearing the appeal directed its dismissal on 26-12-2003 indicating in the order that the reasons were to be subsequently given, because the Court was closing for winter holidays. This course was adopted "due to paucity of time". No perceivable reason for the hurry can be seen. The accused were not in custody. Even if they were in custody, the course adopted was not permissible. The Supreme Court has in several cases deprecated the practice adopted by the High Court in the present case. What is still more baffling is that written arguments of the State were filed on 29-12-2003 and by the accused persons on 1-1-2004. A grievance is made that when the petitioner in Criminal Revision No. 583 of 2003 wanted to file notes of arguments they were not accepted, making a departure from the cases of the State and the accused. If the written arguments were to be on record, it is not known as to why the High Court dismissed the appeal. If it had already arrived at a particular view, there was no question of filing written arguments. (Paras 80 and 82)

It may be thought that such orders are passed by the Supreme Court and, therefore, there is no reason why the High Courts should not do the same. In this regard it needs to be pointed out that orders passed by the Supreme Court are final and no further appeal lies against them. The Supreme Court is the final court in the hierarchy of our courts. Orders passed by the High Court are subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 136 of the Constitution and other provisions of statutes concerned. It is necessary to make these observations so that a practice which is not a very desirable one and which achieves no useful purpose may not grow out of and beyond its present infancy. (Para 82). Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999: 2004 Cri LJ 2050.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-2004]

State of Punjab v. Jagdev Singe Talwandi, (1984) 1 SCC 596: 1984 SCC (Cri) 135, relied on

Followed in Mangat Ram v. State of Haryana, (2008) 7 SCC 96*

[3640] — Ss. 354(1)(b) and (6) — Reasons for decision — Cardinality of recording of — Rationale for — Appeal against acquittal — Proper mode of disposal of — Duty of High Court — CPC, 1908, Or. 20 Rr. 4(2) & 5 — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 — S. 18

The subject matter of the challenge is the refusal to grant leave to question acquittal in terms of Section 378(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973.

The respondent (hereinafter referred to as "the accused") faced trial for alleged commission of offence punishable under Section 18 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985.

The trial court held that the prosecution version was entirely dependent upon the testimony of official witnesses and since no independent witness was involved, the prosecution version was vulnerable. The trial court therefore directed acquittal. The appellant State filed an appeal before the Punjab and Haryana High Court which refused to grant leave and disposed of the application for leave in the following manner:

> "Heard. No merit.
> Dismissed."

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

It was noted that the search and seizure was made at a thoroughfare and it is unbelievable that no independent witness was available. The trial court was required to carefully appraise the entire evidence and then come to a conclusion. If the trial court was at lapse in this regard the High Court was obliged to undertake such an exercise by entertaining the appeal. The trial court on the facts of this case did not perform its duties, as was enjoined on it by law. The questions involved were not trivial. The requirement of independent witnesses and discarding testimony of official witnesses even if it was reliable, cogent or trustworthy needed adjudication in appeal. The High Court ought to have in such circumstances granted leave and thereafter as a first court of appeal, reappreciated the entire evidence on the record independently and returned its findings objectively as regards guilt or otherwise of the accused. It has failed to do so. (Para 5)

Reasons introduce clarity in an order. Reasons substitute subjectivity by objectivity. The emphasis on recording reasons is that if the decision reveals the "inscrutable face of the sphinx", it can, by its silence, render it virtually impossible for the courts to perform their appellate function or exercise the power of judicial review in adjudging the validity of the decision. Right to reasons is an indispensable part of a sound judicial system, reasons at least sufficient to indicate an application of mind to the matter before court. Another rationale is that the affected party can know why the decision has gone against him. One of the salutary requirements of natural justice is spelling out reasons for the order made, in other words, a speaking-out. The "inscrutable face of a sphinx" is ordinarily incongruous with a judicial or quasi-judicial performance. (Para 6)

The High Court has not given any reasons for refusing to grant leave to file appeal against acquittal, and seems to have been completely oblivious to the fact that by such refusal, a close scrutiny of the order of acquittal by the appellate forum has been lost once and for all. The manner in which appeal against acquittal has been dealt with by the High Court leaves much to be desired. On plainest consideration of justice, the High Court ought to have set forth its reasons, howsoever brief, in its order indicative of an application of its mind, all the more when its order is amenable to further avenue of challenge. The absence of reasons has rendered the High Court order not sustainable. (Para 5)

The requirement of indicating reasons in such cases has been judicially recognized as imperative. (Para 5)

Impugned judgment of the High Court is unsustainable and is set aside. Leave granted to the State to file the appeal. The High Court shall entertain the appeal and after formal notice to the respondents hear the appeal and dispose of it in accordance with law. (Para 7). State of Punjab v. Bhag Singh, (2004) 1 SCC 547: 2004 SCC (Cri) 341: AIR 2004 SC 1203: (2004) 164 ELT 137: 2004 Cri LJ 916.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-2003]

Breen v. Amalgamated Engg. Union, (1971) 1 All ER 1148: (1971) 2 QB 175: (1971) 2 WLR 742 (CA); Alexander Machinery (Dudley) Ltd. v. Crabtree, 1974 ICR 120 (NIRC); State of U.P. v. Battan, (2001) 10 SCC 607: 2003 SCC (Cri) 639; State of Maharashtra v. Vithal Rao Pritirao Chawan, (1981) 4 SCC 129: 1981 SCC (Cri) 807; Jawahar Lal Singh v. Naresh Singh, (1987) 2 SCC 222: 1987 SCC (Cri) 347, relied on

Applied in State of H.P. v. Mushtaq Ahmad, (2007) 9 SCC 528: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 168: (2007) 53 AIC 112 (SC); State of H.P. v. Shish Ram, (2008) 11 SCC 311*

Followed in Jagtamba Devi v. Hem Ram, (2008) 3 SCC 509; State of H.P. v. Paras Ram, (2008) 3 SCC 655*

[Ed.: See generally in this regard Complete Digest of Supreme Court Cases, Vol. 1, Administrative Law — Duty to give reasons, pp. 307 et seq.]

[3641] — Ss. 354(1)(b) and 374 — Need for reasons to accompany final order — No reasons assigned by the High Court while passing the order, stating that reasons would be given later on — Such practice, already deprecated by the Supreme Court in several cases — Case law discussed — Need for assigning reasons in support of final orders, re-emphasised — Why such practice is permissible in the case of the Supreme Court and not the High Courts, restated — CPC, 1908 — Ss. 107 and 109 and Or. 20 R. 5

The criminal appeal was listed in the High Court in motion. The case was not placed for regular final hearing. It was, however, taken up for final hearing. One advocate was appointed as amicus curiae for the accused who was heard and the matter was disposed of. The order which was passed by the High Court stated as "Dismissed, reasons to follow."

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The High Court ought not to have disposed of the appeal without recording reasons. This Court has deprecated the practice of disposing of matters without recording reasons in support of such decision. It has been insisted that when the matter is decided by a court, reasons must be recorded in support of such decision. It is because the aggrieved party may make grievance in the superior court that the reasons recorded by the trial court were non-existent, extraneous, irrelevant, etc. The successful party, on the other hand, may support the reasons recorded by the court in his favour. Finally, the superior court may also consider whether reasons recorded by the court in support of the order passed by it were in consonance with law and whether interference is called for. If the final order is without any reason, several questions may arise and it will be difficult for the parties to the proceedings as well as the superior court to decide the matter one way or the other. (Para 5)

It would be appropriate and desirable if all courts including the High Courts keep in mind the principles laid down by the Supreme Court and pass final orders only after recording reasons in support of such orders. (Paras 7 to 10). Mangat Ram v. State of Haryana, (2008) 7 SCC 96.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-1-2008]

State of Punjab v. Jagdev Singh Talwandi, (1984) 1 SCC 596: 1984 SCC (Cri) 135; State of Punjab v. Surinder Kumar, (1992) 1 SCC 489: 1992 SCC (L&S) 345: (1992) 19 ATC 345; Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158: 2004 SCC (Cri) 999, followed [3642] — Ss. 354(2), 373 and 386 — Appeal against trial court's judgment awarding life imprisonment for offence of murder, if dismissed by High Court, held, must be by a reasoned judgment showing application of mind to the material questions of fact and law — Otherwise judgment of High Court is liable to be set aside under Art. 136 — On facts, with a view to reduce the delay, Supreme Court after briefly hearing the parties and perusing the records, held, trial Court's judgment was not vitiated by any flaw in appreciation of evidence or assessment of probabilities — Constitution of India — Article 136 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302. Alijan Nanhe Pehalwan Qureshi v. State of Maharashtra, (1981) 1 SCC 415: 1981 SCC (Cri) 164: AIR 1981 SC 645: (1981) 1 SCR 1194: 1981 Cri LJ 163.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and A.D. Koshal, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-11-1980]

— S. 354(3) See Ss. 28 & 29 and 354(3)

See also Ss. 235(2) and 354(3)

See also Ss. 366(1) and 354(3)

See also PENAL CODE, 1860, Ss 299-304 'D35(f) Death sentence pp. 616 et. seq. in Vol. 23 Complete Digest of Supreme Court Cases, 2nd Edn.

See also CRIMINAL TRIAL — 'Sentence' in Vol. 3

See also S. 235(2), above

[3643] — S. 354(3) — Procedure for award of death penalty in case there are "special reasons" — Both held constitutional and not violative of Arts. 14, 19 & 21 — Jagmohan Singh case affirmed and propositions restated with necessary changes — Acceptance by India of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights does not affect constitutionality of death sentence

Per Chandrachud, C.J., Sarkaria, Gupta and Untwalia JJ. (Bhagwati, J. dissenting)

There are several indications in the Constitution which show that the Constitution-makers were fully cognizant of the existence of death penalty for murder and certain other offences in the Indian Penal Code. The mention in the legislative list, right of Governor and President to suspend, commute or remit death sentence and right of appeal to the Supreme Court under Art. 134 show that death penalty or its execution cannot be regarded as an unreasonable, cruel or unusual punishment. Nor can it be said to defile "the dignity of the individual" within the preamble to the Constitution. On parity of reasoning, it cannot be said that death penalty violates the basic structure of the Constitution.

Though India has become a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, its requirements do not exceed what is already provided in the Constitution of India, the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure. Out penal laws accord with the international commitment, it does not outlaw capital punishment for murder, altogether. Neither the new interpretative dimensions given to Arts. 19 and 21 by this Court in Maneka Gandhi and Charles Sobraj v. Superintendent, Central Jail, Tihar, New Delhi, nor the acceptance by India of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, makes any change in the prevailing standards of decency and human dignity by which counsel requires us to judge the constitutional validity of the impugned provisions.

Article 19, unlike Art. 21, does not deal with the right to life and personal liberty and is not applicable for judging the constitutionality of the provisions of S. 302, Indian Penal Code. The condition precedent for the applicability of Art. 19 is that the activity which the impugned law prohibits and penalises, must be within the purview and protection of Art. 19(1). Article 19 is attracted only to such laws, the provisions of which are capable of being tested under cls. (2) to (6) of Art. 19. To commit crime is not an activity guaranteed by Art. 19(1).

Applying the above test if applicability of Art. 19 to Ss. 299, 300 and 302, Indian Penal Code, it cannot, reasonably or rationally, be contended that any of the rights mentioned in Art. 19(1) of the Constitution confers the freedom to commit any offence whatsoever. hence laws which define offences and prescribe punishment for the commission of offences do not attract the application of Art. 19(1). However one cannot say that the object of penal laws is generally such as not to involve any violation of the rights conferred by Art. 19(1) because after the decision of this Court in the Bank Nationalisation case the theory, that the object and form of the State action alone determine the extent of protection that may be claimed by an individual and that the effect of the State action on the fundamental right of the individual is irrelevant, stands discredited. But the point of the matter is that, in pith and substance, penal laws do not deal with the subject-matter of rights enshrined in Art. 19(1). That again is not enough for the purpose of deciding upon the applicability of Art. 19 as shown by the test formulated above. If the direct and inevitable effect of the law is such as to abridge or abrogate any of those rights, Art. 19(1) shall have been attracted. It would then become necessary to test the validity of even a penal law on the touchstone of that article. On this latter aspect of the matter, the deprivation of freedom consequent upon an order of conviction and sentence is not a direct and inevitable consequence of the penal law but is merely incidental to the order of conviction and sentence which may or may not come into play, that is to say, which may or may not be passed. Considering therefore the above test in its dual aspect, S. 302 of the Penal Code does not have to stand the test of Art.19(1) of the Constitution.

In the instant case, the State has discharged its burden of satisfying test of reasonableness under Art.19 primarily by producing for the perusal of the court, the 35th Report of the Law Commission, 1967, and the judgments of the Supreme Court in Jagmohan Singh, (1973) 1 SCC 20 and in several subsequent cases, in which it has been recognised that death penalty serves as a deterrent. It is, therefore, for the petitioners to prove and establish that the death sentence for murder is so outmoded, unusual or excessive as to be devoid of any rational nexus with the purpose and object of the legislation. If, notwithstanding the view of the Abolitionists to the contrary, a very large segment of people, the world over, including sociologists, legislators, jurists, judges and administrators still firmly believe in the worth and necessity of capital punishment for the protection of society, if in the perspective of prevailing crime conditions in India, contemporary public opinion channelised through the people's representatives in Parliament, has repeatedly in the last three decades, rejected all attempts, including the one made recently, to abolish or specifically restrict the area of death penalty, if death penalty is still a recognised legal sanction for murder or some types of murder in most of the civilised countries in the world, if the framers of the Indian Constitution were fully aware of the existence of death penalty as punishment for murder, under the Indian Penal Code, if the 35th Report and subsequent reports of the Law Commission suggesting retention of death penalty, and recommending revision of the Criminal Procedure Code and the insertion of the new Ss. 235(2) and 354(3) in that Code providing for pre-sentence hearing and sentencing procedure on conviction for murder and other capital offences were before the Parliament and presumably considered by it when in 1972-73 it took up revision of the Code of 1898 and replaced it by the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, it is not possible to hold that the provision of death penalty as an alternative punishment for murder, in S. 302, Penal Code is unreasonable and not in the public interest. Therefore, the impugned provision in S. 302, violates neither the letter nor the ethos of Art. 19.

The propositions stated in Jagmohan Singh case stand except that in view of the new provision in S. 354(3) of Criminal Procedure Code, 1973, award of death sentence is the exception to be made for "exceptional reasons" founded on grave circumstances of the particular case relating to the crime and the criminal.

Also the introduction of pre-sentence hearing to the accused by virtue of S. 235(2) of the new Criminal Procedure Code alters the Jagmohan proposition that the court is primarily concerned with the circumstances connected with crime. Now due consideration has to be given to the circumstances of the criminal as well.

But for the above, the other propositions in Jagmohan, and the premises on which they rest, are not affected by subsequent changes. On the contrary, these changes reinforce the reasons given in Jagmohan for holding that the impugned provisions of the Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code do not offend Arts. 14 and 21 of the Constitution. Now, Parliament has in S. 354(3) given a broad and clear guideline which is to serve the purpose of lodestar to the court in the exercise of its sentencing discretion.

Per Bhagwati, J.

Section 302 of the Indian Penal Code insofar as it provides for imposition of death penalty as an alternative to life sentence is ultra vires and void as being violative of Arts. 14 and 21 of the Constitution since it does not provide any legislative guidelines as to when life should be permitted to be extinguished by imposition of death sentence. Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab (Majority judgment), (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580: AIR 1980 SC 898: 1980 Cri LJ 636: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 827.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[1] and P.N. Bhagwati[2], R.S. Sarkaria[1], A.C. Gupta[1] and N.L. Untwalia[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 9-5-1980]

Followed in Prajeet Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (2008) 4 SCC 434; Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767

[3644] — S. 354(3) — Sentencing procedure under whether unconstitutional in that it invests the court with unguided discretion in imposing death penalty — Standards and norms restricting the area of imposition of death penalty indicated — Aggravating and mitigating circumstances broadly indicated — Constitution of India — Arts. 21 & 14. Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab (Majority judgment), (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580: AIR 1980 SC 898: 1980 Cri LJ 636: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 827.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[1] and P.N. Bhagwati[2], R.S. Sarkaria[1], A.C. Gupta[1] and N.L. Untwalia[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 9-5-1980]

[3645] — S. 354(3) — Arts. 21 and 14 permit imposition of death penalty — Sentencing procedure under S. 354(3), Criminal Procedure Code, whether unconstitutional in that it invests the court with unguided discretion in imposing death penalty — Standards and norms restricting the area of imposition of death penalty indicated — Aggravating and mitigating circumstances broadly indicated — Death sentence to be awarded in the rarest of rare cases

Per Chandrachud, C.J., Sarkaria, Gupta and Untwalia, JJ. (Bhagwati, J., dissenting)

The impugned provisions of the Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code do not offend Arts. 14 and 21 of the Constitution. Now, Parliament has in S. 354(3) given a broad and clear guideline which is to serve the purpose of lodestar to the court in the exercise of its sentencing discretion. Parliament has advisedly not restricted this sentencing discretion further, as, in its legislative judgment, it is neither possible nor desirable to do so. Cognizant of the past experience of the administration of death penalty in India, Parliament, in its wisdom, thought it best and safe to leave the imposition of this gravest punishment in gravest cases of murder, to the judicial discretion of the courts which are manned by persons of reason, experience and standing in the profession. The exercise of this sentencing discretion cannot be said to be untrammelled and unguided. It is exercised judicially in accordance with well-recognised principles crystallised by judicial decisions, directed along the broad contours of legislative policy towards the signposts enacted in S. 354(3).

Regarding the question of laying down standards and norms restricting the area of imposition of death penalty, if by "laying down standards", it is meant that 'murder' should be categorised beforehand according to the degrees of its culpability and all the aggravating and mitigating circumstances should be exhaustively and rigidly enumerated so as to exclude all free play of discretion, the argument merits rejection. Such standardisation is well-nigh impossible. Firstly, degree of culpability cannot be measured in each case; secondly, criminal cases cannot be categorised, there being infinite unpredictable and unforeseeable variations; thirdly, on such categorisation, the sentencing process will cease to be judicial; and fourthly, such standardisation or sentencing discretion is a policy-matter belonging to the legislature beyond the court's function.

Therefore though no rigid standards in this area can be laid down, some broad guidelines consistent with the policy indicated by the legislature in S. 354(3) can be stated.

One thing however stands clear that for making the choice of punishment or for ascertaining the existence or absence of "Special reasons" in that context, the court must pay due regard both to the crime and the criminal. What is the relative weight to be given to the aggravating and mitigating factors, depends on the facts and circumstances of the particular case. More often than not, these two aspects are so intertwined that it is difficult to give a separate treatment to each of them. This is so because 'style is the man'. In many cases, the extremely cruel or beastly manner of the commission of murder is itself a demonstrated index of the depraved character of the perpetrator. That is why, it is not desirable to consider the circumstances of the crime and the circumstances of the criminal in two separate watertight compartments.

As to the aggravating circumstances, preplanned, calculated cold-blooded murder has always been regarded as one of an aggravated kind; so also a murder "diabolically conceived and cruelly executed" and the test of Ediga Anamma : "The weapons used and the manner of their use, the horrendous features of the crime and hapless, helpless state of the victim".

One cannot restrict the imposition of death penalty only to cases where the security of the State and Society, public order and the interests of the general public are threatened.

Aggravating circumstances suggested by one of the counsel for the petitioners (para 202) are acceptable indicators, though it is not preferable to fetter judicial discretion by attempting to make an exhaustive enumeration one way or the other. But this much can be said that in order to qualify for inclusion in the category of "aggravating circumstances" which may form the basis of 'special reason' in S. 354 (3), circumstances found on the facts of a particular case, must evidence aggravation of an abnormal or special degree.

Mitigating circumstances indicated by the same counsel (para 206) are undoubtedly relevant circumstances and must be given great weight in the determination of sentence. Factor like extreme youth of the accused can be of compelling importance. Post-murder remorse, penitence or repentance by the murderer are not irrelevant. There are several other mitigating circumstances. Nonetheless, it cannot be overemphasised that the scope and concept of mitigating factors in the area of death penalty must receive a liberal and expansive construction by the courts in accord with the sentencing policy writ large in S. 354(3). Judges should never be bloodthirsty. Hence courts aided by the broad illustrative guidelines indicated by us, will discharge the onerous function with evermore scrupulous care and humane concern, directed along the high road of legislative policy outlined in S. 354(3), viz., that for persons convicted of murder, life imprisonment is the rule and death sentence an exception. A real and abiding concern for the dignity of human life postulates resistance to taking a life through law's instrumentality. That ought not to be done save in the rarest of rare cases when the alternative option is unquestionably foreclosed. Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab (Majority judgment), (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580: AIR 1980 SC 898: 1980 Cri LJ 636: 1980 MLJ (Cri) 827.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[1] and P.N. Bhagwati[2], R.S. Sarkaria[1], A.C. Gupta[1] and N.L. Untwalia[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 9-5-1980]

[3646] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence for murder is disproportionately excessive and therefore violative of Arts. 14, 19 and 21 of the Constitution — (Per Bhagwati, J. dissenting). Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1982) 3 SCC 24: 1982 SCC (Cri) 535: AIR 1982 SC 1325.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and P.N. Bhagwati, R.S. Sarkaria, A.C. Gupta and N.L. Untwalia, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-5-1980]

See majority opinion at (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580

[3647] — S. 354(3) — Held, unconstitutional as discretion conferred on the court to award death sentence is unguided and arbitrary — Constitution of India — Arts. 14 and 21 (Per Bhagwati, J. dissenting). Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1982) 3 SCC 24: 1982 SCC (Cri) 535: AIR 1982 SC 1325.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and P.N. Bhagwati, R.S. Sarkaria, A.C. Gupta and N.L. Untwalia, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-5-1980]

See majority opinion at (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580

[3648] — S. 354(3) — Death penalty is barbaric, cruel and inhuman and opposed to civilised social norms and values — Constitution of India — Arts. 14 and 21 (Per Bhagwati, J. dissenting). Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1982) 3 SCC 24: 1982 SCC (Cri) 535: AIR 1982 SC 1325.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and P.N. Bhagwati, R.S. Sarkaria, A.C. Gupta and N.L. Untwalia, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-5-1980]

See majority opinion at (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580

[3649] — Ss. 354(3), 368 and 386 — Death sentence — 'Rarest of rare' case — Test to determine — Guidelines indicated — On facts, application to cold-blooded, calculated and gruesome multiple murders as a reprisal in a family feud — Seventeen helpless, defenceless and innocent men, women and children, all related to the main opponent, mercilessly gunned down while asleep on the same night in quick succession in different neighbouring villages — Death sentence imposed by trial court and confirmed by High Court, on facts and circumstances, held, justified — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302

The following questions may be asked and answered as a test to determine the 'rarest of rare' case in which death sentence can be inflicted:

(a) Is there something uncommon about the crime which renders sentence of imprisonment for life inadequate and calls for a death sentence?

(b) Are the circumstances of the crime such that there is no alternative but to impose death sentence even after according maximum weightage to the mitigating circumstances which speak in favour of the offender?

The following guidelines which emerge from Bachan Singh case will have to be applied to the facts of each individual case where the question of imposition of death sentence arises:

(i) The extreme penalty of death need not be inflicted except in gravest cases of extreme culpability.

(ii) Before opting for the death penalty the circumstances of the 'offender' also require to be taken into consideration along with the circumstances of the 'crime'.

(iii) Life imprisonment is the rule and death sentence is an exception. Death sentence must be imposed only when life imprisonment appears to be an altogether inadequate punishment having regard to the relevant circumstances of the crime, and provided, and only provided, the option to impose sentence of imprisonment for life cannot be conscientiously exercised having regard to the nature and circumstances of the crime and all the relevant circumstances.

(iv) A balance-sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances has to be drawn up and in doing so the mitigating circumstances has to be accorded full weightage and a just balance has to be struck between the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances before the option is exercised.

In rarest of rare cases when the collective conscience of the community is so shocked, that it will expect the holders of the judicial power centre to inflict death penalty irrespective of their personal opinion as regards desirability or otherwise of retaining death penalty, death sentence can be awarded. The community may entertain such sentiment in the following circumstances:

(1) When the murder is committed in an extremely brutal, grotesque, diabolical, revolting, or dastardly manner so as to arouse intense and extreme indignation of the community.

(2) When the murder is committed for a motive which evinces total depravity and meanness; e.g. murder by hired assassin for money or reward; or cold-blooded murder for gains of a person vis-à-vis whom the murderer is in a dominating position or in a position of trust; or murder is committed in the course for betrayal of the motherland.

(3) When murder of a member of a Scheduled Caste or minority community etc., is committed not for personal reasons but in circumstances which arouse social wrath; or in cases of 'bride burning' or 'dowry deaths' or when murder is committed in order to remarry for the sake of extracting dowry once again or to marry another woman on account of infatuation.

(4) When the crime is enormous in proportion. For instance when multiple murders, say of all or almost all the members of a family or a large number of persons of a particular caste, community, or locality, are committed.

(5) When the victim of murder is an innocent child, or a helpless woman or old or infirm person or a person vis-à-vis whom the murderer is in a dominating position, or a public figure generally loved and respected by the community.

If upon taking an overall global view of all the circumstances in the light of the aforesaid propositions and taking into account the answers to the questions posed by way of the test for the rarest of rare case, the circumstances of the case are such that death sentence is warranted, the court would proceed to do so.

In the present case as regards the three appellants (viz. Machhi Singh, Kashmir Singh and Jagir Singh), the rarest of rare case rule prescribed in Bachan Singh case is clearly attracted. They committed calculated and cold-blooded murders of innocent and defenceless women, children, veterans and newly married couples in an exceptionally depraved, heinous, horrendous and gruesome manner for reprisal as a result of family feud with a view to wipe out the entire family and relatives of the opponent. The murders were hair-raising to the society at large in the sequence in which it was committed, spreading horror of a killing spree. In the circumstances, only death sentence and not life imprisonment would be adequate. Accordingly, the death sentence imposed upon them is confirmed. Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681: AIR 1983 SC 957: 1983 Cri LJ 1457.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, A. Varadarajan and M.P. Thakkar, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-7-1983]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580: AIR 1980 SC 898: 1980 Cri LJ 636, explained

Followed in Prajeet Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (2008) 4 SCC 434*

Applied in Swamy Shraddananda v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 12 SCC 288*

Considered and clarified in Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767*

[3650] — S. 354(3) — When warranted — Principles restated — Socio-economic factors — Relevance — Case law discussed — Consideration of aggravating and mitigating circumstances while imposing death penalty — Herein, aggravating circumstances against appellant-accused show that it was a case of cold-blooded murder of five innocent persons for ransom, despite fact that victims were poor villagers who were unable to pay ransom as demanded, accused being fully aware of victims' inability and poverty — Mitigating circumstances which could be taken into account are, length of incarceration already undergone, which is about 14 years and current age of one appellant being around 65 years — Again, socio-economic factors might not dilute guilt, but may lead to another related mitigating factor i.e. ability of guilty to reform — Criminal who commits crimes due to his economic backwardness is most likely to reform — This ability to reform amounts to a mitigating factor in cases of death penalty — Herein, appellants belonged to extremely poor background — They committed these heinous crimes for want of money — Hence, no reason why they cannot be reformed over a period of time — Therefore, taking into account all aggravating and mitigating circumstances, appellants' death sentence commuted to life imprisonment to extend to full term of life — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/149, 364-A, 365 and 148

It is open for the court to grant a death penalty in an extremely narrow set of cases, which is signified by the phrase "rarest of the rare". This rarest of the rare test relates to "special reasons" under Section 354(3) CrPC. Importantly, this route is open to the court only when there is no other punishment which may be alternatively given. This results in the death penalty being an exception in sentencing, especially in the case where some other punishment can suffice. The brutality of the murders must be seen along with all the mitigating factors in order to come to a conclusion (for imposing death sentence). (Paras 64 to 70)

The test for the determination of the "rarest of the rare" category of crimes inviting the death sentence includes broad criteria i.e.

(1) the gruesome nature of the crime,

(2) the mitigating and aggravating circumstances in the case. These must take into consideration the position of the criminal, and

(3) whether any other punishment would be completely inadequate. This rule emerges from the dictum of the Supreme Court that life imprisonment is the rule and death penalty an exception. Therefore, the court must satisfy itself that death penalty would be the only punishment which can be meted out to the convict. (Paras 71, 77 to 81 and 87). Mulla v. State of U.P., (2010) 3 SCC 508.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P. Sathasivam and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision : 8-2-2010]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681; Asharfi Lal v. State of U.P., (1987) 3 SCC 224: 1987 SCC (Cri) 470; Ravji v. State of Rajasthan, (1996) 2 SCC 175: 1996 SCC (Cri) 225; Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 1; Panchhi v. State of U.P., (1998) 7 SCC 177: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1561; Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 113, relied on [3651] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Constitutionality — Capital punishment to be awarded in rarest of the rare cases — Procedure established by law for awarding death penalty is reasonable and hence provision for death sentence not violative of Art. 21 — Death sentence has a deterrent effect and serves a social purpose — In view of deteriorating and fast worsening law and order situation in the country, about which judicial notice can be taken, it is the most inopportune time to reconsider the law on the subject and to take the risk of abolishing death sentence — Question of mode of execution of death sentence having already been considered in detail and Supreme Court having found that hanging by neck was a scientific and one of the least painful method of execution, there is no good reason to take a different view. Shashi Nayar v. Union of India, (1992) 1 SCC 96: 1992 SCC (Cri) 24: AIR 1992 SC 395: 1992 Cri LJ 514: (1992) 1 An WR 37 (SC).

Bench Strength 5. Coram: K.N. Singh, P.B. Sawant, N.M. Kasliwal, B.P. Jeevan Reddy and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-10-1991]

Jagmohan Singh v. State of U.P., (1973) 1 SCC 20: 1973 SCC (Cri) 169; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Deena v. Union of India, (1983) 4 SCC 645: 1983 SCC (Cri) 879, affirmed

[3652] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Constitutionality of, reaffirmed — Whether death sentence or life imprisonment to be imposed — Decision left on court and no norm can be laid down — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 120-B, 121, 132, 302, 307 and 396

Per majority:

In spite of the divergent trends in the various parts of the world there is a consistent thought of maintaining the sentence of death on the statute book for some offences and in certain circumstances where it may be thought necessary to award this extreme penalty. In our country although there is a shift from sentence of death to lesser sentence but there is also a clear intention of maintaining this sentence to meet the ends of justice in appropriate cases. In view of the principles laid down in Bachan Singh and Machhi Singh cases the death sentence is now awarded in the rarest of the rare cases. The circumstances in which the extreme penalty should be inflicted cannot be enumerated in view of complex situation in society and the possibilities in which the offence could be committed and in this context in ultimate analysis it is not doubted that the legislature was right in leaving it to the judicial decision as to what should be the sentence in particular circumstances of the case. But the legislature has put a further rider that when the extreme penalty is inflicted it is necessary for the court to give special reasons thereof.

Per Jagannatha Shetty, J. (concurring)

The legislature is aware of the contemporary social needs as is apparent from the legislative amendments brought about from time to time in the CrPC. It is now obligatory for the court to state reasons for the sentence awarded for the offence of murder. Death sentence could be awarded only in exceptional cases and not in the usual run of murders. We have got just six offences carrying death penalty and that too as an alternate sentence (Ss. 120-B, 121, 132, 302, 307 and 396 IPC). This is the need and notion of the present day society. Tomorrow's society and the atmosphere in which they live may be quite different. Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, (1989) 1 SCC 678: 1989 SCC (Cri) 248: AIR 1989 SC 1335.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: G.L. Oza[1], M.M. Dutt[1], K.N. Singh[1], K. Jagannatha Shetty[2] and L.M. Sharma[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 7-2-1989]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1982 SCC (Cri) 535 and Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, affirmed

[3653] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Held, constitutional — Majority view in Bachan Singh case reaffirmed and need not be reconsidered (Para 14). Jumman Khan v. State of U.P., (1991) 1 SCC 752: 1991 SCC (Cri) 283: AIR 1991 SC 345: 1991 Cri LJ 439.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-11-1990]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580, majority view affirmed

Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490; Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 344: 1983 SCC (Cri) 461; Triveniben (Smt) v. State of Gujarat, (1989) 1 SCC 678: 1989 SCC (Cri) 248, relied on

[3654] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Legislative changes effected since 1955

Before 1955 sentence of death was the rule, the alternative sentence had to be explained by reasons. Thereafter it was left to the discretion of the court to inflict either of the sentences and ultimately in the 1973 Code normal sentence is imprisonment for life except for the special reasons to be recorded sentence of death could be passed. It is therefore clear that this indicates a trend against sentence of death but this coupled with the decisions ultimately wherein sentence of death has been accepted as constitutional go to show that although there is a shift from sentence of death to lesser sentence but there is also a clear intention of maintaining this sentence to meet the ends of justice in appropriate cases. It is therefore clear that in spite of the divergent trends in the various parts of the world there is a consistent thought of maintaining the sentence of death on the statute book for some offences and in certain circumstances where it may be thought necessary to award this extreme penalty. As stated generally that it is awarded in the rarest of rare cases and in this accepted position of law, in our opinion, it is not necessary to go into the academic question about sociological and humane aspects of the sentence and detailed examination of the jurisprudential theories. Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, (1989) 1 SCC 678: 1989 SCC (Cri) 248: AIR 1989 SC 1335.

Bench Strength 5. Coram: G.L. Oza[1], M.M. Dutt[1], K.N. Singh[1], K. Jagannatha Shetty[2] and L.M. Sharma[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 7-2-1989]

[3655] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Provision for, not violative of Arts. 14, 19 and 21 — Majority decision in Bachan Singh case affirmed and does not require reconsideration — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 — Constitution of India — Arts. 14, 19 and 21

Since the legislature in its wisdom thought that in some rare cases it may still be necessary to impose the extreme punishment of death to deter others and to protect the society and in a given case the country, it left the choice of sentence to the judiciary with the rider in S. 354(3), CrPC that the judge may visit the convict with the extreme punishment provided there exist special reasons for so doing. In the face of this 'procedure established by law' which is consistent with Art. 21, the extreme submission of death in no case cannot be countenanced. The submission that the death penalty violates Arts. 14, 19 and 21 was negatived by the majority decision of the Supreme Court in Bachan Singh case. That decision does not require reconsideration on the ground that the Judges constituting the majority did not have the benefit of minority view of Bhagwati, J. (as he then was) as the reasons which prevailed with Bhagwati, J., could not have been unknown to the Judges constituting the majority. Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490: AIR 1989 SC 1456: 1989 Cri LJ 1466.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Natarajan and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-4-1989]

[3656] — S. 354(3) — Award of death penalty — Ediga Anamma, Rajendra Prasad and Bishnu Deo Shaw cases, held, are binding under Art. 141 till overruled by a larger Bench — Court can order that life imprisonment should run for full life — On facts, death sentence, held, not justified

In the present case the dispute arose out of sharing of irrigation water. The party of the prosecution witnesses were drinking in the afternoon at the house of one of them when one of the appellants went in. He was beaten up. He along with his friends retaliated in the evening and killed four persons. The trial Court awarded death penalty and the High Court affirmed it on the ground of killing unarmed persons recklessly and without provocation. Setting aside the sentence of death, the Supreme Court.

Held :

Per Krishna Iyer and Desai, JJ.

(a) After Ediga Anamma case, (1974) 4 SCC 443 the law of punishment under S. 302, Indian Penal Code, has been largely settled by the Supreme Court and the High Courts are bound thereby. Rajendra Prasad case, (1979) 3 SCC 646 and Bishnu Deo Shaw case, (1979) 3 SCC 714 have indubitably laid down the normative cynosure and until overruled by a larger Bench of this Court that is the law of the land under Art. 141. To discard it is to disobey the Constitution and such subversiveness of the rule of law, in a crucial area of life and death will spell judicial disorder. One thing is clear. Counting the casualties is not the main criterion for sentencing to death; nor recklessness in the act of murder. The sole focus on the crime and the total farewell to the criminal and his social-personal circumstances mutilate sentencing justice.

It may be realised that judicial error leading to innocent man being executed is not too recondite a reality. Evidence in court and assessment by judges have human limitations.

On facts, death penalty is unmerited. Here, the earlier provocation came from the deceased's side by beating up appellant 3. The parties, including the prosecution group, were tipsy. There had been antecedent irrigation irritation between them. There was no pre-planned well-laid attack, hell-bent on liquidating the enemy. A quarrel over turn of water; a pacification pro tempore; an afternoon exuberance with jocose and bellicose potions, beating up one appellant leading to a reprisal vi et armis.

(b) We may add a footnote to the ruling in Rajendra Prasad case. Taking the cue from the English legislation on abolition, we may suggest that life imprisonment which strictly means imprisonment for the whole of the man's life, but in practice amounts to incarceration for a period between 10 and 14 years may, at the option of the convicting court, be subject to the condition that the sentence of imprisonment shall last as long as life lasts where there are exceptional indications of murderous recidivism and the community cannot run the risk of the convict being at large. This takes care of judicial apprehensions that unless physically liquidated the culprit may at some remote time repeat murder.

Per Sen, J. (dissenting)

(a) I do not see any reason to differ from the view expressed by me in my dissenting opinion in Rajendra Prasad case. I still adhere to the view that it is not within the province of this Court while dealing with an appeal confined to sentence under Art. 136, to curtail the scope of death sentence under S. 302, Indian Penal Code, 1860, nor is it constitutionally or legally permissible for this Court while hearing such an appeal to lay down that on grounds of compassion and humanism the sentence of death on a conviction for murder under S. 302, as a rule of universal application, be substituted by a sentence of imprisonment for life, irrespective of the gravity of the crime and the surrounding circumstances, i.e. virtually abolish the extreme penalty. The question whether the scope of death sentence should be curtailed or not is for Parliament to decide. The matter is essentially of political expediency and, as such, it is the concern of the statesmen and, therefore, the domain of the Legislature and not the Judiciary. That the special reason "must relate not to the crime as such but to the criminal" is unwarranted and contrary to S. 302, Indian Penal Code, read with S. 354(3), Criminal Procedure Code.

(b) The majority decision in Rajendra Prasad case does not lay down any legal principle of general applicability. One would find that in the decision in Rajendra Prasad case, there are no rationes decidendi, much less any ratio decidendi. There the majority themselves advocate the death penalty for certain classes of offenders, namely, (1) white-collar offenders, (2) anti-social offenders, and (3) hardened murderers. This shows that the majority was not against the capital punishment in principle. On the facts before them they commuted the sentence of death to a sentence of imprisonment for life, and the decision cannot, therefore, be construed as laying down a ratio decidendi. General observations made in the context of sentencing jurisprudence will have to be regarded as the view of the judge/judges concerned — and not 'law declared by this Court' under Art. 141 of the Constitution.

(c) On facts, though the dispute was over the 'turns of water', that would hardly furnish any justification for the commission of the pre-planned triple murder. The dastardly act of the appellants resulted in the loss of three precious lives. These were nothing but intentional, cold-blooded and brutal murders.

The High Court was justified in confirming the death sentences passed under S. 368(a) of the Code, being satisfied that there were "special reasons" within the meaning of S. 354, sub-section (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. For my part, I have no sympathy for these trigger-happy gentlemen and the sentence imposed on them is well merited. Dalbir Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 3 SCC 745: 1979 SCC (Cri) 848: AIR 1979 SC 1384: 1979 Cri LJ 1058.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer[1], D.A. Desai[1] and A.P. Sen[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 4-5-1979]

Followed in Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767

[3657] — S. 354(3) — Death penalty — Arguments against imposition of — Validity and utility of the continuance of death penalty considered against the various theories of punishment — Held, it is against criminal justice itself — Discovery of the "special reasons" for imposing death penalty — Criteria and considerations — Rajendra Prasad case [(1979) 3 SCC 646] affirmed

In the present case the appellant had earlier killed his wife on suspicion of infidelity and had undergone the punishment. He now killed his son, begotten by his late wife, suspecting that he was actually not his son. The trial Court awarded him death sentence and the High Court affirmed it on the ground that he deserved no mercy or remorse. Allowing his appeal and setting aside the sentence of death, the Supreme Court.

Held :

Per Chinnappa Reddy, J.

(a) The very nature of the penalty of death appears to make it imperative that at every suitable opportunity life imprisonment should be preferred to the death penalty. The different theories of punishment do not support or justify it. The reformative theory is irrelevant where death is the punishment since life and not death can reform. The preventive theory is unimportant where the choice is between death and life imprisonment as in India. The retributive theory is incongruous in an era of enlightenment. It is inadequate as a theory since it does not attempt to justify punishment by any beneficial results either to the society or to the persons punished. The denunciatory theory is as inadequate as the retributive theory since it does not justify punishment by its results. While considering the deterrent theory what is important is not whether the penalty of death has deterrent effect on potential murderers but whether it deters more effectively than other penalties say, a sentence of imprisonment for a long term. But all studies made on the subject appear to have led to the conclusion that the death penalty is inconsequential as a deterrent. Its efficacy as a deterrent is unproven.

Death sentence works against criminal justice. By its nature and irrevocability it is abhorrent to several judges who acquit the accused rather than convict and sentence him to death penalty. Moreover, it rejects the reformation and rehabilitation of offenders as among the most important objectives of criminal justice.

Experience shows that the burden of capital punishment falls more upon the ignorant, the impoverished and the underprivileged.

Death penalty is against human decency and has been abolished in several countries.

(b) In Rajendra Prasad v. State of U.P., (1979) 3 SCC 646, several relevant principles have ben enunciated to guide the exercise of discretion in making the choice between the penalties of death and life imprisonment. I express my agreement with the elucidation of the principles in Rajendra Prasad v. State of U.P.

(c) Section 354(3) for the award of death penalty, read with S. 361 shows that the personality of the offender as revealed by his age, character, antecedents and other circumstances and the tractability of the offender to reform must necessarily play the most prominent role in determining the sentence to be awarded. Special reasons must have some relation to these factors. A judge has to balance the personality of the offender with the circumstances, the situation and the reactions and choose the appropriate sentence to be imposed.

Special reasons, therefore, are reasons which are special with reference to the offender, with reference to constitutional and legislative directives and with reference to the times, that is, with reference to contemporary ideas in the fields of Criminology and connected sciences. Special reasons are those which lead inevitably to the conclusion that the offender is beyond redemption, having due regard to his personality and proclivity, to the legislative policy of reformation of the offender and to the advances made in the methods of treatment, etc.

(d) On facts, the Sessions Judge was wrong in imposing the sentence of death without even a reference to the reason why the appellant committed the murder. The observation of the High Court that the appellant deserved no mercy because he showed no mercy smacks very much of punishment by way of retribution. The appellant was a moody person who had for years been brooding over the suspected infidelity of his wife and the injustice of having a son foisted on him. We do not think that the mere use of adjectives like "cruel and brutal" supplies the special reasons contemplated by S. 354(3) Criminal Procedure Code. There are no "special reasons" justifying the imposition of the death penalty. Bishnu Deo Shaw v. State of W.B., (1979) 3 SCC 714: 1979 SCC (Cri) 817: AIR 1979 SC 964: 1979 Cri LJ 841: (1979) 16 ACC 175: 1979 MLJ (Cri) 565.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer^{2} and O. Chinnappa Reddy^{1}, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-2-1979]

Overruled in (1980) 2 SCC 684

Distinguished in Ila Vipin Pandya (3) v. Smita Ambalal Patel, (2008) 7 SCC 435

[3658] — Ss. 354(3), 360 and 361 — Death sentence — Imposition of — Considerations — Proportionality — Principle of just desert — Reiterated — Penology — Crime and proportionality of punishment (Paras 21 to 26). Shivu v. Registrar General, High Court of Karnataka, (2007) 4 SCC 713: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 686: 2007 Cri LJ 1806.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and L. S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-2-2007]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580, relied on

Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, considered and relied on

[3659] — Ss. 354(3), 360 and 361 — Sentence — Imposition of — Considerations — Regard to other provisions of the Code providing for reform and rehabilitation — Court to choose the appropriate punishment keeping in view personality of offender and circumstances, situations and reactions — Death sentence to be imposed only for special reasons — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

Section 302 IPC prescribes death or life imprisonment as the penalty for murder. The changes which the Code has undergone in the last three decades clearly indicate that Parliament is taking note of contemporary criminological thought and movement. There is a definite swing towards life imprisonment. Death sentence is ordinarily ruled out and can only be imposed for "special reasons", as provided in Section 354(3) CrPC. Further, Section 361 CrPC which is a new provision in the Code makes it mandatory for the court to record "special reasons" for not applying the provisions of Section 360. In the context of Section 360 CrPC, the "special reasons" contemplated by Section 361 must be such as to compel the court to hold that it is impossible to reform and rehabilitate the offender after examining the matter with due regard to the age, character and antecedents of the offender and the circumstances in which the offence was committed.

This is some indication by the legislature that reformation and rehabilitation of offenders and not mere deterrence, are now among the foremost objects of the administration of criminal justice in our country. Criminal justice deals with complex human problems and diverse human beings. A Judge has to balance the personality of the offender with the circumstances, situations and the reactions and choose the appropriate sentence to be imposed. (Para 19)

Before the amendment of Section 367(5) of the old Code by the Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, 1955 the former rule that the normal punishment for murder is death is no longer operative and it is now within the discretion of the court to pass either of the two sentences prescribed in this section; but whichever of the two sentences he passes, the Judge must give his reasons for imposing a particular sentence. The amendment of Section 367(5) of the old Code does not affect the law regulating punishment under IPC. This amendment relates to procedure and now courts are no longer required to elaborate the reasons for not awarding the death penalty; but they cannot depart from sound judicial considerations preferring the lesser punishment. (Para 20)

Section 354(3) of the Code marks a significant shift in the legislative policy underlying the old Code as in force immediately before 1-4-1974, according to which both the alternative sentences of death or imprisonment for life provided for murder were normal sentences. Now, under Section 354(3) of the Code the normal punishment for murder is imprisonment for life and death penalty is an exception. The court is required to state the reasons for the sentence awarded and in the case of death sentence "special reasons" are required to be stated, that is to say, only special facts and circumstances will warrant the passing of the death sentence. (Para 21)

A convict hovers between life and death when the question of gravity of the offence and award of adequate sentence comes up for consideration. Mankind has shifted from the state of nature towards a civilised society and it is no longer the physical opinion of the majority that takes away the liberty of a citizen by convicting him and making him suffer a sentence of imprisonment. Award of punishment following conviction at a trial in a system wedded to the rule of law is the outcome of cool deliberation in the courtroom after adequate hearing is afforded to the parties, accusations are brought against the accused, the prosecuted is given an opportunity of meeting the accusations by establishing his innocence. It is the outcome of cool deliberations and the screening of the material by the informed man i.e. the Judge that leads to determination of the lis. (Para 28)

The principle of proportion between crime and punishment is a principle of just desert that serves as the foundation of every criminal sentence that is justifiable. As a principle of criminal justice it is hardly less familiar or less important than the principle that only the guilty ought to be punished. Indeed, the requirement that punishment not be disproportionately great, which is a corollary of just desert, is dictated by the same principle that does not allow punishment of the innocent, for any punishment in excess of what is deserved for the criminal conduct is punishment without guilt. (Para 29)

The criminal law adheres in general to the principle of proportionality in prescribing liability according to the culpability of each kind of criminal conduct. It ordinarily allows some significant discretion to the Judge in arriving at a sentence in each case, presumably to permit sentences that reflect more subtle considerations of culpability that are raised by the special facts of each case. Judges in essence affirm that punishment ought always to fit the crime; yet in practice sentences are determined largely by other considerations. Sometimes it is the correctional needs of the perpetrator that are offered to justify a sentence. Sometimes the desirability of keeping him out of circulation, and sometimes even the terrific results of his crime. Inevitably these considerations cause a departure from just desert as the basis of punishment and create cases of apparent injustice that are serious and widespread. (Para 30). Bablu v. State of Rajasthan, (2006) 13 SCC 116: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 590: AIR 2007 SC 697: (2007) 50 AIC 89 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 1160.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2006]

Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Ediga Anamma v. State of A.P., (1974) 4 SCC 443: 1974 SCC (Cri) 479, relied on — Where there was nothing to show that the appellant-accused could not be reformed and rehabilitated, the mere manner of disposal of the body of deceased, howsoever abhorrent, held, not by itself sufficient to bring the case in the rarest of rare category — In the present case, all the accused including the appellant were unemployed young men in search of job — They were not criminals — In execution of a plan proposed by the appellant and accepted by them, they kidnapped a friend of theirs with the motive of procuring ransom from his family but later murdered him and after cutting his body into pieces disposed of the same at different places — One of the other accused turning approver and prosecution case based exclusively on his evidence — Appellant-accused contradicting the approver's version in respect of appellant's role — In such a case, statement of approver regarding manner of murder and role of accused and that of approver himself therein, held, should be tested on the basis of prudence doctrine taking into consideration inter alia, evidence produced by accused for imposition of lesser punishment — Hence, death penalty awarded by courts below, in the absence of any special reasons to support the same, substituted by penalty of rigorous imprisonment for life — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 133 and 30. Santosh Kumar Satishbhushan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498.

[3660] — S. 354(3) — Nature of, and its relevance to Art. 21 of Constitution — Death sentence — Case, if rarest of rare — Determination of — Doctrine of rehabilitation — Applicability — Manner of murder and disposal of body — Extent of weightage to be given — Mitigating circumstances — Nature of evidence and background of accused taken into consideration — Case exclusively based on evidence of approver or circumstantial evidence — Doctrine of prudence — Applicability — Held, not only doctrine of proportionality but also doctrine of rehabilitation should be taken into consideration, particularly in view of S. 354(3) CrPC, which must be r/w Art. 21 of the Constitution

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2009]

[3661] — Ss. 354(3) and 235(2) — Imposition of death sentence — Detailed discussion of law made — Constitutional safeguards against being (i) Justice based on principled reasoning, (ii) Equal protection under Art. 14 i.e. similar sentencing to similarly situated convicts, (iii) Due process protection under Art. 21 i.e. assessment of relative propriety, greater reliability and fairness of the sentence, and (iv) Proportionality under Art. 21 — Principled approach, held, necessary — Factors required to be taken into consideration restated in detail — Public opinion not included — Procedure under Ss. 354(3) and 235(2) CrPC for award of death penalty — Nature of — Duty of court at the stage of pre-sentence hearing — Death penalty or life imprisonment — Rule and exception — Case when falls under exception — Discretion of court to determine — Importance of — Held, equal protection clause ingrained under Art. 14 applies to the judicial process at the sentencing stage — Arts. 14 and 21 of Constitution would require a fair distribution of punishment among similarly situated convicts and an appropriate criteria for determining the same — This would require identification of a pool of capital defendants equally circumstanced in respect of gravity and nature of, and motive for, the crime — Besides including various aspects of the crime and quality of evidence, such information must include aspects relating to characteristics and socio-economic background of the offender — The equality clause applies to the sentencing process rather than to the outcome — Therefore, the object of comparative review would be not to channel the discretion of the court but to bring in consistency in identification of various relevant circumstances — Aggravating and mitigating circumstances have to be separately identified strictly — However, no such comparative review would be necessary for awarding life imprisonment — Due process requires from courts greater reliability and fairness for capital sentence than for other sentences — Proportionality requirement is that the punishment should cause minimum impairment to right to life under Art. 21 — Therefore, during sentencing process, court should reach a finding of a rational and objective connection between capital punishment and its purpose — "Special reasons" required to be stated in terms of S. 354(3) CrPC should satisfy the comparative utility of capital sentence over life imprisonment — If two opinions are possible, "rule" of "life imprisonment" should be preferred to the "exception" of death penalty — Life imprisonment is the rule and death penalty is the exception — Aggravating and mitigating circumstances relating both to crime and criminal must be analysed with open mind irrespective of gravity of crime — Rigour and fairness should be given primacy over sentiments and emotions — Moreover, there must be clear evidence as to why the convict is not fit for any kind of reformatory and rehabilitation scheme — Constitution of India, Arts. 14 and 21

Held :

Constitutional landscape on capital sentencing: minimum safeguards

Right to life is the essential content of all rights under the Constitution. If life is taken away, all other rights cease to exist. Articles 14 and 21 are constitutional safeguards and define the framework for the State in its functions, including penal functions. They introduce values of institutional propriety, in terms of fairness, reasonableness and equal treatment challenge with respect to procedure to be invoked by the State in its dealings with people in various capacities, including as a convict. The position is, if the State is precariously placed to administer a policy within the confines of Articles

21 and 14, it should be applied most sparingly. The Supreme Court has acknowledged death punishment to be the most extraordinary penalty in various decisions. Therefore, in the context of punishments, the protections emanating from Article 14 and Article 21 have to be applied in the strictest possible terms. The threshold of the rarest of rare cases is informed by Articles 14 and 21, owing to the inherent nature of death penalty. Post-Bachan Singh case, capital sentencing has come into the folds of constitutional adjudication. This is by virtue of the safeguards entrenched in Articles 14 and 21 of our Constitution. (Paras 82, 89, 135, 137 and 138)

The arguments which may be relevant for sentencing with respect to various other punishments may cease to apply in light of the constitutional safeguards which come into operation when the question relates to extinguishment of life. If there are two considerations, the one which has a constitutional origin shall be favoured. (Para 83)

The constitutional role of the judiciary also mandates taking a perspective on individual rights at a higher pedestal than majoritarian aspirations. To that extent we play a counter-majoritarian role. And this part of debate is not only relevant in the annals of judicial review, but also to criminal jurisprudence. (Para 86)

In Bachan Singh case, (1980) 2 SCC 684 the Court was operating under two fundamental constraints while dealing with the constitutionality challenge:

Firstly, death penalty is mentioned in the Constitution [for instance under Article 161 and Article 72(1)(c)]. Constitutional recognition was taken to be a primary signal for the legitimacy for Section 302.

Secondly, owing to separation of power doctrine, the Court took a deferential view towards Section 354(3) CrPC which was brought in to discipline the courts on death penalty by making life imprisonment the rule and death penalty exception.

Labouring under the said constraints, the death penalty was held constitutional. (Paras 116, 43 and 44)

"Justice" in capital sentencing

Justice must be the first virtue of the law of sentencing. A sentencing court must consider itself to be a "forum of principle". The central idea of such a forum is its continuing commitment to inhere a doctrinal approach around a core normative idea. "Principled reasoning" flowing from judicial precedent or legislation is the premise from which the courts derive the power. The movement to preserve substantial judicial discretion to individualise sentences within a range of punishments also has its basis in the court's ability to give principled reasoning. (Para 118)

There is a fundamental relationship between the legitimacy of sentence belonging to a particular potency and the reasons accorded by the court to justify the same. This flows from the inherent nature of punishment which can be understood as a coercive force invoked by the State for a legitimate purpose. (Para 120)

Article 14 — Applicability of equal protection clause in death sentencing

Equal protection clause ingrained under Article 14 applies to the judicial process at the sentencing stage. A capital sentencing system which results in differential treatment of similarly situated capital convicts effectively classifies similar convicts differently with respect to their right to life under Article 21. Therefore, an equal protection analysis of this problem is appropriate. In the ultimate analysis, it serves as an alarm bell because if capital sentences cannot be rationally distinguished from a significant number of cases where the result was a life sentence, it is more than an acknowledgement of an imperfect sentencing system. In a capital sentencing system if this happens with some frequency there is a lurking conclusion as regards the capital sentencing system becoming constitutionally arbitrary. (Para 130)

Frequent findings as to arbitrariness in sentencing under Section 302 may violate the idea of equal protection clause implicit under Article 14 and may also fall foul of the due process requirement under Article 21. The reasons which are accorded by the court to justify the punishment should be able to address the questions relating to fair distribution of punishment amongst similarly situated convicts. This may be called the problem of distributive justice in capital sentence. In this context, the inquiry under Article 14 becomes significant. Fairness in this context has two aspects: first refers to fair distribution amongst like offenders, and the second relates to the appropriate criteria for the punishment. (Paras 127, 121 and 123)

Thus, when the court is faced with a capital sentencing case, a comparative analysis of the case before it with other purportedly similar cases would be in the fitness of the scheme of the Constitution. Comparison will presuppose an identification of a pool of equivalently circumstanced capital defendants. The gravity, nature and motive relating to crime will play a role in this analysis. (Para 131)

Next step would be to deal with the subjectivity involved in capital cases. The imprecision of the identification of aggravating and mitigating circumstances has to be minimised. The mandate of equality clause applies to the sentencing process rather than the outcome. The comparative review must be undertaken not to channel the sentencing discretion available to the courts but to bring in consistency in identification of various relevant circumstances. The aggravating and mitigating circumstances have to be separately identified under a rigorous measure. (Para 132)

Bachan Singh case when mandates principled precedent-based sentencing, compels careful scrutiny of mitigating circumstances and aggravating circumstances and then factoring in a process by which aggravating and mitigating circumstances appearing from the pool of comparable cases can be compared. The weight which is accorded by the court to particular aggravating and mitigating circumstances may vary from case to case in the name of individualised sentencing, but at the same time reasons for apportionment of weights shall be forthcoming. Such a comparison may point out excessiveness as also will help repel arbitrariness objections in future. A sentencing hearing, comparative review of cases and similarly aggravating and mitigating circumstances analysis can only be given a go-by if the sentencing court opts for life imprisonment. (Para 133)

To translate the principle in sentencing terms, firstly, it may be necessary to establish general pool of rare capital cases. Once this general pool is established, a smaller pool of rare cases may have to be established to compare and arrive at a finding of the rarest of the rare case. (Para 134)

Article 21 — Due process

Fairness to any capitally sentenced convict requires an assessment of the relative propriety of the sentence. Because of their irrevocability and severity, the Constitution requires greater reliability and fairness from sentencing courts for capital sentences than for non-capital sentences. (Paras 142 and 140)

Article 21 — Proportionality requirement

During the sentencing process, the sentencing court or the appellate court for that matter, has to reach to a finding of a rational and objective connection between capital punishment and the purpose for which it is prescribed. In sentencing terms, "special reasons" as envisaged under Section 354(3) CrPC have to satisfy the comparative utility which capital sentence would serve over life imprisonment in the particular case. The question is whether the punishment granted impairs the right to life under Article 21 as little as possible. (Para 145)

The courts have not fully resolved the dilemma arising from the fact that the Constitution prohibits excessive punishment borne out of undue process, but also permits, and contemplates that there will be capital punishment arising out of an exercise of extremely wide discretion. That dilemma is inherently difficult to resolve. While choosing for one option or the other, the said constitutional principles must be borne in mind. The nature of capital sentencing is such that it is important that court should ask the right questions. (Para 147)

Bachan Singh case treated death penalty as an exceptional penalty, different from any other punishment, and did lay down a policy prescription on sentencing. The rarest of rare dictum takes its colour from constitutional guarantees. The court has therefore to be mindful that the true import of rarest of rare doctrine speaks of an extraordinary and exceptional case. Principle of prudence, enunciated by Bachan Singh case is sound counsel on that count. Whenever in the given circumstances, there is difference of opinion with respect to any sentencing prop (sic)/rationale, or subjectivity involved in the determining factors, or lack of thoroughness in complying with the sentencing procedure, it would be advisable to fall in favour of the "rule" of life imprisonment rather than invoking the "exception" of death punishment. (Paras 116, 117, 130 and 149)

Broad values emerging from Bachan Singh case

There are three broad values emerging from Bachan Singh case: viz. (1) individualised sentencing, (2) threshold of rarest of rare, and (3) principled sentencing. (Para 45)

Individualised sentencing

For an effective compliance of sentencing procedure under Section 354(3) and Section 235(2) CrPC, sufficient discretion is a precondition. Strict channelling of discretion would also go against the founding principles of sentencing as it will prevent the sentencing court to identify and weigh various factors relating to the crime and the criminal such as culpability, impact on the society, gravity of offence, motive behind the crime, etc. (Para 46)

Threshold of rarest of rare — sentencing procedure

Sentencing process should be so complied with, that enough information is generated to objectively inform the selection of penalty. The selection of penalty must not require a judge to reflect on his/her personal perception of crime. (Para 53)

Pre-sentence hearing and "special reasons"

Under Sections 235(2) and 354(3) CrPC, there is a mandate as to a full-fledged bifurcated hearing and recording of "special reasons" if the court inclines to award death penalty. A scrupulous compliance with both provisions is necessary such that an informed selection of sentence could be based on the information collected and collated at this stage. (Para 55)

Nature of information to be collated at pre-sentence hearing

The court must play a proactive role to record all relevant information at this stage. Some of the information relating to crime can be culled out from the phase prior to sentencing hearing. This information would include aspects relating to the nature, motive and impact of crime, culpability of convict, etc. Quality of evidence adduced is also a relevant factor. For instance, extent of reliance on circumstantial evidence or child witness plays an important role in the sentencing analysis. But what is sorely lacking, in most capital sentencing cases, is information relating to characteristics and socio-economic background of the offender. (Para 56)

Circumstances which may not have been pertinent in conviction can also play an important role in the selection of sentence. Objective analysis of the probability that the accused can be reformed and rehabilitated can be one such illustration. (Para 57)

Nature of content of the rarest of rare dictum

The rarest of rare dictum breathes life into the "special reasons" under Section 354(3). The rarest of rare dictum imposes a wide-ranging embargo on award of death punishment, which can only be revoked if the facts of the case successfully satisfy double qualification enumerated below:

(i) that the case belongs to the rarest of rare category, and

(ii) the alternative option of life imprisonment will just not suffice in the facts of the case. (Paras 58 and 59)

The rarest of rare dictum serves as a guideline in enforcing Section 354(3) and entrenches the policy that life imprisonment is the rule and death punishment is an exception. It is a settled law of interpretation that exceptions are to be construed narrowly. Therefore, the rarest of rare dictum places an extraordinary burden on the court, in case it selects death punishment as the favoured penalty, to carry out an objective assessment of facts to satisfy the exceptions ingrained in the rarest of rare dictum. (Para 60)

The background analysis leading to the conclusion that the case belongs to the rarest of rare category must conform to highest standards of judicial rigor and thoroughness as the norm under analysis is an exceptionally narrow exception. Such a conclusion shall entail identification of aggravating and mitigating circumstances relating both to the crime and the criminal. (Para 61)

Alternative option is foreclosed

By laying down that taking a life through law's instrumentality "ought not to be done save in the rarest of rare cases when the alternative option is unquestionably foreclosed" Bachan Singh case has suggested selection of death punishment as the penalty of last resort when, alternative punishment of life imprisonment will be futile and serves no purpose. (Para 64)

Death punishment stands on a very different footing from other types of punishments. It is unique in its total irrevocability. Incarceration, life or otherwise, potentially serves more than one sentencing aims. Deterrence, incapacitation, rehabilitation and retribution-all ends are capable to be furthered in different degrees, by calibrating this punishment in light of the overarching penal policy. But the same does not hold true for the death penalty. (Para 65)

Therefore, for satisfying the second exception to the rarest of rare doctrine, the court will have to provide clear evidence as to why the convict is not fit for any kind of reformatory and rehabilitation scheme. This analysis can only be done with rigour when the court focuses on the circumstances relating to the criminal, along with other circumstances. (Para 66)

Role and responsibility of courts

Bachan Singh case while enunciating the rarest of rare doctrine, did not deal with the role and responsibility of sentencing court and the appellate court separately. In that event, all courts, be it the trial court, the High Court or the Supreme Court, are duty-bound to ensure that the ratio laid down therein is scrupulously followed. Same standard of rigour and fairness are to be followed by the courts. (Paras 69 and 53)

Sentencing justifications in heinous crimes

In most cases of heinous crimes, courts have only been considering the brutality of crime index. There may be other factors which may not have been recorded. There is no consensus in the Court on the use of "social necessity" as a sole justification in death punishment matters. The test which emanates from Bachan Singh case in clear terms is that the courts must engage in an analysis of aggravating and mitigating circumstances with an open mind, relating both to crime and the criminal, irrespective of the gravity or nature of crime under consideration. A dispassionate analysis, on the said counts, is a must. The courts while adjudging on life and death must ensure that rigour and fairness are given primacy over sentiments and emotions. (Paras 71 and 72)

Whether primacy should be accorded to aggravating circumstances or mitigating circumstances is not the question. Court is duty-bound by virtue of Bachan Singh case to equally consider both and then to arrive at a conclusion as to respective weights to be accorded. The court is also bound by the spirit of Article 14 and Article 21 which forces the Court to adopt a principled approach to sentencing. (Para 79)

Public opinion in capital sentencing

Public opinion is difficult to fit in the rarest of rare matrix. People's perception of crime is neither an objective circumstance relating to crime nor to the criminal. Perception of public is extraneous to conviction as also sentencing, at least in capital sentencing according to the mandate of Bachan Singh case. Public opinion may also run counter to the rule of law and constitutionalism. There is also the danger of capital sentencing becoming a spectacle in media. If media trial is a possibility, sentencing by media cannot be ruled out. (Paras 80, 81, 87 and 89). Santosh Kumar Satishbhushan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2009]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580, explained and followed

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580, explained

'Lethal Lottery, The Death Penalty in India' compiled jointly by Amnesty International India and People's Union for Civil Liberties, Tamil Nadu & Puducherry, cited

Furman v. Georgia, 33 L Ed 2d 346: 408 US 238 (1971); Gregg v. Georgia, 49 L Ed 2d 859: 428 US 153; Gopal Vinayak Godse v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1961 SC 600: (1961) 3 SCR 440; Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India, (1978) 1 SCC 248, cited

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 580, explained and relied on

S. v. MakwanyaneEn' N Ander, (1994) 3 SA 868 (A); Shankarlal Gyarasilal Dixit v. State of Maharashtra, (1981) 2 SCC 35: 1981 SCC (Cri) 315; Furman v. Georgia, 33 L Ed 2d 346: 408 US 238 (1971) (dissenting opinion); West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 87 L Ed 1628: 319 US 624 (1942); Khatri (II) v. State of Bihar, (1981) 1 SCC 627: 1981 SCC (Cri) 228; Sanjay Dutt v. State (II), (1994) 5 SCC 410: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1433; Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767; Woodson v. North Carolina, 49 L Ed 2d 944: 428 US 280 (1976); Lockett v. Ohio, 57 L Ed 2d 973: 438 US 586 (1978); Rummel v. Estelle, 63 L Ed 2d 382: 445 US 263 (1980); R. v. Oakes, (1986) 1 SCR 103; R. v. Chaulk, (1990) 3 SCR 1303; Santa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 256; Malkiat Singh v. State of Punjab, (1991) 4 SCC 341: 1991 SCC (Cri) 976; Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490; Muniappan v. State of T.N., (1981) 3 SCC 11: 1981 SCC (Cri) 617; Jumman Khan v. State of U.P., (1991) 1 SCC 752: 1991 SCC (Cri) 283; Anshad v. State of Karnataka, (1994) 4 SCC 381: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1204; Mithu v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 277: 1983 SCC (Cri) 405; Panchhi v. State of U.P., (1998) 7 SCC 177: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1561; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681; State of Maharashtra v. Sindhi, (1975) 1 SCC 647: 1975 SCC (Cri) 283; Vashram Narshibhai Rajpara v. State of Gujarat, (2002) 9 SCC 168: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1112; Om Prakash v. State of Haryana, (1999) 3 SCC 19: 1999 SCC (Cri) 334; Dharmendrasinh v. State of Gujarat, (2002) 4 SCC 679: 2002 SCC (Cri) 859; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580, relied on

Andrew Ashworth & Michael Hough: Sentencing and the Climate of Opinion (1996 CRIM. L. REV.); Ronald Dworkin: "The Forum of Principle", 56 NYU L. REV. 469 (1981); Von Hirsch and Andrew Ashworth: The Sentencing Theory Debate: Convergence in Outcomes, Divergence in Reasoning Proportionate Sentencing: Exploring The Principles, Oxford University Press, 2005; Jeremy Bentham: "An Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation" in A Fragment of Government with An Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation 281 (1948); Marvin E. Frankel: "Lawlessness in Sentencing", 41 U. CIN. L. REV. 1 (1972); Anthony Bottoms: "The Philosophy and Politics of Punishment and Sentencing", in The Politics of Sentencing Reform 20 (C.M.V. Clarkson & R. Morgan Eds., 1995), referred to

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580, followed

State of Punjab v. Prem Sagar, (2008) 7 SCC 550: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 183, criticised

Saibanna v. State of Karnataka, (2005) 4 SCC 165: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1094, held, not good law on this point

Ravji v. State of Rajasthan, (1996) 2 SCC 175: 1996 SCC (Cri) 225, held, per incuriam

Shivaji v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 15 SCC 269; Mohan Anna Chavan v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 7 SCC 561: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 193; Bantu v. State of U.P., (2008) 11 SCC 113: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 353; Surja Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (1996) 6 SCC 271: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1314; Dayanidhi Bisoi v. State of Orissa, (2003) 9 SCC 310: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1798; State of U.P. v. Sattan, (2009) 4 SCC 736, considered and doubted on this point

[Ed.: As per at least two 5-Judge Constitution Benches and one 9-Judge Bench, "State" under Art. 12 does not include the Judiciary, though certainly it would seem that it may be desirable to have Art. 14 applicable to the Judiciary, as held in this case in the case of imposition of the death penalty. See §§ [1574], [1575] and [1576], at p. 587 in Vol. 4, Complete Digest of Supreme Court Cases, 2nd Edn.]

[3662] — S. 354(3) — Crime in modern urban society — Impact of film and T.V. exhibiting scenes of sex, violence, bootlegging, drug trafficking, etc. — Censor Board required to take firm steps in this regard — Likelihood of films having remotely influenced the mind of the offender not a mitigating circumstance — Death sentence not unjustified merely because crime itself cannot be eradicated — Penology — Press and Media Laws — Cinematograph Act, 1952 — Ss. 5-A and 5-B

There cannot be any dispute that modernisation is an important factor and needed very much in a developing country; but this makes us ponder over whether the voyage we have undertaken on the basis of the principles enshrined in the Constitution, is being carried on right lines, for it is not the distance we have travelled that matters, but it is the direction in which we have travelled that really matters. Are we merely moving or truly advancing? Are we merely changing or effectively progressing and whether we are aware of the significant difference between moving and advancing and between changing and progressing? These are all aspects of great importance and wider amplitude involving socio-political issues to be considered at a different level.

Is it an irrevocable convention that the violence unleashed by the wicked or the evil-minded villain or the hero's valour in punishing those wicked and the villain must only be shown in such a cruel, gruesome and diabolical manner. When promotion of art and culture is the primary underlying object, how can obscenity, cruelty and many such wicked things be depicted and shown in such blown-up and magnified manner leaving an impression that the film is meant only to depict such things. It is here that the Censor Board should step in firmly and insist that the film being released has a message meant to improve the values of life and should see that the film contains only such scenes which do not affect the values of life. By exhibiting scenes of violence, sex, rape, bootlegging and drug trafficking etc. in such a manner or manners which have the propensities of disturbing or corrupting the minds of some viewers like children and particularly of those who are weak-minded, wayward, indisciplined, frustrated and likewise, who are very likely to become wicked and evil-minded and ultimately end up as criminals indulging in organised crime, the avowed object gets frustrated. The films should be of educative value and then only they can play an important role in subserving the interests of the society. No doubt, entertainment is one of the important underlying objects but it is mainly meant to make the viewers mentally relaxed and enjoy and not to render them heavy-hearted, sensually aroused and mentally disturbed which may lead them to indulge in frivolities, perversions and dangerous addictions, which ultimately are likely to pave the way to end themselves up as criminals.

In the last decade mass media has grown worldwide to be more larger, more influential and more powerful. The TV media is the most powerful. Quite a few films are shown on TV. The constraints that are applicable to film media equally apply to TV media also and the authorities concerned must exercise proper discretion in selecting the films to be telecast. Therefore among the available sources movie and TV have key roles in modifying human behaviour and one can easily observe the effect of movie and TV that day-to-day affects all children, adolescents and youths in dress, action and expression etc. and even the modus operandi adopted by some criminals to commit the crime has been found to be akin to that of the hero or villain in a particular movie. It cannot be said that all films are of that nature but in the context some of that nature are enough to cause the damage and the Censor Board is dutifully expected to stop such films from being released in an earnest manner.

In the instant case it cannot be held that likelihood of the films having remotely influenced the mind of the accused can be a mitigating circumstance particularly when he had already become a hardened criminal and committed the murders in such cruel, gruesome and diabolical manner without any compunction or any regard for the value of human life. It cannot be held that since it may not be possible to eradicate the crime itself, the criminals cannot be awarded death sentence though warranted by law. Shankar v. State of T.N., (1994) 4 SCC 478: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1252: 1994 Cri LJ 3071: (1994) 2 Crimes 1: (1994) 2 An LT(Cri) 429.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-4-1994]

[3663] — S. 354(3) — Deterrent theory of punishment — Doubt as to the efficacy of — Case of murder most foul — Death sentence not awarded for dowry death even where the murder was caused in the most atrocious and despicable manner and loathsome and revolting methods had been employed to dispose of the body — Constitution of India — Art. 21. Ravindra Trimbak Chouthmal v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 4 SCC 148.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-2-1996]

[3664] — S. 354(3) — Measure of punishment — Factors to be taken into consideration — Retributive aspect of punishment stressed — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 53

In recent years, the rising crime rate — particularly violent crime against women has made the criminal sentencing by the courts a subject of concern. Today there are admitted disparities. Some criminals get very harsh sentences while many receive grossly different sentence for an essentially equivalent crime and a shockingly large number even go unpunished thereby encouraging the criminal and in the ultimate making justice suffer by weakening the system's credibility.

Of course, it is not possible to lay down any cut and dry formula relating to imposition of sentence but the object of sentencing should be to see that the crime does not go unpunished and the victim of crime as also the society has the satisfaction that justice has been done to it. In imposing sentences in the absence of specific legislation, Judges must consider variety of factors and after considering all those factors and taking an overall view of the situation, impose sentence which they consider to be an appropriate one. Aggravating factors cannot be ignored and similarly mitigating circumstances have also to be taken into consideration.

The measure of punishment in a given case must depend upon the atrocity of the crime; the conduct of the criminal and the defenceless and unprotected state of the victim. Imposition of appropriate punishment is the manner in which the courts respond to the society's cry for justice against the criminals. Justice demands that courts should impose punishment befitting the crime so that the courts reflect public abhorrence of the crime. The courts must not only keep in view the rights of the criminal but also the rights of the victim of crime and the society at large while considering imposition of appropriate punishment. Dhananjoy Chatterjee v. State of W.B., (1994) 2 SCC 220: 1994 SCC (Cri) 358.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-1994]

[3665] — S. 354(3) — Sentence — Proportionality of — Principle of just deserts — Caution to trial Judges against departure from this principle when determining sentence based on other considerations

The principle of proportion between crime and punishment is a principle of just desert that serves as the foundation of every criminal sentence that is justifiable. As a principle of criminal justice it is hardly less familiar or less important than the principle that only the guilty ought to be punished. Indeed, the requirement that punishment not be disproportionately great, which is a corollary of just desert, is dictated by the same principle that does not allow punishment of the innocent, for any punishment in excess of what is deserved for the criminal conduct is punishment without guilt. (Para 29)

The criminal law adheres in general to the principle of proportionality in prescribing liability according to the culpability of each kind of criminal conduct. It ordinarily allows some significant discretion to the Judge in arriving at a sentence in each case, presumably to permit sentences that reflect more subtle considerations of culpability that are raised by the special facts of each case. Judges in essence affirm that punishment ought always to fit the crime; yet in practice sentences are determined largely by other considerations. Sometimes it is the correctional needs of the perpetrator that are offered to justify a sentence. Sometimes the desirability of keeping him out of circulation, and sometimes even the terrific results of his crime. Inevitably these considerations cause a departure from just desert as the basis of punishment and create cases of apparent injustice that are serious and widespread. (Para 30). Bablu v. State of Rajasthan, (2006) 13 SCC 116: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 590: AIR 2007 SC 697: (2007) 50 AIC 89 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 1160.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2006]

[3666] — S. 354(3) — Award of death sentence — Reasons for, must be given — Change in law effected by the new Code — Occurrence taking place after the coming into force of the new Code — Failure to record special reasons for the award of death sentence in preference to life imprisonment vitiating the award of sentence — Application of rule of absence of extenuating circumstances evolved under the old Code improper — CrPC, 1898 — S. 367(5)

Under S. 354(3) of the new Code the Court is required to state the reasons for the sentence awarded and in the case of sentence of death, special reasons are required to be stated. Awarding of the sentence other than the sentence of death is the general rule now and only special reasons, that is to say, special facts and circumstances in a given case, will warrant the passing of the death sentence. Such special circumstances, for example, are whether the crime has been committed by a professional or hardened criminal, or it has been committed in a very brutal manner or on a helpless child or a woman or the like. Balwant Singh v. State of Punjab, (1976) 1 SCC 425: 1976 SCC (Cri) 43: AIR 1976 SC 230: (1976) 2 SCR 684: 1976 Cri LJ 291.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.K. Goswami and N.L. Untwalia, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-11-1975]

[3667] — S. 354(3) — Award of death sentence — Statement of special reasons for awarding death sentence essential — In the absence of such reasons death sentence must be commuted to life imprisonment. Ambaram v. State of M.P., (1976) 4 SCC 298: 1976 SCC (Cri) 610: AIR 1976 SC 2196: 1976 Cri LJ 1716.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria and N.L. Untwalia, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-3-1976]

[3668] — S. 354(3) — Choice of sentence, death or life imprisonment — Court can award sentence of death only in the rarest of the rare cases and must give special reasons for the same — Obligation of court to take into account aggravating and mitigating circumstances even if no argument addressed with regard to the sentence — Number of victims and motive of the crime are not the only considerations for imposing death penalty — An eye for an eye approach not proper — Penology

Section 354(3) of Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 makes it obligatory in cases of conviction for offences punishable with death or with imprisonment for life to assign reasons in support of the sentence awarded to the convict and further ordains that in case the Judge awards the death penalty "special reasons" for such sentence shall be stated in the judgment. (Para 9)

After the High Court arrived at the conclusion that the appellants along with "some others" had set the shop on fire, it was not proper for it to have ignored that factor, which is a mitigating circumstance, while considering the question of sentence. Though the appellants, or at least some of them, were alleged to be armed with bombs and firearms, they had not used these weapons against their victims. This factor also deserved notice while considering whether the extreme penalty of death was called for in the case or not. That the appellants intended that the person inside the shop should be burnt alive is established beyond doubt but there is no material to show that the appellants knew or had reason to believe that there were three persons inside the shop at the relevant time. Therefore, the number of victims alone would not make the case "rarest of the rare". The imposition of proper sentence is an obligation on the court and even if no argument had been addressed on behalf of the appellants, the court was expected to take note of the legislative intendment relating to the award of capital punishment as manifest from the provisions of Section 354(3) CrPC and award an appropriate sentence, after taking into account the aggravating as well as the mitigating circumstances. The sentencing court has to make an endeavour to see that all relevant factors and circumstances bearing on the question of sentence, are taken note of and only after giving due weight to the same, it should proceed to impose the capital sentence. Some of the mitigating circumstances noticed above make it imperative to say that the present case in spite of the fact that three persons lost their lives, is not one of the "rarest of the rare cases" in which four appellants deserved to be sentenced to death. An eye for an eye approach is neither proper nor desirable. The mandate of Section 354(3) CrPC does not approve of it. The courts must be conscious of the change brought about in the matter of award of capital punishment by the legislature by enacting Section 354(3) CrPC limiting the award the sentence of death only in the "rarest of the rare cases" and that too after recording "special reasons" for awarding the same, keeping in view the guidelines given by this Court in various judgments. Neither of the two courts below have given any special reasons for awarding the sentence of death. Sk. Ishaque v. State of Bihar, (1995) 3 SCC 392: 1995 SCC (Cri) 534: 1995 Cri LJ 2682.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and K.S. Paripoornan, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-3-1995]

Jashubha Bharatsinh Gohil v. State of Gujarat, (1994) 4 SCC 353: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1193: Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580: Anshad v. State of Karnataka, (1994) 4 SCC 381: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1204, followed

[3669] — S. 354(3) — Choice of sentence, death or life imprisonment — Court's discretion — How to be exercised — Factors to be considered — Standardisation of sentencing process unwarranted — Degree of gravity of offence to be seen — Decision to be taken having regard to the punitive, deterrent and protective purposes of sentencing, the social context and the circumstances — Death sentence is justified only in rarest of the rare cases — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 304-B

In order that the sentences may be properly graded to fit the degree of gravity of each case, it is necessary that the maximum sentence prescribed by law should be reserved for 'the rarest of rare' cases which are of an exceptional nature. Sentences of severity are imposed to reflect the seriousness of the crime, to promote respect for the law, to provide just punishment for the offence, to afford adequate deterrent to criminal conduct and to protect the community from further similar conduct. It serves a threefold purpose (i) punitive (ii) deterrent and (iii) protective. The court must not only look to the crime and the victim but also the circumstances of the criminal and the impact of the crime on the community. Unless the nature of the crime and the circumstances of the offender reveal that the criminal is a menace to the society and the sentence of life imprisonment would be altogether inadequate, the court should ordinarily impose the lesser punishment. Only in those exceptional cases in which the crime is so brutal, diabolical and revolting as to shock the collective conscience of the community, would it be permissible to award the death sentence. Where the incidence of a certain crime is rapidly growing and is assuming menacing proportions, for example, acid pouring or bride burning, it may be necessary for the courts to award exemplary punishments to protect the community and to deter others from committing such crimes.

In Bachan Singh only the broad guidelines consistent with S. 354(3), CrPC were indicated without attempting to formulate rigid standards because standardisation of the sentencing process would leave little room for judicial discretion to take account of variations in culpability even within the same category of cases. In the subsequent decision in Machhi Singh, the court tried to indicate the type of cases which may fall within the exceptional class without attempting to introduce rigidity. It would not be fair to read the decision as an attempt to fetter judicial discretion. Even in cases of the type indicated in that case, circumstances may vary, which would necessitate a different approach. Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490: AIR 1989 SC 1456: 1989 Cri LJ 1466.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Natarajan and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-4-1989]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, explained and affirmed

[3670] — S. 354(3) — Choice of sentence, death or life imprisonment — Guidelines indicated in sub-section (3) for determining — In absence of adequate explanation for the extreme penalty, choice should be for lower sentence

In choosing between the sentence of death and life imprisonment under S. 302, IPC, court must show a high degree of concern and sensitiveness and decide having regard to the guideline provided by the legislature in the form of sub-section (3) of S. 354 CrPC. Sub-section (3) obliges the court to explain its choice of sentence. The 'special reasons clause' in that sub-section is a sufficient safeguard against arbitrary imposition of the extreme penalty. Unless there are special reasons, special to the facts of the particular case, which can be catalogued as justifying a severe punishment the judge should not award the death sentence. If a judge finds that he is unable to explain with reasonable accuracy the basis for selecting the higher of the two sentences his choice should fall on the lower sentence. In all such cases the law casts an obligation on the judge to make his choice after carefully examining the pros and cons of each case. Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490: AIR 1989 SC 1456: 1989 Cri LJ 1466.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Natarajan and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-4-1989]

[3671] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Rarest of rare cases — Choice between sentence of death and life imprisonment — Factors to be considered — Balancing of aggravating and mitigating circumstances — Duty of court to give special reasons for awarding death sentence — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34 and 379/34

Courts are expected to exhibit sensitiveness in the matter of award of sentence particularly, the sentence of death because life once lost cannot be brought back. For determining the proper sentence while the court should take into account the aggravating circumstances it should not overlook or ignore the mitigating circumstances. The manner in which the crime was committed, the weapons used and the brutality or the lack of it are some of the considerations which must be present to the mind of the court. Of course, the High Court has the power and jurisdiction to enhance the sentence of life imprisonment to death but that power has to be sparingly exercised, in "rarest of the rare cases" for 'special reasons' to be recorded. The courts must be alive to the legislative changes introduced in 1973 through S. 354(3) CrPC. Death sentence, being an exception to the general rule, should be awarded in the "rarest of the rare cases" for 'special reasons' to be recorded after balancing the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances, in the facts and circumstances of a given case. The number of persons murdered is a consideration but that is not the only consideration for imposing death penalty unless the case falls in the category of "rarest of the rare cases". The courts must keep in view the nature of the crime, the brutality with which it was executed, the antecedents of the criminal, the weapons used etc. It is neither possible nor desirable to catalogue all such factors and they depend upon case to case.

The reasons given by the High Court to enhance the sentence of life imprisonment to death, without taking into account all circumstances and balancing the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances are neither 'special reasons' nor otherwise adequate and sufficient to impose the sentence of death on either of the three convicts. Anshad v. State of Karnataka, (1994) 4 SCC 381: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1204.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-4-1994]

[3672] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence and life imprisonment — Award of

In India the subject of capital punishment has abortively come before Parliament earlier, although our social scientists have not made any sociological or statistical study in depth yet. On the statutory side there has been a significant change since India became free. Under S. 367(5) of the Criminal Procedure Code, as it stood before its amendment by Act 26 of 1955, the normal rule was to sentence to death a person convicted for murder and to impose the lesser sentence for reasons to be recorded in writing. By amendment, this provision was deleted with the result that the court is now free to award either death sentence or life imprisonment, unlike formerly when death was the rule and life term the exception, for recorded reasons. In the new Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 a great change has overtaken the law, i.e., S. 354(3).

The unmistakable shift in legislative emphasis is that life imprisonment for murder is the rule and capital sentence the exception to be resorted to for reasons to be stated. Ediga Anamma v. State of A.P., (1974) 4 SCC 443: 1974 SCC (Cri) 479: AIR 1974 SC 799: 1974 Cri LJ 683: (1974) 3 SCR 329.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-1974]

[3673] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence is an exception — Special reasons must be assigned for clearly stating why any punishment other than capital punishment will not suffice

Per Sinha, J.

There is a clear and discernible necessity of caution to set the maximum punishment in an offence. And also by implication there must be intensive and exhaustive inquiry into accused-related parameters before employing the maximum sentence by a court of law. Therefore, discretion to the judiciary in this respect (to declare the maximum punishment) is of utmost critical and seminal value. Reasons must be detailed setting clearly why any punishment other than the maximum punishment will not suffice. This is a general and age-old rule of sentencing which has been statutorily recognised under Section 354(3) CrPC, which mandates that for imposing death sentence, special reasons are to be assigned. Imposition of death punishment is an exception in terms of Section 354(3). Whereas for commission of other offences, one or other theory, justly or otherwise may be taken recourse to, a large number of factors are required to be borne in mind for awarding death penalty. (Paras 66 and 73)

We do not have a sentencing policy, unlike some other countries. England has the concept of "guideline judgments" which is considered as a judge managed sentencing model rather than a statute induced one. We have no practice of referring such matters to superior courts for laying down the guidelines relating to imposition of sentence under various situations. Section 354(3) suggests that Indian law furthers statute induced sentencing guidance in part. Therefore it has to be given full colour. In our country, therefore, each case may have to be considered on its own merit. (Paras 57 to 59). Swamy Shraddananda v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 12 SCC 288: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 322: AIR 2007 SC 2531.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha[1] and Markandey Katju[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 18-5-2007]

[3674] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence is now an exception — But award of death sentence on potent grounds by trial Court is not interfered with by appellate Courts

It is true that in the present Code, the unmistakable shift in legislative emphasis is on life imprisonment for murder as the rule and capital sentence an exception, to be resorted to even so, the discretion is limited. If the offence has been perpetrated with attendant aggravating circumstances, if the perpetrator discloses an extremely depraved state of mind and diabolical trickery in committing the homicide, accompanied by brutal dealing with the cadaver, the Court can hardly help in the present state of the law, avoiding infliction of the death penalty. When discretion has been exercised by the trial Court and it is difficult to fault that Court on any ground, statutory or precedential, an appellate review and even referral action become too narrow to demolish the discretionary exercise of power by the inferior Court. Joseph Peter v. State of Goa, Daman and Diu, (1977) 3 SCC 280: 1977 SCC (Cri) 486: AIR 1977 SC 1812: 1977 Cri LJ 1449.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-5-1977]

[3675] — S. 354(3) — Justification for death sentence — Held, under the new CrPC normal punishment for murder is imprisonment for life and death penalty is an exception — Only special facts and circumstances will warrant the passing of the death sentence — A just balance has to be struck between the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances before the option is exercised — Historical developments since 1955 traced — CrPC, 1898 — S. 367(5) — CrPC (Amendment) Act, 1955

Section 302 IPC prescribes death or life imprisonment as the penalty for murder. While doing so, the Code of Criminal Procedure instructs the court as to its application. The changes which the Code has undergone in the last three decades clearly indicate that Parliament is taking note of contemporary criminological thought and movement. It is not difficult to discern that in the Code there is a definite swing towards life imprisonment. Death sentence is ordinarily ruled out and can only be imposed for "special reasons", as provided in Section 354(3). (Para 6)

Before the amendment of Section 367(5) of the old Code, by the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Act, 1955 (26 of 1955) which came into force on 1-1-1956, on a conviction for an offence punishable with death, if the court sentenced the accused to any punishment other than death, the reason why sentence of death was not passed had to be stated in the judgment. But after the said amendment, it is clear that the normal penalty is imprisonment for life. It can be awarded in the presence of extenuating circumstances which reduce the gravity of the offence. The matter is left, after the amendment, to the discretion of the court. The court must, however, take into account all the circumstances, and state its reasons for whichever of the two sentences it imposes in its discretion. Therefore, the former rule that the normal punishment for murder is death is no longer operative and it is now within the discretion of the court to pass either of the two sentences prescribed in this section; but whichever of the two sentences he passes the judge must give his reasons for imposing a particular sentence. The amendment of Section 367(5) of the old Code does not affect the law regulating punishment under IPC. This amendment relates to procedure and now courts are no longer required to elaborate the reasons for not awarding the death penalty; but they cannot depart from sound judicial considerations preferring the lesser punishment. (Para 7)

Section 354(3) of the new Code marks a significant shift in the legislative policy underlying the old Code as in force immediately before 1-4-1974, according to which both the alternative sentences of death or imprisonment for life provided for murder were normal sentences. Now, under Section 354(3) of the new Code the normal punishment for murder is imprisonment for life and death penalty is an exception. The court is required to state the reasons for the sentence awarded and in the case of death sentence "special reasons" are required to be stated, that is to say, only special facts and circumstances will warrant the passing of the death sentence. A balance sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances has to be drawn up and in doing so the mitigating circumstances have to be accorded full weightage and a just balance has to be struck between the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances before the option is exercised. (Paras 8 and 11). Sushil Murmu v. State of Jharkhand, (2004) 2 SCC 338: 2004 SCC (Cri) 529: AIR 2004 SC 394: 2004 Cri LJ 658.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2003]

Ediga Anamma v. State of A.P., (1974) 4 SCC 443: 1974 SCC (Cri) 479; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, relied on

[3676] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence or life imprisonment — Choice between — Considerations — Depends upon particular circumstances of each case — Relevancy of part played by individual accused and quality of incriminating evidence in weighing mitigating and aggravating circumstances — Cold-blooded and gruesome murder of six persons committed in an organised manner — Victims undefended and helpless — Death sentence justified — Supposed mitigating factors rejected — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The choice as to which one of the two punishments provided for murder is the proper one in a given case will depend upon the particular circumstances of that case and the Court has to exercise its discretion judicially and on well-recognised principles after balancing all the mitigating and aggravating circumstances of the crime. The Court also should see whether there is something uncommon about the crime which renders sentence of imprisonment of life inadequate and calls for death sentence. The nature of the crime and the circumstances of the offender should be so revealing that the criminal is a menace to the society and the sentence of imprisonment of life would be inadequate. The sentence of death should be reserved for the rarest of rare cases after a due consideration of both mitigating and aggravating circumstances. What circumstances bring a particular case under the category of rarest of rare cases vary from case to case depending upon the nature of the crime, weapons used and the manner in which it is perpetrated etc.

Individual part played by the accused may assume some importance in some cases, but in an organised crime that kind of enquiry may not be relevant for the purpose of finding out the special reasons. However, under the facts and circumstances of the present case the part played by the individual accused i.e. A-1 to A-3 may be relevant in weighing mitigating and aggravating circumstances in awarding death sentence, particularly in view of the fact that A-4 to A-6 who were also the associates of A-1 and who also participated in committing the murders of D-4 to D-6 are awarded only imprisonment for life and also in view of the fact that the case mainly rests on the evidence of the approver.

A-1 was the leader of the gang which indulged in illicit arrack and brothel business. He was responsible for spoiling the life of many girls. He used to be very cruel to them. He brutally murdered six persons. The crime indulged was gruesome, cold-blooded, heinous, atrocious and cruel and he has proved to be an ardent criminal and thus a menace to the society. It is an exceptional case where the crime committed by him is so gruesome, diabolical and revolting which shocks the collective conscience of the community. There cannot be any doubt that his case is one of the rarest of rare cases fully warranting the imposition of death sentence. That A-1 contributed his ill-gotten gains to social organisations is not a mitigating circumstance. Nor can the reasons for his entry into organised crime have a mitigating effect nor his plea of repentance made to evade the death sentence. A-2 throughout had been actively associated with A-1. He participated in every crime and was close associate of A-1 in every unlawful business activity. The reasons given in respect of A-1 for awarding death sentence equally apply to the case A-2 also.

It is not possible to agree that since it may not be possible to eradicate the crime itself, the criminals cannot be awarded death sentence though warranted by law.

So far as A-3 is concerned, the quality of evidence is not of such high degree in respect of the nature of participation by him to which the Court can give that high value to impose death sentence. His death sentence is modified to life imprisonment. Shankar v. State of T.N., (1994) 4 SCC 478: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1252: 1994 Cri LJ 3071: (1994) 2 Crimes 1: (1994) 2 An LT(Cri) 429.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-4-1994]

Dudh Nath Pandey v. State of U.P., (1981) 2 SCC 166: 1981 SCC (Cri) 379; Suresh v. State of U.P., (1981) 2 SCC 569: 1981 SCC (Cri) 559; Ummilal v. State of M.P., (1981) 3 SCC 574: 1981 SCC (Cri) 760, distinguished

[3677] — S. 354(3) — Sentence — Determination of — Standardisation as per degree of culpability, the aggravating or mitigating circumstances, held, not possible — Penology

Regarding the question of laying down standards and norms restricting the area of imposition of death penalty, if by "laying down standards", it is meant that "murder" should be categorised beforehand according to the degrees of its culpability and all the aggravating and mitigating circumstances should be exhaustively and rigidly enumerated so as to exclude all free play of discretion, the argument merits rejection. Such standardisation is well-nigh impossible. Firstly, degree of culpability cannot be measured in each case; secondly, criminal cases cannot be categorised, there being infinite, unpredictable and unforeseeable variations; thirdly, on such categorisation, the sentencing process will cease to be judicial; and fourthly, such standardisation or sentencing discretion is a policy-matter belonging to the legislature beyond the court's function. Only broad guidelines consistent with the policy indicated by the legislature in Section 354(3) can be laid down. (Paras 10 and 12). Mohd. Chaman v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2001) 2 SCC 28: 2001 SCC (Cri) 278: 2001 Cri LJ 725.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-12-2000]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580: AIR 1980 SC 898; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681; Nirmal Singh v. State of Haryana, (1999) 3 SCC 670: 1999 SCC (Cri) 472; Anshad v. State of Karnataka, (1994) 4 SCC 381: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1204, relied on

[3678] — S. 354(3) — Sentencing procedure under — Legal obligation of court to explain choice of sentence — All facts and circumstances bearing on the question of sentence must be brought on record and both mitigating and aggravating circumstances must be considered — "Special reasons" for award of death sentence to be stated — Penology — Objects of punishment

The courts are constantly faced with the situation where they are required to answer to new challenges and mould the sentencing system to meet those challenges. Protection of society and deterring the criminal is the avowed object of law and that is required to be achieved by imposing appropriate sentence. The change in the legislative intendment relating to award of capital punishment notwithstanding, the opposition by the protagonist of abolition of capital sentence, shows that it is expected of the courts to so operate the sentencing system as to impose such sentence which reflects the social conscience of the society. The sentencing process has to be stern where it should be.

Section 354(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, as amended, makes it obligatory in cases of conviction for offences punishable with death or with imprisonment for life to assign reasons in support of the sentence awarded to the convict and further ordains that in case the Judge awards death penalty, "special reasons" for such sentence shall be stated in the judgment. Thus, the Judge is under a legal obligation to explain his choice of the sentence. The legislature in its supreme wisdom thought that in some "rare cases" for "special reasons" to be recorded it will be necessary to impose the extreme penalty of death to deter others and to protect the society and in a given case even the sovereignty and security of the State or country. It, however, left the choice of sentence to the judiciary with the rider that the court may impose the extreme punishment of death for "special reasons". The sentencing court has, therefore, to approach the question seriously and make an endeavour to see that all the relevant facts and circumstances bearing on the question of sentence are brought on record. It is only after giving due weight to the mitigating as well as the aggravating circumstances, that it must proceed to impose the appropriate sentence. Jashubha Bharatsinh Gohil v. State of Gujarat, (1994) 4 SCC 353: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1193.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and Dr. A.S. Anand, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-4-1994]

[3679] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — When not warranted — No rigid standards and norms can be laid down — Rape of child aged 11/2 years by appellant aged 30 years — In the process of committing rape, injuries inflicted on liver, apart from other injuries which resulting in death of the child — Held, case does not fall within the rarest of the rare category — Hence death sentence not justified — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 376 and 302

In the present case the crime committed is undoubtedly serious and heinous and the conduct of the appellant is reprehensible. It reveals a dirty and perverted mind of a human being who has no control over his carnal desires. But treating the case on the touchstone of the guidelines laid down in Bachan Singh, Machhi Singh and other decisions and balancing the aggravating and mitigating circumstances emerging from the evidence on record, the case cannot be appropriately called one of the rarest of the rare cases. The appellant cannot be said to be such a dangerous person that to spare his life will endanger the community. It cannot be held that the circumstances of the crime are such that there is no alternative but to impose death sentence even after according maximum weightage to the mitigating circumstances in favour of the offender. The case is one in which a humanist approach should be taken in the matter of awarding punishment. Accordingly, the capital sentence imposed against the appellant by the courts below is set aside. Instead the appellant shall suffer rigorous imprisonment for life. (Paras 25 and 26). Mohd. Chaman v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2001) 2 SCC 28: 2001 SCC (Cri) 278: 2001 Cri LJ 725.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-12-2000]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580: AIR 1980 SC 898; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681; Nirmal Singh v. State of Haryana, (1999) 3 SCC 670: 1999 SCC (Cri) 472; Anshad v. State of Karnataka, (1994) 4 SCC 381: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1204, relied on

[3680] — S. 354(3) — Special reasons for death sentence

The normal sentence for murder is now imprisonment for life and not sentence of death. The court must give special reasons for awarding death sentence in any given case. Special reasons mean special facts and circumstances obtained in the case justifying the extreme penalty. Lichhamadevi v. State of Rajasthan, (1988) 4 SCC 456: 1988 SCC (Cri) 978: AIR 1988 SC 1785.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-8-1988]

[3681] — S. 354(3) — Special reasons for death sentence — Factors relevant to constitute the special reasons

In the Criminal Procedure Code, there is a definite swing towards life imprisonment. Death sentence is ordinarily ruled out and can only be imposed for "special reasons", as provided in Section 354(3). The personality of the offender as revealed by his age, character, antecedents and other circumstances and the tractability of the offender to reform must necessarily play the most prominent role in determining the sentence to be awarded. Special reasons must have some relation to these factors. Criminal justice deals with complex human problems and diverse human beings. A Judge has to balance the personality of the offender with the circumstances, situations and the reactions and choose the appropriate sentence to be imposed. (Para 14). Lehna v. State of Haryana, (2002) 3 SCC 76: 2002 SCC (Cri) 526.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.B. Shah, B.N. Agrawal and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-1-2002]

[3682] — S. 354(3) — Special reasons for the award of death sentence for conviction under S. 302, Indian Penal Code — Rajendra Prasad case on "special reasons" dissented from — Matter should be referred to a larger Bench

Per Sarkaria, J.

While reserving my own opinion on the various questions raised in this case including the one with regard to the scope, amplification and application of S. 354(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, I would, in agreement with my learned brother, direct that the records of this case be submitted to the Hon'ble the Chief Justice, for constituting a larger Bench which would resolve the doubts, difficulties and inconsistencies pointed out by my learned brother in his order, particularly in its last paragraph.

Per Kailasam, J.

As a result of the change introduced by S. 354(3) of the new Criminal Procedure Code, 1973, the awarding of sentence other than the sentence of death is the general rule now and only special reasons, that is to say, special facts and circumstances in a given case will warrant the passing of the death sentence. The Criminal Procedure Code requires the courts to take into account the circumstances in which the crime was committed, the particulars about the criminal and all relevant circumstances relating to the commission of the crime by the criminal. The trial Court is required to give reasons and they are to be scrutinised by the High Court. The High Court also has to satisfy itself that there are special reasons for inflicting the extreme penalty.

However, the further guidelines and restrictions on the discretion of the court to award death sentence or imprisonment spelt out in Rajendra Prasad case (1979) 3 SCC 646 are contrary to the decision of the Constitution Bench in Jagmohan Singh case (1973) 1 SCC 20 upholding death penalty, and that the Court has no power to legislate and to frame rules to guide the infliction of death penalty and the view of the learned Judges that in awarding a sentence the criminal is more important than the crime is not warranted by the law as it stands today.

It is for Parliament to clarify the circumstances under which a sentence of death could be awarded. It is for the court to administer the law as it stands. In awarding sentence of death, the court has to take into consideration the various aspects regarding the crime and the person that committed the crime and pass an appropriate sentence; and if it is death sentence, to give special reasons as required by the Criminal Procedure Code. If in deciding a case on particular facts a principle is stated it may be binding as a precedent. If the courts resort to rule-making, it will not be binding as a precedent. If the courts are to embark on rule-making, the question arises whether the responsibility can be undertaken by a Bench of 3 Judges with a majority of 2 to 1. Is it permissible for another Bench to proceed to make laws and prescribe an entirely different set of rules? There is no machinery by which the court could ascertain the views of the various cross-sections of the society which is a prerequisite before any law-making is resorted to.

The controversy over capital punishment is not new. For several centuries the debate is going on. I am conscious that it is a highly controversial subject on which much can be said on both sides. Fortunately, for the judges it is neither necessary nor desirable to subscribe to one of the two views. All that the judges are expected to do is to administer the law as it stands. It is not for them to say what it should be.

So, if I am satisfied that the trial Judge and the High Court have given special reasons as required under the law it is my duty to confirm the sentence of death.

Hence, in the result I find myself unable to agree with the reasoning or conclusion arrived at by this Court in Rajendra Prasad case mainly on the ground that it is not in conformity with the decision of the Constitution Bench of this Court in Jagmohan case and that the propositions laid down are not within the competence of the court. Though the decision cannot be treated as a binding precedent yet as it is a decision of a Bench of this Court I direct the matter be placed before the Hon'ble the Chief Justice for constituting a larger Bench to decide the case. Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 3 SCC 727: 1979 SCC (Cri) 830.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.S. Kailasam and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-5-1979]

[3683] — Ss. 354(3) and 235(2) — Death sentence or life imprisonment — Test of rarest of the rare case — Court has to take into account both the crime and the criminal as also aggravating as well as mitigating circumstances — Special reasons for awarding death sentence has to be determined having regard to the facts and circumstances of each case — Rajiv Gandhi assassination case — Having regard to all the relevant aspects, held (per majority) four out of seven accused must be sentenced to death — Though one of the four sentenced to death was a woman and mother of a child (born during captivity) but having regard to the active role played by her in the crime no special consideration need be shown to her — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 r/w S. 120-B

The award of sentence of death to all the 26 appellants by the Designated Court was stated by the defence counsel as amounting to judicial massacre. A fervent appeal was made to the Court that the high profile of the celebrity dimension of the targeted victim should not colour the Court's judicial vision in determining the sentencing extent. But the other side of the picture was etched by pleading that the Court cannot adopt a Nelson's eye to the stark reality that the target of the dastardly intrigue was a leader who represented a bulk of the nation's population in whom the nation had reposed its faith and trust for a full term.

Held :

Per Thomas, J.

The Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court in Bachan Singh case made it impermissible to award death sentence except in rarest of the rare cases wherein the lesser alternative is unquestionably foreclosed. The court must pay due regard both to the crime and the criminal. What is the relative weight to be given to the aggravating and mitigating factors, depends on the facts and circumstances of the particular case. Three such circumstances which the Supreme Court was told about are the following:

(1) The age of the accused — if the accused is young or old the sentence of death should be avoided.

(2) The probability that the accused would not commit criminal acts of violence as would constitute a continuing threat to society.

(3) That the accused acted under duress or domination of another person. (Paras 344 and 346)

Bearing the above principle in mind it has to be determined whether the death sentence passed by the trial court should be confirmed or not in respect of the seven accused whose conviction of the offence under Section 302 read with Section 120-B have been confirmed. There can be no two opinions that looking at the crime conspectus of what was perpetrated at Sriperumbudur it was most dastardly to the superlative degree. Those who machinated to bring about such a horrendous crime cannot normally escape the extreme penalty of law. (Para 347)

Apart from the nature of crime, the Court is duty-bound to look at the criminals also. The conspirators in the Rajiv Gandhi assassination case can be vivisected into four broad categories:

First, those who formed the hard-core nucleus which took the decision to assassinate Rajiv Gandhi.

Second, those who induced others to join the ring and played active as well as supervisory roles in the conspiracy.

Third, those who joined the conspiracy by inducement whether through indoctrination or otherwise.

Fourth, those among the conspirators who participated in the actual commission of murder. (Para 348)

Persons who fall within the first category cannot normally escape from capital punishment if their case ends in conviction. Veluppillai Prabhakaran, Pottu Omman, Akila, Sivarasan and Trichy Santhan have been described as persons falling within the radius of the first category. As they were not tried for the offences so far it is not necessary to observe anything concerning them in the sphere of sentencing exercise. (Para 349)

However, A-2 (Santhan), A-3 (Murugan) and A-18 (Arivu) belonged to the second category even if they slip out of the first. They were not merely carrying out the orders of the first category personnel but they made others work according to their directions in order to achieve the target. The role played by them was prominently direct and active. They were in the leadership layer among the conspirators. There is nothing extenuating as for the said three persons in their activities for implementation of the decisions of the cabal. (Para 350)

A-1 (Nalini) belongs to the fourth category. In the normal spectrum of consideration, death penalty is the first priority to be chosen for her. She is an elderly and educated woman. One gets the impression, on reading her confession, that she was led into the conspiracy by playing on her feminine sentiments. She became an obedient participant without doing any dominating role. She was persistently brainwashed by A-3 (Murugan) who became her husband and then the father of her child. Suba and Dhanu would certainly have etched a woeful picture regarding the atrocities committed by IPKF on women and girls of Tamil origin in Sri Lanka. By such indoctrinative exercises she would have honestly believed in the virtue of offering her help to the task undertaken by the conspirators. In the confessional statement made by her brother A-20 (Bhagyanathan) he revealed one fact i.e. A-1 (Nalini) had confided to him on 23-5-1991 itself that as a matter of fact she realised only at Sriperumbudur that Dhanu was going to kill Rajiv Gandhi. Perhaps that may be a true fact. But she would not have dared to retreat from the scene as she was tucked into the tentacles of the conspiracy octopus from where it was impossible for a woman like A-1 (Nalini) to get herself extricated. She knew how Sivarasan and Santhan had liquidated those who did not stand by them. Considering the fact that she belongs to the weaker sex and her helplessness in escaping from the cobweb of Sivarasan and company, the mere fact that she became obedient to all the instructions of Sivarasan need not be used for treating her conduct as amounting to "rarest of the rare cases" indicated in Bachan Singh case, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580. (Para 352)

Another consideration which it is difficult to overlook is — she is the mother of a little female child who would not have even experienced maternal huddling as that little one was born in captivity. Of course the maxim "justitia non novit patrem nec matrem" (justice knows no father nor mother) is a pristine doctrine. But it cannot be allowed to reign with its rigour in the sphere of sentence determination. As the death sentence passed on the father of that small child is confirmed, an effort to save its mother from the gallows may not militate against jus gladii so that an innocent child can be saved from imposed orphanhood. (Para 353)

Thus, on an evaluation of the plus and minus, pros and cons it is decided to save A-1 (Nalini) from the gallows. Hence the sentence passed on her is altered to one of imprisonment for life. (Para 354)

What remains is the case of A-9 (Robert Payas), A-10 (Jayakumar), and A-16 (Ravichandran). They do not belong to the first or even to the second category. They were LTTE followers and they just obeyed the commands of leaders like Sivarasan who had the capacity to dominate over them. Their sentence has to be altered from death penalty to imprisonment for life. (Para 355)

Per Wadhwa, J.

It is not that Nalini (A-1) did not understand the nature of the crime and her participation. She was a willing party to the crime. Both the crime and the criminal have to be seen. Nalini (A-1) in her association with Murugan (A-3) and others developed great hatred towards Rajiv Gandhi and wanted to have revenge. Merely because Nalini (A-1) is a woman and a mother of the child who was born while she was in custody cannot be the ground not to award the extreme penalty to her. She is an educated woman and was working as a stenographer in a private firm. She was living alone away from her mother, sister and brother since April 1990 and had started living in a rented apartment from October 1990. She became friendly to Murugan (A-3) when she was introduced to him in her office by her sister Kalyani and Bharathi (PW 233). Before this date also she was close to some of the LTTE activists. She developed fondness towards Murugan (A-3) and in fact wanted to marry him. He, however, declined as he said he was a committed LTTE activist and as per code of LTTE he could not marry. They were, however, having sexual relations and when they returned from their trip to Tirupathi after the assassination of Rajiv Gandhi it was found that Nalini (A-1) was pregnant. Subsequently while both of them were in custody they were married from earlier date. It was in July 1991 that she gave birth to the girl child. (Para 636)

As regards the crime, it was found that along with Rajiv Gandhi, 15 others had also lost their lives. It is not disputed that these persons died on account of the bomb blast and others suffered grievous and simple injuries on that account. What about their families, one may ask. Cruelty of the crime committed has known no bounds. The crime sent shock waves in the country. General elections had to be postponed. It was submitted more than once that principal perpetrators in the present case are already dead but then for the support which Nalini (A-1), Santhan (A-2), Murugan (A-3) and Arivu (A-18) afforded for commission of the crime it could not have been committed. Each one of these four accused had a role to play. Crime was ommitted after previous planning and executed with extreme brutality. There were as many as two dry runs as to how to reach Rajiv Gandhi after penetrating the security cordon. A former Prime Minister of the country was targeted because this country had entered an agreement with a foreign country in exercise of its sovereign powers. Rajiv Gandhi being the head of the Government at that time was signatory to the Accord which was also signed by the head of the Government of Sri Lanka. The Accord had the approval of Parliament. It was not that Rajiv Gandhi had entered into the Accord in his personal capacity or for his own benefit. Though it has been held that object of the conspiracy was not to commit any terrorist act or any disruptive activity, nevertheless murder of a former Prime Minister for what he did in the interest of the country was an act of exceptional depravity on the part of the accused, an unparalleled act in the annals of crimes committed in this country. In a mindless fashion not only was Rajiv Gandhi killed but along with him others died and many suffered grievous and simple injuries. It is not that intensity of the belt bomb strapped on the waist of Dhanu was not known to the conspirators as after switching on the first switch on her belt bomb Dhanu asked Sivarasan to move away. Haribabu was so keen to have close-up pictures of the crime that he met his fate in the blast itself. It is not possible to find any mitigating circumstance to upset the award of sentence of death on the accused. (Para 636)

This is a case where all these — Nalini (A-1), Santhan (A-2), Murugan (A-3) and Arivu (A-18) deserve extreme penalty. Award of sentence of death on them is confirmed. (Para 637)

Per Quadri, J.

Discretion of the court in awarding punishment when conviction is for an offence punishable with death or with imprisonment for life is controlled by Section 354(3) CrPC; so if the court proposes to impose capital punishment it must record "special reasons" for so doing. What constitutes special reasons cannot be stated with any precision and that has to be determined having regard to the facts and circumstances of each case. If a case falls in the category of "rarest of the rare case" it would justify the requirement of special reasons. But again in deciding whether a case falls within "rarest of the rare case", the court has to consider both aggravating as well as the mitigating circumstances in each case. (Para 716)

It ill behoves a person to order the death of another. He who gives life alone has the authority to take life. In dispensing justice a Judge is not only discharging a sovereign function but he is also doing a divine function. Even so the most difficult task for a Judge is to choose the punishment of death in preference to the punishment of life imprisonment for he is conscious of the fact that once the life of a person is taken away by a judicial order it cannot be restored by another judicial order of the highest authority in this world. Having taken upon himself the onerous responsibility of doing justice according to the Constitution and the laws, the Judge must become independent of his conviction and ideology to maintain the balance of scales of justice. A-1 is a woman and is the mother of a small girl who was born during the period of her confinement in jail. She is very young. She has also subsequently regretted her act and her participation was the result of indoctrination by A-3. She did not play any major role. These are indisputably the mitigating circumstances. Surely in our culture a woman has to be treated with beneficence and kindness. But then in this case the person Dhanu who opted to become a human bomb was a woman. Suba who gave moral support to sacrifice her life on the anvil of some ideology and to end up by annihilating others' lives, was also a woman. About the role of A-1 (Nalini), it is not a case where she was caught up in a sudden situation and became a mute comrade, the mind not towing the body. It was indeed the other way round. Facts strongly suggest that her participation was not the result of helplessness but a well-designed action with her free will to make her part of the contribution to the unholy plan and wicked conspiracy, the facts of this case are uncommon. A crime committed on Indian soil against the popular national leader, a former Prime Minister of India, for a political decision taken by him in his capacity as the head of the executive and which met with the approval of Parliament, by persons running political organisation in a foreign country and their agents in concert with some Indians for the reason that it did not suit their political objectives and of their organisation, cannot but be a "rarest of the rare" case. In such a case the part played by A-1 (Nalini) is a candid participation in the crime of conspiracy to assassinate Shri Rajiv Gandhi who was himself a young and popular leader so much loved and respected by his fellow citizens and had been the Prime Minister of India. The conspirators including A-1 (Nalini) had nothing personal against him but he was targeted for the political decision taken by him as the Prime Minister of India. She in spite of being an Indian citizen joined the gang of conspirators and engaged herself in pursuit of common intention to commit the crime only because she was infatuated by the love and affection developed for A-3 (Murugan), and thus played her part in the execution of the conspiracy which resulted in the assassination of Shri Rajiv Gandhi and death of many police officers and innocent citizens including a small girl. For a person like A-1, taking into consideration all the mitigating circumstances, in my view, there is no room for any leniency, kindness and beneficence. On the facts of this case, once A-1 (Nalini) is found to fall in the rarest of the rare case, declining to confirm the death sentence will, in my view, stultify the course of law and justice. The sentence of imprisonment for life is inadequate and there is no alternative but to confirm the death sentence awarded by the Designated Court to A-1 (Nalini). Therefore, with respect I concur with brother Wadhwa, J. in confirming the death sentence of the first appellant A-1 (Nalini) awarded by the Designated Court. (Paras 719, 720, 723 to 725, 727)

In the result I agree with brother Thomas, J. and set aside the conviction of all the appellants recorded by the Designated Court for offences under the TADA Act and also the conviction of A-4 (Shankar @ Koneswaran), A-5 (D. Vijayanandan @ Hari Ayya), A-6 (Sivaruban @ Suresh @ Suresh Kumar @ Ruban), A-7 (S. Kanagasabapathy @ Radhayya), A-8 (A. Chandralekha @ Athirai @ Sonia @ Gauri), A-11 (J. Shanthi), A-12 (S. Vijayan @ Perumal Vijayan Veedu), A-13 (V. Selvaluxmi), A-14 (S. Bhaskaran @ Velayudam), A-15 (S. Shanmugavadivelu @ Thambi Anna), A-17 (M. Suseendran @ Mahesh), A-19 (S. Irumborai @ Duraisingam), A-20 (S. Bhagyanathan), A-21 (S. Padma), A-22 (A. Sundaram), A-23 (K. Dhanasekaran @ Raju @ K. Prakash), A-24 (N. Rajasuriya @ Rangan), A-25 (T. Vigneswaran @ Vicky), A-26 (J. Ranganath) for the offences under Section 120-B read with Section 302 IPC. Their appeals are accordingly allowed. Agreeing with brother Thomas, J. I confirm the conviction of A-1 (Nalini), A-2 (Santhan) and A-3 (Murugan), A-9 (Robert Payas), A-10 (Jayakumar), A-16 (Ravichandran) and A-18 (Arivu) finding them guilty of offences under Section 120-B read with Section 302 IPC. On the facts and in the circumstances, I am also of the same view as expressed by brother

Thomas, J. that it is not a fit case to confirm the death sentence awarded to A-9 (Robert Payas), A-10 (Jayakumar) and A-16 (Ravichandran) and their death sentence is commuted to life imprisonment and their appeals are allowed to this extent. The death sentence awarded to A-1 (Nalini), A-2 (Santhan), A-3 (Murugan) and A-18 (Arivu) is confirmed — the death sentence of A-2 (Santhan), A-3 (Murugan) and A-18 (Arivu) agreeing with Thomas, J. as well as Wadhwa, J. and the death sentence of A-1 (Nalini) agreeing with Wadhwa, J. Their appeals are dismissed and Death Reference is accordingly answered. (Paras 728 to 731). State v. Nalini, (1999) 5 SCC 253: 1999 SCC (Cri) 691: AIR 1999 SC 2640: 1999 Cri LJ 3124.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas[1], D.P. Wadhwa[2] and S.S.M. Quadri[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-1999]

[3684] — Ss. 354(3) and 361 & 360 — Death sentence — Imposition of — "Special reasons" for — Relevant factors in relation to which special reasons to be given — Indication of new legislative policy from Ss. 360 and 361 CrPC, namely, one of reformation and rehabilitation of offenders and not mere deterrence — Penology — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

Death sentence is ordinarily ruled out and can only be imposed for "special reasons", as provided in Section 354(3). There is another provision in the Code which also uses the significant expression "special reason". It is Section 361. Section 361 which is a new provision in the Code makes it mandatory for the court to record "special reasons" for not applying the provisions of Section 360. Section 361 thus casts a duty upon the court to apply the provisions of Section 360 wherever it is possible to do so and to state "special reasons" if it does not do so. In the context of Section 360, the "special reasons" contemplated by Section 361 must be such as to compel the court to hold that it is impossible to reform and rehabilitate the offender after examining the matter with due regard to the age, character and antecedents of the offender and the circumstances in which the offence was committed. This is some indication by the legislature that reformation and rehabilitation of offenders and not mere deterrence, are now among the foremost objects of the administration of criminal justice in our country. (Para 6). Sushil Murmu v. State of Jharkhand, (2004) 2 SCC 338: 2004 SCC (Cri) 529: AIR 2004 SC 394: 2004 Cri LJ 658.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2003]

[3685] — Ss. 354(3) and 361 & 360 — Death sentence — Imposition of — "Special reasons" for — Relevant factors in relation to which special reasons to be given — Indication of new legislative policy from Ss. 360 and 361 CrPC, namely, one of reformation and rehabilitation of offenders and not mere deterrence — Penology — Reformation versus deterrence — New trend in legislative policy

Death sentence is ordinarily ruled out and can only be imposed for "special reasons", as provided in Section 354(3). There is another provision in the Code which also uses the significant expression "special reasons". It is Section 361. Section 361 which is a new provision in the Code makes it mandatory for the court to record "special reasons" for not applying the provisions of Section 360. Section 361 thus casts a duty upon the court to apply the provisions of Section 360 wherever it is possible to do so and to state "special reasons" if it does not do so. In the context of Section 360, the "special reasons" contemplated by Section 361 must be such as to compel the court to hold that it is impossible to reform and rehabilitate the offender after examining the matter with due regard to the age, character and antecedents of the offender and the circumstances in which the offence was committed. This is some indication by the legislature that reformation and rehabilitation of offenders and not mere deterrence, are now among the foremost objects of the administration of criminal justice in our country. (Para 26)

Section 361 and Section 354(3) have both entered the statute-book at the same time and they are part of the emerging picture of acceptance by the legislature of the new trends in criminology. It would not, therefore, be wrong to assume that the personality of the offender as revealed by his age, character, antecedents and other circumstances and the tractability of the offender to reform must necessarily play the most prominent role in determining the sentence to be awarded. Special reasons must have some relation to these factors. Criminal justice deals with complex human problems and diverse human beings. A Judge has to balance the personality of the offender with the circumstances, situations and the reactions and choose the appropriate sentence to be imposed. (Para 26). State of Rajasthan v. Kheraj Ram, (2003) 8 SCC 224: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1979.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-8-2003]

[3686] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Justification for — Held, under the new CrPC normal punishment for murder is imprisonment for life and death penalty is an exception — Only special facts and circumstances will warrant the passing of the death sentence — A just balance has to be struck between the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances before the option is exercised — Historical developments since 1955 traced — CrPC, 1898 — S. 367(5) — CrPC (Amendment) Act, 1955

Section 302 IPC prescribes death or life imprisonment as the penalty for murder. While doing so, the Code instructs the court as to its application. The changes which the Code has undergone in the last three decades clearly indicate that Parliament is taking note of contemporary criminological thought and movement. It is not difficult to discern that in the Code, there is a definite swing towards life imprisonment. Death sentence is ordinarily ruled out and can only be imposed for "special reasons", as provided in Section 354(3) CrPC. (Para 26)

Before the amendment of Section 367(5) of the old Code of 1898, by the Criminal Procedure Code (Amendment) Act, 1955 (26 of 1955) which came into force on 1-1-1956, on a conviction for an offence punishable with death, if the court sentenced the accused to any punishment other than death, the reason why sentence of death was not passed had to be stated in the judgment. After the amendment it is not correct to hold that the normal penalty of imprisonment for life cannot be awarded in the absence of extenuating circumstances which reduce the gravity of the offence. The matter is left, after the amendment, to the discretion of the court. The court must, however, take into account all the circumstances, and state its reasons for whichever of the two sentences it imposes in its discretion. Therefore, the former rule that the normal punishment for murder is death sentence is no longer operative and it is now within the discretion of the court to pass either of the two sentences prescribed in this section; but whichever of the two sentences he passes, the Judge must give his reasons for imposing a particular sentence. The amendment of Section 367(5) of the old Code does not affect the law regulating punishment under IPC. This amendment relates to procedure and now courts are no longer required to elaborate the reasons for not awarding the death penalty; but they cannot depart from sound judicial considerations preferring the lesser punishment. (Para 27)

Section 354(3) of the new Code marks a significant shift in the legislative policy underlying the old Code as in force immediately before 1-4-1974, according to which both the alternative sentences of death or imprisonment for life provided for murder were normal sentences. Now, under Section 354(3) of the new Code the normal punishment for murder is imprisonment for life and death penalty is an exception. The court is required to state the reasons for the sentence awarded and in the case of death sentence "special reasons" are required to be stated, that is to say, only special facts and circumstances will warrant the passing of the death sentence. A balance sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances has to be drawn up and in doing so the mitigating circumstances have to be accorded full weightage and a just balance has to be struck between the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances before the option is exercised. (Paras 28 and 31). State of Rajasthan v. Kheraj Ram, (2003) 8 SCC 224: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1979.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-8-2003]

Ediga Anamma v. State of A.P., (1974) 4 SCC 443: 1974 SCC (Cri) 479; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, relied on

[3687] — S. 354(3) — When not proper — Factors to be considered — If rarest of rare cases — Court must balance the mitigating and aggravating circumstances of the crime — Mental condition of accused — Dispute over a small house between two neighbours resulting in murder of seven persons — Murder premeditated and in a well-thought-out manner — Accused under extreme mental disturbance caused by constant harassment of his family members by the deceased party who were rich and influential — Despite repeated written prayer accused not getting protection from authorities concerned — Accused a disciplined member of paramilitary force, aged 23, having no criminal antecedents — Held, in the circumstances of the case, case does not fall within the category of 'rarest of rare' cases

It is true that the court must respond to the cry of the society and to settle what would be a deterrent punishment for an abominable crime. It is equally true that a large number of criminals go unpunished thereby increasing criminals in the society and law losing its deterrent effect. It is also true that the exaggerated adherence to and insistence upon the establishment of proof beyond every reasonable doubt, by the prosecution, ignoring the ground realities, the fact situation and the peculiar circumstances of a given case often results in miscarriage of justice and makes the justice delivery system a suspect; in the ultimate analysis, the society suffers and a criminal gets encouraged. Sometimes it is stated that only rights of the criminals are kept in mind, the victims are forgotten. Despite this it should be kept in mind that while imposing the rarest of rare punishment, i.e., death penalty, the court must balance the mitigating and aggravating circumstances of the crime and it would depend upon particular and peculiar facts and circumstances of each case.

In the present case, from the applications to the authorities concerned it appears that the accused was all throughout feeling that he and his family members were humiliated by the other party who were rich and influential and who were intending to grab the plot/ghar belonging to them. For a period of more than three months the appellant was requesting the authorities to take action so that he and his family members could live in peace. It was his allegation that the SHO of the police station was conniving with the other side and had demanded five thousand rupees as a ransom which their family members were unable to pay, therefore, no action was taken against the other party.

Even though this is a gruesome act on the part of the appellant, yet it is a result of the human mind going astray because of constant harassment of the family members of the appellant. It could be termed as a case of retribution or act of taking revenge. No doubt, it would not be a justifiable act at all, but the accused was feeling morally justifiable on his part. Hence, it would be difficult to term it as the "rarest of the rare" cases. Further, this was not a crime committed because of lust for wealth or women, that is to say, murders were neither for money such as extortion, dacoity or robbery, nor even for lust and rape; it was not an act of anti-social element kidnapping and trafficking in minor girls or of an anti-social element dealing in dangerous drugs which affects the entire moral fibre of the society and kills a number of persons; nor was it a crime committed for power or political ambitions or part of organised criminal activities. It was a crime committed by the accused who had a cause to feel aggrieved by the injustice meted out to his family members at the hands of the family of the other party who according to him were strong enough physically as well as economically and having influence with the authority which was required to protect him and his family. The bitterness increased to a boiling point and because of the agony suffered by him and his family members at the hands of the other party and for not getting protection from the police officers concerned or total inaction despite repeated written prayers goaded or compelled the accused to take the law in his own hands which culminated in the gruesome murders; maybe that his mind got derailed off the track and went astray or beyond control because of extreme mental disturbances caused by the constant harassment and disputes. Further considering the facts and circumstances, it cannot be said that he would be a menace to the society; there is no reason to believe that he cannot be reformed or rehabilitated and that he is likely to continue criminal acts of violence as would constitute a continuing threat to the society. He was working in BSF as a disciplined member of the armed forces aged about 23 at the relevant time, having no criminal antecedents.

Therefore, this case cannot be treated as one of the rarest of rare cases where lesser sentence of imprisonment of life would not at all be adequate. Om Prakash v. State of Haryana, (1999) 3 SCC 19: 1999 SCC (Cri) 334: AIR 1999 SC 1332: 1999 Cri LJ 2044.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-2-1999]

State of M.P. v. Shyamsunder Trivedi, (1995) 4 SCC 262, 273: 1995 SCC (Cri) 715; Shankar v. State of T.N., (1994) 4 SCC 478, para 50: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1252; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580, relied on

[3688] — S. 354(3) — Sentence — Choice of sentence, death or life imprisonment — Court's discretion — Capital punishment justified only in rarest of rare cases

Section 302 of the Indian Penal Code authorises the court to punish the offender of murder with death or imprisonment for life — the statute therefore has provided a discretion to the court to sentence the offender either with death or with imprisonment for life: obviously, a serious decision and a heavy burden imposed on the court. This discretion conferred, however, shall have to be thus exercised in a manner and in consonance with the concept of law so as to subserve the ends of justice. The award of death sentence though within the ambit of jurisdiction of the courts, does not clothe the courts to exercise the same in a manner indiscriminate. It is only in the rarest of the rare cases that this discretion as regards capital punishment ought to be exercised. Ours is a civilised society — a tooth for a tooth and an eye for an eye ought not to be the criterion; civilisation and the due process of law coupled with social order ought not to permit the courts to be hasty in regard to the award of capital punishment and as a matter of fact the courts ought to be rather slow in that direction. (Para 12). Jai Kumar v. State of M.P., (1999) 5 SCC 1: 1999 SCC (Cri) 638: AIR 1999 SC 1860.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and M. Srinivasan and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-1999]

[3689] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Special reasons — Factors to be considered for deciding whether death sentence would be proper — Per Sinha, J although death penalty is not abolished in India, growing demand in international fora for abolition of death sentence should be taken into account — Court should exercise its jurisdiction to award death sentence only in the rarest of the rare case — No fixed criteria or incidences can be laid down for determining the rarest of the rare case — Doctrine of proportionality not applicable — Where conviction is solely based on circumstantial evidence, while imposing death sentence which is unique in its irrevocability, it should be borne in mind that circumstantial evidence cannot be presumed to be full proof of the incidences — Nature of crime is also an important factor which has two pointers viz. was it a case of diabolical murder and was there any planning preceding commission of murder; if answer is in the negative, death sentence would not be warranted — However, character of the criminal is immaterial at the sentencing stage — Fact that accused made a confession accepting at least a part of the offence at the stage of hearing before High Court under S. 235(3) CrPC can be considered as a factor against death sentence — Long custody of accused also to be considered as a mitigating factor — Appellant-accused gained confidence of deceased who had large properties and assets and after deceased started depending on him for looking after her property matters, she brought him in her house where they were married — Deceased executed a will and a power of attorney in favour of accused and opened several bank accounts and lockers in joint names — Accused thereafter murdered her after administering some drugs, put the dead body in wooden box and buried it at the backyard of the house — Held, murder of wife for usurping her properties may be a rare case but it is not a rarest of the rare case — Normally in cases where murder committed of a large number of persons or by more than one person in a brutal and systematic manner, death sentence is upheld — In this case death sentence not warranted, having regard to facts and circumstances of the case — Per Katju, J., despite growing demand in international fora, death sentence in India has not been abolished as indicated in Arts. 72(1)(c) and 72(3) of the Constitution and Court has no power to abolish the same — There is no such absolute rule that where conviction is based on circumstantial evidence, death sentence cannot be awarded — Nor is there any such principle that merely because of long lapse of time between commission of murder and final conviction by court, death sentence cannot be imposed — On facts and circumstances of the case, held, appellant-accused who was in a dominating position or position of trust committed murder of the woman for gains in a cold-blooded, calculated, diabolical, depraved, malevolent and most condemnable manner, taking advantage of the lady's innocence — It fell within first, second and fifth illustrations given in Machhi Singh case for "the rarest of the rare" case — Hence death sentence is warranted — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 201 — Constitution of India, Arts. 72(i)(c) and 72(3)

Per Sinha, J.

Abolition of death penalty is not being and, in fact, cannot be advocated, but what requires serious consideration is as to whether the jurisdiction should not be invoked unless there exists an extraordinary situation to find that it comes within the purview of "the rarest of rare" cases. The approach of the courts should not be to confine its thought process to the identification of a "rare" case. The expression "the rarest of rare" cases demands a meaningful application. (Para 50)

There is a growing demand in the international fora and in particular the second Optional Protocol to the International Covenants on Civil and Political Rights and the Protocol to the American Constitution on Human Rights that death penalty should be abolished. Reference to the decision of other jurisdictions and/or the recent trend in the international fora has not been made by way of precedents or even a persuasive value but the court in this age cannot afford to put down blinkers on its window to the outside world. (Paras 48 and 67)

The doctrine of proportionality which is often referred to in the judicial pronouncements in regard to the sentencing policy required to be judicially adopted should not apply in a case of imposition of capital punishment. Precedent should not be contrary to parliamentary law; far less the decision of a Constitution Bench of the Supreme Court. (Para 81)

However, cases where death penalty is upheld are those where murder was committed of a large number of persons or by more than one person in a brutal or systematic manner. (Para 79)

It has been a fundamental point in numerous studies in the field of death penalty jurisprudence that cases, where the sole basis of conviction is circumstantial evidence, have far greater chances of turning out to be wrongful convictions, later on, in comparison to ones which are based on fitter sources of proof. Convictions based on seemingly conclusive circumstantial evidence should not be presumed as foolproof incidences and the fact that the same are based on circumstantial evidence must be a definite factor at the sentencing stage deliberations, considering that capital punishment is unique in its total irrevocability. Any characteristic of trial, such as conviction solely resting on circumstantial evidence, which contributes to the uncertainty in the culpability calculus, must attract negative attention while deciding maximum penalty for murder. However, no universal rule is meant to be laid down. There may be cases and cases where even on circumstantial evidence a death penalty may be imposed. (Paras 87 and 84)

Another aspects which needs to be considered is that sentencing should involve analysis about the nature of crime. In this context, the effect of two pointers relating to the nature of crime should be considered. Firstly, the case does not seem to be an instance of what is called a diabolical murder. Second point relates to planning which went into committing the murder. It is agreed that the accused deliberately came close to the beautiful and wealthy lady. He must have had his intentions and calculations in that regard. To that extent intention behind the marriage can be imputed. But to infer from that that the murder was a pre-planned murder will be going a bit too far as he did not know the opportune date when the servants would be leaving the house. Without their leaving the place, the plan, if there was any, could not have been executed. This is one weak link in the hypothesis that the murder was meticulously planned. (Paras 92 and 93)

Question is whether this instance can be categorised as a "rarest of rare" murder. The question is whether murder of wife for the purpose of usurping property is a rarest of rare crime statistically. It is not to say that rarest of rare doctrine only has a statistical dimension i.e. incidence of particular type of murder in a given sample; rarest of rare benchmark can also be used in the context of other parameters such as brutality, planning, society's reaction et al. It cannot be conclusively said that murder of wife for usurping property is a particularly rarest of rare incident. It could, of course, be a rare incident. (Para 95)

In criminal cases character of the accused is immaterial by the mandate of Sections 53 and 54 of the Evidence Act. The same should not factor in the discussions at the sentencing stage. If that be so, bad character of the accused by itself should not be a determinative factor. (Para 96)

The stage of hearing an accused under Section 235(2) CrPC is after the judgment of conviction is pronounced and not prior thereto. The appellant herein made a confession before the High Court. The High Court took the same into consideration in the main judgment which could not be done. He had been brought before the High Court only for purpose of fulfilling the requirement of Section 235(2). His statement was taken during midst of hearing. He knew the implications thereof. Despite the same, he made a categorical statement that he was responsible for burying the dead body. He gave an explanation, which might not have found favour with the High Court, but the fact that he had made a confession at least accepting a part of the offence could not have been ignored at least for the purpose of imposition of punishment. He is more than 64 years' old. He is in custody for a period of 16 years. The death sentence was awarded to him by the trial court in terms of its judgment dated 20-5-2005. In a situation of this nature, imposition of a life imprisonment for commission of the crime under Section 302 shall serve the ends of justice. (Para 97)

However, while saying so, it is directed that in a case of this nature "life sentence" must be meant to be "life sentence". Such a direction can be given, as would appear from some precedents. (Para 98)

Per Katju, J.

No doubt there has been a growing demand in the international fora that the death penalty should be abolished. However, in India the death penalty cannot be abolished by a judicial verdict as death sentence is contemplated by the Constitution and IPC. Article 72(1)(c) of the Constitution specifically mentions that the President of India has the power to grant pardons, reprieves or suspension of any death sentence. Similarly Article 72(3) also contemplates the power in the Governor of the State to suspend, remit or commute a death sentence. Hence if it is held that the courts have no power to impose a death sentence the Court will really be amending the Constitution by a judicial verdict. Again, if it is held that the courts have no power to impose death sentence merely because the death sentence has been abolished in some foreign countries in Europe or because there is a demand in the international fora that death sentence should be abolished, the Court will be really amending the Constitution by a judicial verdict. Moreover, what has happened in foreign countries cannot be automatically applied to our country where the situation is different. (Para 108)

The Court has no power to amend the Constitution by a judicial verdict. The Constitution can only be amended by Parliament in the manner prescribed by Article 368 of the Constitution. The Supreme Court cannot arrogate to itself the power of Parliament under the Constitution and must maintain self-restraint. No doubt Parliament can abolish the death sentence by deleting it as one of the punishments prescribed in IPC or other statutes, but the Supreme Court cannot do so. The Court cannot legislate or amend the law. There is broad separation of powers under the Constitution and the Supreme Court must not ordinarily encroach into the legislative or executive domain. (Paras 108 and 109)

There cannot be an absolute principle of law that merely because there has been a long lapse of time from the commission of the offence and the final conviction and sentence by the Supreme Court the death penalty can never be imposed. It all depends on the facts of each case. It is well known that now a days a long interval of time frequently occurs between the commission of the offence and the final conviction by the Supreme Court (because of the delays in the trial, appeals, etc.), and hence if the Court lays down any absolute principle of law that merely because of this long interval death penalty cannot be imposed then in all such cases merely because of lapse of time death penalty cannot be imposed even though the murder was cold-blooded, diabolical and heinous. This again would be amending the Constitution by a judicial verdict. Moreover this would give encouragement to the accused and their lawyers to delay proceedings in court (by unnecessary adjournments, interlocutory applications, etc.) to avoid the death penalty. Therefore, it is not possible to agree with the view that merely because a long lapse of time has occurred between the commission of the offence and the final decision of the Supreme Court death penalty cannot be imposed. (Para 111)

The observations in para 173 of Aloke Nath Dutta case that in cases of circumstantial evidence ordinarily the death penalty should not be awarded cannot also be accepted. No such absolute proposition of the law can be laid down. It all depends on the facts of each case. Criminals have been hanged even on the basis of circumstantial evidence. There is no principle of law that only direct evidence is strong and reliable while circumstantial evidence is weak and unreliable. Circumstantial evidence can be as strong and reliable as direct evidence, but the only requirement is that the prosecution must establish beyond reasonable doubt that there is a chain of links which connects the accused with the crime. Both kinds of evidence can be strong in a given situation. (Paras 112 and 125)

A murder diabolically conceived and cruelly executed would justify the imposition of the death penalty on the murderer. (Para 106)

The facts of the present case clearly show the diabolical, cold-blooded, evil mind of the appellant who has acted in a most depraved, malevolent and condemnable manner, taking advantage of a lady's innocence. (Paras 113 and 128)

The accused is cold-blooded, a scallywag and a rascal who had no proper qualification or profession. Such diabolical and cunning rogues are to be found in abundance nowadays. It is the total commercialisation of society which is responsible for this recent phenomenon. People have become greedy and wish to amass wealth by short cuts, even by committing heinous crimes. The appellant had changed his name and had become a "Swamy". The accused pretended to be a very simple and innocent person and this made the deceased start depending on him, particularly for looking after her property matters. The deceased brought the accused to her house in Bangalore where the deceased married him and thereafter he determined to grab all her property after killing her. During this period the deceased is alleged to have executed a will and a general power of attorney in favour of the accused, and a large number of bank accounts in different banks were opened in joint names of the accused and the deceased. The bank lockers were also in the joint names. They started a private firm of which they were the only shareholders. All these facts establish the strong motive of the accused who wanted to grab the property of the deceased. (Paras 130 and 125)

The argument that there was no reason for the appellant to murder the deceased since the deceased had executed a will in his favour is not tenable because it is well settled that a will comes into operation only on the death of the testator. The deceased was only in her forties, and her natural death may have occurred several decades later. The appellant was obviously not willing to wait for so long before he could grab her property and hence he decided to murder her. No doubt no poisonous substance was detected in the skeleton of the deceased and hence the prosecution case that the accused mixed poison in her tea could not be firmly established. However, even if the exact method of murder has not been established by the prosecution, there is no manner of doubt that it was the appellant who murdered the deceased. (Para 129)

The accused is an unmitigated and diabolical rogue who could go to any extent, including murder, to achieve his object of grabbing huge amount of property of the deceased. He was in a dominating position over the deceased who had become dependent on him, and he took full advantage of this situation. He had motive and opportunity for committing this ghastly crime. (Para 130)

In Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab (vide paras 33 to 37) a three-Judge Bench of the Supreme Court gave certain illustrations of murders which fall within the category of "the rarest of rare cases" and hence deserve death penalty: (SCC pp. 488-89). The first, second and fifth illustrations were as follows:

(i) When the murder is committed in an extremely brutal, grotesque, diabolical, revolting or dastardly manner so as to arouse intense and extreme indignation of the community.

(ii) When the murder is committed for a motive which evinces total depravity and meanness; e.g. murder by hired assassin for money or reward; or cold-blooded murder for gains of a person vis-à-vis whom the murderer is in a dominating position or in a position of trust; or murder is committed in the course of betrayal of the motherland.

(v) When the victim of murder is an innocent child, or a helpless woman or old or infirm person or a person vis-à-vis whom the murderer is in a dominating position, or a public figure generally loved and respected by the community.

The facts of the present case clearly fall within the principle of the first, second and fifth category mentioned above and thus this case falls within the category of the rarest of rare cases. It is a case of a pre-planned and cold-blooded murder diabolically conceived and cruelly executed. (Para 110)

As this case clearly comes within the category of the rarest of rare cases, there will be gross travesty of justice if the death sentence is not affirmed. (Paras 131 and 132). Swamy Shraddananda v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 12 SCC 288: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 322: AIR 2007 SC 2531.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha[1] and Markandey Katju[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 18-5-2007]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1982) 3 SCC 24: 1982 SCC (Cri) 535; Queen v. Julie McGinley and Michael Monaghan, 2003 NICC 1; Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 1; Acharaparambath Pradeepan v. State of Kerala, (2006) 13 SCC 643; Bishnu Prasad Sinha v. State of Assam, (2007) 11 SCC 467; Amrit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 12 SCC 79: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 397: 2006; Sahdeo v. State of U.P., (2004) 10 SCC 682: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1873; Raju v. State of Haryana, (2001) 9 SCC 50: 2002 SCC (Cri) 408; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580 ; Simon v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 2 SCC 694: 2004 SCC (Cri) 646; Kashmir Singh v. State of H.P., 1990 Supp SCC 133: 1990 SCC (Cri) 535; Subash Chander v. Krishan Lal, (2001) 4 SCC 458: 2001 SCC (Cri) 735; Anup Singh v. State of Bihar, (2002) 6 SCC 686: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1466; Prakash Dhawal Khairnar (Patil) v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 2 SCC 35: 2002 SCC (Cri) 281; Shri Bhagwan v. State of Rajasthan, (2001) 6 SCC 296: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1095; Mohd. Munna v. Union of India, (2005) 7 SCC 417: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1688; Indian Drugs & Pharmaceuticals Ltd. v. Workmen, (2007) 1 SCC 408: (2007) 1 SCC (L&S) 270; Holiram Bordoloi v. State of Assam, (2005) 3 SCC 793: 2005 SCC (Cri) 915, relied on

Aloke Nath Dutta v. State of W.B., (2007) 12 SCC 230, dissented from

Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, applied

[Ed.: In view of the difference of opinion on award of death sentence, matter referred to larger Bench.]

[3690] — S. 354(3) — Death penalty or life imprisonment — Difference between the nature of, pointed out — Objects which incarceration serves, restated. Santosh Kumar Satishbhushan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2009]

[3691] — Ss. 354(3) and 235(2) — Death penalty or life imprisonment — Rarest of rare doctrine enunciated by Constitution Bench in Bachan Singh case, (1980) 2 SCC 684 — Courts bound by held, trial Court, High Court and even Supreme Court are duty bound to follow it. Santosh Kumar Satishbhushan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2009]

[3692] — Ss. 354(3) and 235(2) — Death penalty or life imprisonment — Global trend — Global move away from death penalty noticed — Number of countries abolishing or not enforcing and number of those retaining death penalty mentioned

One has to observe the global move away from the death penalty. Latest statistics show that 138 nations have now abolished the death penalty in either law or practice (no executions for 10 years). (Para 111)

Further, on 18-12-2007, the UN General Assembly adopted Resolution 62/149 calling upon countries that retain the death penalty to establish a worldwide moratorium on executions with a view to abolishing the death penalty. India is, however, one of the 59 nations that retain the death penalty. (Para 112). Santosh Kumar Satishbhushan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2009]

[3693] — Ss. 354(3) and 235(2) — Sentencing — Death penalty or life imprisonment — Prosecution case based exclusively on the basis of evidence of approver — Accused contradicting the prosecution — Manner of application of prudence doctrine in such a case at the stage of sentencing — At sentencing stage, court although cannot evaluate the evidence and has to depend on the findings arrived at for recording judgment of conviction, held, it has to keep in view the evidence brought on record on behalf of the accused for imposition of a lesser punishment. Santosh Kumar Satishbhushan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2009]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Reyes v. R., (2002) 2 AC 235: (2002) 2 WLR 1034: 2002 UKPC 11: 12 BHRC 219 (PC); Swamy Shraddananda (1) v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 12 SCC 288: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 322; Kennedy v. Louisiana, 128 S Ct 2641, relied on

Dhananjoy Chatterjee v. State of W.B., (1994) 2 SCC 220: 1994 SCC (Cri) 358; Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767, considered

Mohan v. State of T.N., (1998) 5 SCC 336: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1308, distinguished

Ravindra Trimbak Chouthmal v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 4 SCC 148: 1996 SCC (Cri) 608, followed

Law Commission Report of 1967, cited

Roger Hood: The Death Penalty: A Worldwide Perspective, Oxford, Clarendon Press, 3rd Edn., 2002, p. 230, referred to

[3694] — Ss. 354(3) and 235(2) — Sentencing — Punishment for murder — Death penalty or life imprisonment — Value of precedents in determining — Constitution Bench view in Bachan Singh case, (1980) 2 SCC 684 — Held, while barring one-time enunciation of minute guidelines through judicial verdict, Bachan Singh did not bar organic evolution of set of principles on sentencing through judicial pronouncements

Principled application of the rarest of rare dictum does not come in the way of individualised sentencing. With necessary room for sentencing, consistency has to be achieved in the manner in which the rarest of rare dictum has to be applied by courts. Bachan Singh expressly barred one-time enunciation of minute guidelines through a judicial verdict. But at the same time, it actively relied on judicial precedent in disciplining sentencing discretion to repel the argument of arbitrariness and Article 14 challenge. An embargo on introduction of judicial guidelines was put therein but organic evolution of set of principles on sentencing through judicial pronouncements was not ruled out. Sentencing discretion is also a kind of discretion and it shall be exercised judicially in the light of the precedents. (Paras 90 to 92)

The Bachan Singh threshold of "the rarest of rare cases" has been most variedly and inconsistently applied by the various High Courts as also the Supreme Court. This extremely uneven application of Bachan Singh has given rise to a state of uncertainty in capital sentencing law which clearly falls foul of constitutional due process and equality principle. The situation is unviable as legal discretion which is conferred on the executive or the judiciary is only sustainable in law if there is any indication, either through law or precedent, as to the scope of the discretion and the manner of its exercise. There should also be sufficient clarity having regard to the legitimate aim of the measure in question. The Constitution provides for safeguards to give the individual adequate protection against arbitrary imposition of criminal punishment. (Paras 104, 109 and 110). Santosh Kumar Satishbhushan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-5-2009]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580, explained and reiterated

Jagmohan Singh v. State of U.P., (1973) 1 SCC 20: 1973 SCC (Cri) 169, relied on

Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 1; Prajeet Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (2008) 4 SCC 434: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 416; Mohan Anna Chavan v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 7 SCC 561: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 193; Bantu v. State of U.P., (2008) 11 SCC 113: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 353; Shivaji v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 15 SCC 269; State of U.P. v. Sattan, (2009) 4 SCC 736; Ujjagar Singh v. State of Punjab, (2007) 13 SCC 90: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 272; Amrit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 12 SCC 79: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 397; Bishnu Prasad Sinha v. State of Assam, (2007) 11 SCC 467: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 766: (2007) 2 Scale 42; State of Maharashtra v. Prakash Sakha Vasave, (2009) 11 SCC 193: (2009) 1 Scale 713; Aloke Nath Dutta v. State of W.B., (2007) 12 SCC 230: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 264; Swamy Shraddananda (1) v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 12 SCC 288: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 322; Swamy Shraddananda (2) v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 13 SCC 767, referred to

Journal of the Indian Law Institute, 1979; Lethal Lottery: The Death Penalty in India, A Study of Supreme Court Judgments in Death Penalty Cases, 1950-2006, compiled jointly by Amnesty International India and People's Union for Civil Liberties, referred to

[Ed.: It would seem that the observation requiring that "legal discretion" conferred on the judiciary is "only sustainable in law if there is any indication, either through law or precedent, as to the scope of the discretion and the manner of its exercise", has been made only in the context of specific conferral of discretion by a statute, and would be limited to such a context. This observation if interpreted more broadly it would seem would run afoul of the doctrine of separation of powers and independence of the judiciary, both of which are parts of the basic structure of the Constitution. Moreover, the said observation if interpreted broadly would also not be consistent with the powers conferred on the Supreme Court and High Courts under Arts. 32, 136, 142 and 226, quite apart from their inherent powers as Courts of Record.]

[3695] — S. 354(3) — Review of death sentence — Per Thomas J., (Quadri, J., contra) when one of the Judges comprising a three-Judge Bench of the Court does not award death sentence to a convict and instead awards sentence of life imprisonment, it should not be treated as a rarest of the rare cases and it should be a proper ground to review the sentence of death awarded by the majority Judges — Constitution of India, Arts. 137 and 21 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 — Supreme Court Rules, 1966, Or. 40 R. 1

Per Thomas, J.

It would be a sound proposition to make a precedent that when one of the three Judges constituting the Bench refrains from awarding death penalty to an accused on stated reasons in preference to the sentence of life imprisonment that fact can be regarded sufficient to treat the case as not falling within the narrowed ambit of "rarest of rare cases when the alternative option is unquestionably foreclosed" and where a Bench of three Judges delivered judgment in which the opinion of at least one Judge is in favour of preferring imprisonment for life to death penalty as for any particular accused. It would be a proper premise for the Bench to review the order of sentence of death in respect of that accused. Such an approach is consistent with Article 21 of the Constitution as it helps saving a human life from the gallows and at the same time putting the guilty accused behind the bars for life. (Para 18)

However, the reasoning is not to be understood as a suggestion that a minority opinion in the judgment can supersede the majority view therein. In the realm of making a choice between life imprisonment and death penalty the above consideration is germane when the scope for awarding death penalty has now shrunk to the narrowest circle and that too only when the alternative option is "unquestionably foreclosed". In a special situation where one of the three deciding Judges held the view that sentence of life imprisonment is sufficient to meet the ends of justice it is a very relevant consideration for the court to finally pronounce that the prisoner can be saved from death as the lesser option is not "unquestionably foreclosed" in respect of that prisoner. (Para 19)

Per Quadri, J. (dissenting)

By the process of interpretation Rule 1 of Or. XL cannot be stretched to embrace the premise indicated by my learned brother as a ground for review. That apart there are two difficulties in the way. The first is that the acceptance of the said proposition would result in equating the opinion of the majority to a ground analogous to "an error apparent on the face of the record" and secondly in a Bench of three Judges or of greater strength if a learned Judge is not inclined to confirm the death sentence imposed on a convict, the majority will be precluded from confirming the death sentence as that per se would become open to review. (Para 22). Suthendraraja v. State, (1999) 9 SCC 323: 2000 SCC (C ri) 463: AIR 1999 SC 3700.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: K.T. Thomas[2], D.P. Wadhwa[1] and S.S.M. Quadri[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 8-10-1999]

[3696] — S. 354(3) — Constitutionality of the discretionary power in courts to award death sentence or life imprisonment — Criteria and considerations for the award of death sentence — Regard to latest trends world over in this area — Effect of changes made by new S. 354(3), Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 and the earlier change in S. 367, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 — The "special reasons" necessary for award of death sentence in the light of fundamental rights in Arts. 14, 19 and 21 — Exceptional situations where death sentence may still be justified, pointed out — Procedure for awarding sentence in accordance with S. 235(2), Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 elaborated upon — Stress on the criminal and not his crimes — Fact that the appellants were not a public menace but were activated by overpowering feelings against the victims only, held, relevant — Number of deaths caused, in the totality of facts, held, not decisive — Constitution of India — Article 136 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302. Rajendra Prasad v. State of U.P., (1979) 3 SCC 646: 1979 SCC (Cri) 749: AIR 1979 SC 916: 1979 Cri LJ 792.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer[1], D.A. Desai[1] and A.P. Sen[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 9-2-1979]

See also (1979) 3 SCC 714: 1979 SCC (Cri) 817; (1979) 3 SCC 727: 1979 SCC (Cri) 830 and (1979) 3 SCC 745: 1979 SCC (Cri) 848

See comment at (1980) 2 SCC 684, 749

[3697] — S. 354(3) — Circumstantial evidence — Circumstances establishing guilt of the accused — Kidnapping and murder of three persons — Direct evidence establishing kidnapping of the victims by the two appellants and six others — Evidence further establishing that while kidnapping the accused were armed with deadly weapons and both the appellants had given threats to the witnesses — Absence of direct evidence of murder — Medical evidence showing that death of the victims took place shortly after their kidnapping leading to an inference that the kidnappers killed them — But in absence of any evidence to show that any of the appellants had himself killed any of the victims they are liable to be convicted under Ss. 302/34 and not S. 302 simpliciter — However in view of absence of any evidence as regards motive and as regards the accused who actually caused their deaths and the manner and circumstances in which they were caused death sentence could not be imposed — Circumstantial Evidence, Ss. 302/34 and 364. Gurnam Singh v. State of Punjab, (1998) 7 SCC 722: AIR 1998 SC 2673: 1998 Cri LJ 4024.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-7-1998]

[3698] — S. 354(3) — Alteration of death sentence to imprisonment for life — Relevant factor — Long lapse of time — Murder case — Incident took place in 1991 (about 13 years ago) — Held, since there was a long lapse of time, sentence of death imposed upon accused by Sessions Court was not justified in the circumstances — Hence, altered to imprisonment for life — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 (Para 39). State of M.P. v. Paltan Mallah, (2005) 3 SCC 169: 2005 SCC (Cri) 674: AIR 2005 SC 733: 2005 Cri LJ 918.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 20-1-2005]

[3699] — S. 354(3) — Award of death sentence to appellant — Held on facts justified — Cold-blooded murder case — Presence of several aggravating circumstances — No mitigating circumstance — Offence committed in pre-planned manner in broad daylight — Two victims (including a boy, aged six years) burnt to death by locking the house from outside — Third victim cut into pieces — Offence committed in most barbaric manner to deter others from challenging the supremacy of the appellant in the village — Absence of any strong motive — Victims did not provoke or contribute to the incident — Appellant was leading the gang — He had no repentance for the ghastly act he committed — The entire incident shocked the collective conscience of the community — Held, there was no mitigating circumstance to refrain from imposing death penalty — Hence, death sentence upheld — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 r/w S. 149

On the date of the incident in question, the deceased N was present at his house along with his wife, three children and brother PW 2. The appellant and the other accused persons, who were armed with "lathi", "dao", "jathi", "jong" and various other weapons, came to the house of N and started pelting stones on the bamboo wall of the said house. Thereafter, they closed the door from outside and set the house on fire. PW 2, ND (son of N), C (daughter of N) and PW 1 (wife of N) managed to come out from the house. But, when NY, the other son of N, came out from the house, the appellant and another accused caught hold of him and threw him into the fire again. N and NY were completely burnt and died on the spot. Thereafter NG, the elder brother of N who was staying in another house at some distance from the house of N, was caught and dragged to the courtyard of the appellant, where the appellant cut him into pieces.

During trial, N's wife (PW 1), his brother (PW 2), daughter C and son ND were examined as prosecution witnesses. Another important witness examined was PW 5 (wife of NG). The trial court convicted the appellant and awarded capital punishment. The High Court confirmed the findings of the trial court. Hence, the present appeal by the accused.

The Supreme Court had to determine the propriety of conviction and sentence imposed on the appellant by the courts below.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

On question relating to imposition of capital punishment

In the present case the aggravating circumstances against the accused are that: (a) this is a case of cold-blooded murder; (b) the accused was leading the gang; (c) the victims did not provoke or contribute to the incident; (d) two victims were burnt to death by locking the house from outside; (e) one of the victims was a young boy, aged about 6 years, who, somehow, managed to come out of the burning house, but he was mercilessly thrown back into the fire by the appellant; (f) the appellant dragged NG to his house and then cut him into pieces in broad daylight in the presence of bystanders; (g) the entire incident took place in broad daylight and the crime was committed in the most barbaric manner to deter others from challenging the supremacy of the appellant in the village; (h) the entire incident was pre-planned by the accused-appellant. (Para 15)

In the case on hand, there is nothing to show that there was repentance by the accused at any point of time or an explanation for the occurrence. Even when questioned under Section 235(2) CrPC, the accused stated that he had nothing to say on the point of sentence. The fact that the appellant remained silent would show that he has no repentance for the ghastly act he committed. The appellant was in service and he should have been a model to the society as very few people from his community get opportunity to work in government service. But the appellant, instead of setting an example to others, organised a gang and instigated them to join his heinous activities. There was no spark of any kindness or compassion and his mind was brutal and the entire incident would have certainly shocked the collective conscience of the community. There is no mitigating circumstance to refrain from imposing the death penalty on the appellant. (Para 18). Holiram Bordoloi v. State of Assam, (2005) 3 SCC 793: AIR 2005 SC 2059: 2005 Cri LJ 2174.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-4-2005]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580, relied on

Ashok Kumar Pandey v. State of Delhi, (2002) 4 SCC 76: 2002 SCC (Cri) 728; Ram Pal v. State of U.P., (2003) 7 SCC 141: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1595; Ram Anup Singh v. State of Bihar, (2002) 6 SCC 686: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1466, considered and distinguished on facts

[3700] — S. 354(3) — Dowry death — Sentence — Held, dowry death does not fall within the category of "rarest of rare" cases — Case of a murder most foul — Head of the deceased severed and her body cut into nine pieces for causing disappearance of the evidence relating to her murder — Sentence of death commuted to RI for life imprisonment — But in view of loathsome, revolting and dreaded device to cause disappearance of dead body maximum sentence of 7 years' RI for offence under Ss. 201/34 maintained and directed to run consecutively, and not concurrently, after the sentence of life imprisonment had run its course — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 304-B/34, 302/120-B, 201/34, 498-A/34 and 316

The present case cannot be placed in that category which could be regarded as the "rarest of the rare" type. This is so because dowry death has ceased to belong to that species of killing. The increasing number of dowry deaths would bear this.

But it is a fit case where, for the offence under Sections 201/34, the sentence awarded, which is RI for seven years being the maximum for a case of the present type, should be sustained, in view of what had been done to cause disappearance of the evidence relating to the commission of murder — the atrocious way in which the head was severed and the body was cut into nine pieces. These cry for maximum sentence under Sections 201/34. Not only this, the sentence has to run consecutively, and not concurrently. To show the courts strong disapproval of the loathsome, revolting and dreaded device adopted to cause disappearance of the dead body. Ravindra Trimbak Chouthmal v. State of Maharashtra, (1996) 4 SCC 148.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-2-1996]

[3701] — S. 354(3) — Rape and murder — Sentence — Death sentence justified — Rarest of rare cases — Jail officer sending to his quarter a guard and a prisoner to work in the house and in the garden attached thereto, respectively — 16-year-old daughter of the said officer was at that time alone in the quarter and was preparing for her Class 10th examination — Taking advantage of her loneliness, both the guard and the prisoner committing rape on her, strangulating and then stabbing her, removing her cycle and throwing her dead body in septic tank — In such circumstances sentence of death, held, was the only proper punishment — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 376(2)(g), 302/34 and 201 (Para 36). Molai v. State of M.P., (1999) 9 SCC 581: AIR 2000 SC 177.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S.P. Kurdukar, K.T. Thomas and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-10-1999]

State of M.P. v. Molai, 1999 Cri LJ 2698 (MP), affirmed

[3702] — S. 354(3) — Dacoity with murder — Death sentence — When not justified — Trial court holding the appellant individually responsible for the death of only one of the two deceased persons — High Court wrongly proceeding on the basis that the trial court held the appellant individually responsible for killing two innocent persons — Judgment of the High Court to that extent vitiated — Finding of the trial court that the appellant was leader of the dacoits not supported by evidence on record — Held, in the circumstances of the case, courts below not justified in differentiating the case of the appellant from that of other accused — Death sentence reduced to imprisonment for life — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 396 and 302 (Para 5). Jagdish Yadav v. State of Bihar, (1999) 9 SCC 99: 1999 SCC (Cri) 464.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-1-1999]

[3703] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — If justified on facts — Gruesome murder — Deliberately planned and meticulously executed — Accused killing his two innocent children, wife and brother-in-law when they were sleeping at night — He acted in most cruel and inhuman manner — There was no remorse for such gruesome act — On the contrary, he was satisfied with what he had done — On facts, death sentence imposed by the trial court, held, was justified

The factual matrix as described by the prosecution and established by the evidence on record shows the cruel and diabolic manner in which the killings were conceived and executed. The accused did not act on any spur-of-the-moment provocation. It was deliberately planned and meticulously executed. There was not even any remorse for such gruesome act. On the contrary, after the killings the accused tried to divert attention and used PW 9 as the cat's paw. He went on taking diversive tactics to suit his purpose. The calmness with which he smoked "chilam" was an indication of the fact that the gruesome act did not even arouse any human touch in him. On the contrary, he was satisfied with what he had done. In a given case, a person having seen a ghastly crime may act in a different way. That itself in another case may not constitute a suspicious circumstance. But when the entire chain of events and circumstances are comprehended, the inevitable conclusion is that the accused acted in the most cruel and inhuman manner and the murder was committed in an extremely brutal, grotesque, diabolical, revolting and dastardly manner. The victims were two innocent children and a helpless woman. Taking note of these factors, the death sentence imposed by the trial court is most appropriate. (Para 39). State of Rajasthan v. Kheraj Ram, (2003) 8 SCC 224: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1979.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-8-2003]

Ediga Anamma v. State of A.P., (1974) 4 SCC 443: 1974 SCC (Cri) 479; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, relied on

[3704] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — When not justified — Mitigating factors — Murder of four Army Officers by two appellants — Delay of more than 3 1/2 years in disposal of appellants' petition under S. 164(1) & (2) of the Army Act — Appellants committing the murders under threat, command and influence of their superiors who instigated the appellants to commit the murders by exploiting their religious feelings — Abettor, who masterminded two of the murders awarded only life imprisonment — Post-murder repentance of the appellants — Held, notwithstanding the fact that two of the murders were diabolically planned and committed in cold blood the appellants do not deserve the extreme penalty of death — Army Act, 1950 — S. 69

In the instant case the appellants committed 4 murders. Two of them were diabolically planned and committed in cold blood but the appellants did not commit those two murders on their own volition prompted by any motive or greed much less, evincing total depravity and meanness. Indeed, the main accused, who was Major in the Army, along with other officers of the Unit of the appellants instigated and compelled them to commit the above two murders by exploiting their religious feelings. Initially the appellants declined to take any step towards the commission of the offences but ultimately they succumbed to the "threat, command and influence" of their superiors.

Another mitigating factor which calls for commutation of sentence is that the said Major who along with another officer masterminded the two murders were awarded life imprisonment whereas the appellants who carried out their orders have been sentenced to death. In a case of the present nature which relates to a disciplined force as the Army, the offence committed by the officers who conceived the plan, was more heinous than that of the appellants who executed the plan as per their orders and directions. It is of course true that those orders being not lawful the appellants, even as disciplined soldiers, were not bound to comply with the same nor their carrying out such order minimised the offences but certainly this is a factor which cannot be ignored while deciding the question of sentence. Another factor which persuades to commute the sentence is the post-murder repentance of the appellants who not only surrendered before the authorities within two days but also spoke out the truth in their confessional statements. In fact, but for their confessional statements the officers, who were the masterminds, could not have been brought to book. R.S. Budhwar v. Union of India, (1996) 9 SCC 502: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1072: AIR 1996 SC 2000.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-5-1996]

[3705] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Special reasons, held, should be recorded by the court in case of capital punishment — No rigid formula or standards can be fixed and only a broad guideline consistent with the legislative policy indicated in S. 354(3) CrPC, held, alone should be considered for invoking the extreme penalty of death sentence — Aggravating circumstances vis-à-vis mitigating circumstances — Consideration of, to determine if on facts death sentence imposed on appellants was justified — Appellants along with others causing death of fifteen persons (which included a seven-year-old child and three others at the threshold of their lives), besides causing grievous injuries to eight others — The acts of murder committed by the appellants were so gruesome, merciless and brutal that the aggravating circumstances outweighed the mitigating circumstances — Further, the death sentence of other two accused involved in the said incident, already confirmed by the Supreme Court — Hence, death sentence of appellants, held, not liable to be interfered with — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/149

The appellants, who were awarded death sentence by the courts below, contended before the Supreme Court that there were many mitigating circumstances to award lesser sentence which the Sessions Court and the High Court had not taken into consideration. It was contended that the appellants were young at the time of the commission of the crime and no motive whatsoever was proved against them. It was further contended that the appellants followed the dictate of their father, who, in all possibility, must have instigated them. The appellants submitted that they had no criminal antecedents and there was nothing on record to show that they would be a menace to the society or that they were beyond the pale of any reformation.

Confirming the death sentence

Held :

As per Section 354(3) CrPC, in every case where the court finds that the capital punishment is the inevitable consequence, the court should give special reasons. (Para 16)

Further, no rigid formula or standards can be fixed and only a broad guideline consistent with the legislative policy indicated by the legislature in Section 354(3) CrPC alone shall be considered for invoking the extreme penalty of death sentence. (Para 19)

The aggravating circumstances of the case are that the appellants, having known that on the next day a marriage was to take place in the house of the complainant and there would be lots of relatives present in her house, came there on the evening of 21-11-1991 when a feast was going on and started firing on the innocent persons. Thirteen persons were killed on the spot and eight others were seriously injured. The appellants thereafter went to another place and killed the father and brother of PW 15. Out of the thirteen persons, one of them was a seven-year-old child, three others were at the threshold of their lives. The post-mortem reports show that their ages ranged between 15 and 17 years. They had also their right to live in this world peaceably and these appellants had no grievance or enmity against any one of them. (Para 29)

It is true that it cannot be said that the appellants would be a menace to the society or not as "we live as creatures saddled with an imperfect ability to predict the future". Nevertheless, the law prescribes for future, based upon its knowledge of the past and is being forced to deal with tomorrow's problems with yesterday's tools. The entire incident is extremely revolting and shocks the collective conscience of the community. The acts of murder committed by the appellants are so gruesome, merciless and brutal that the aggravating circumstances far outweigh the mitigating circumstances. Moreover, the two accused who were earlier tried are already sentenced to death and their SLP was finally disposed of by the Supreme Court. (Para 29)

Thus, having regard to the facts of the case, the death sentence of the appellants is confirmed. (Para 30). Gurdev Singh v. State of Punjab, (2003) 7 SCC 258: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1616 AIR 2003 SC 4187: 2003 Cri LJ 3764.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-8-2003]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490; Janki Dass v. State (Delhi Admn.), 1994 Supp (3) SCC 143: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1673; Sk. Ishaque v. State of Bihar, (1995) 3 SCC 392: 1995 SCC (Cri) 534; A Devendran v. State of T.N., (1997) 11 SCC 720: 1998 SCC (Cri) 220; Kumudi Lal v. State of U.P., (1999) 4 SCC 108: 1999 SCC (Cri) 491; Om Prakash v. State of Haryana, (1999) 3 SCC 19: 1999 SCC (Cri) 334; Mohd. Chaman v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2001) 2 SCC 28: 2001 SCC (Cri) 278; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681; Lehna v. State of Haryana, (2002) 3 SCC 76: 2002 SCC (Cri) 526, relied on [3706] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Mitigating circumstances — Offence committed under influence of extreme mental or emotional disturbance — Indiscriminate firing by accused party resulting in death of 10 persons — Case arising out of acute factionalism — Tension created by provocative acts of complainant party — Death of one person of accused party by police firing but accused party showing self-restraint and not attacking the police party — In the facts and circumstances of the case death sentence not called for — Large number of deaths on one side cannot ipso facto bring the case into the category of "rarest of rare cases" — Fact that one of the accused was Pradhan and in a commanding position does not aggravate his case — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 (Paras 29 to 40). Shamshul Kanwar v. State of U.P., (1995) 4 SCC 430: 1995 SCC (Cri) 753: AIR 1995 SC 1748.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-5-1995]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681; Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490; Francis v. State of Kerala, (1975) 3 SCC 825: 1975 SCC (Cri) 244: AIR 1974 SC 2281; Bhoor Singh v. State of Punjab, (1974) 4 SCC 754: 1974 SCC (Cri) 664: AIR 1974 SC 1256, relied on

[3707] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — When not justified — Mitigating factors — Murder of brother, his two children and their friend — Offence committed under the influence of extreme mental and emotional disturbance and reasonable apprehension that his brother and his brother's wife wanted to kill him — Innocents also killed but murders neither cold-blooded nor for any personal gain — Absence of direct evidence connecting the accused with murder of his brother and his friend — Held, in circumstances, not safe to award death sentence

It is true that the accused attacked the members of family of his brother but in awarding death sentence the court has to take into consideration the mental condition of the accused. The brother of the accused had been harassing the accused in respect of the opening of the shop and had been making undue demands and even raised a dispute regarding supply of electricity. The accused had an apprehension that his brother and wife wanted to do away with him so that he may not be an obstacle. This is one of the important circumstances which should be given weight in determination of sentence. On the facts and circumstances of this case it cannot be said that the accused would be a menace to the society if allowed to live. It is not a case where he committed these murders merely for personal gain but on the other hand committed the same under the influence of extreme mental and emotional disturbance and also having a reasonable apprehension that his life was in danger. No doubt, two innocent kids also received injuries in the occurrence but when once there is material to show that the accused acted in a highly disturbed mental condition, the murders cannot be said to be cold-blooded. The accused seemed to have acted in a frenzied manner in such a disturbed mental condition. Further, there is no direct evidence connecting the accused with the murders of his brother and his friend. Under these circumstances it would not be safe to award death sentence and therefore, sentence of death reduced to imprisonment for life. Balraj v. State of U.P., (1994) 4 SCC 29: 1994 SCC (Cri) 823: AIR 1995 SC 1935.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and Dr. A.S. Anand, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-1994]

[3708] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Mitigating factors — Murder of beloved's mother committed by inflicting knife blows on the spur of the moment thinking her as an obstructor — Death sentence awarded by trial court reduced to sentence of life imprisonment by High Court — In the circumstances held, death sentence not called for — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302. R.N. Aggarwal v. Dharam Pal, 1989 Supp (1) SCC 386: 1989 SCC (Cri) 451.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-8-1988]

[3709] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — When not called for — Double murder by successively stabbing on chest by knife — Death sentence confirmed by High Court under S. 354(3), CrPC on the special reason that it was a cold-blooded brutal murder — Held, the act does not fall within 'rarest of the rare' category even though it was a crime against society and shocked the judicial conscience — Hence sentence of death commuted to that of life imprisonment — Bachan Singh decision laid down a sentencing pattern which failed to take due account of gravity of offence. Amrik Singh v. State of Punjab, 1988 Supp SCC 685: 1989 SCC (Cri) 41.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: A.P. Sen and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-1-1988]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580, commented upon but followed

Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, relied on

Earabhadrappa v. State of Karnataka, (1983) 2 SCC 330: 1983 SCC (Cri) 447, affirmed

[3710] — S. 354(3) — Final disposal of appeal by Supreme Court twenty-one months after award of death sentence by trial court — Also consideration for S. 354(3), CrPC, 1973 making life imprisonment the rule and capital sentence an exception — Death sentence commuted to one of life imprisonment. Hardayal v. State of U.P., (1976) 2 SCC 812: 1976 SCC (Cri) 317: AIR 1976 SC 2055: 1976 Cri LJ 1578.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.S. Sarkaria and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-3-1976]

[3711] — S. 354(3) — Circumstantial evidence — Murder of wife and four daughters by setting them on fire while they were fast asleep — Trial court and High Court concurrently finding that the incriminating circumstances proved the guilt of the accused-appellant beyond reasonable doubt and accordingly convicting him under S. 302 and sentencing him to death considering it to be rarest of rare cases — On facts held, Supreme Court's interference with concurrent findings of fact of the courts below on the guilt of the appellant not called for hence conviction under S. 302 justified — However, keeping in view all the aspects, sentence of life imprisonment instead of sentence of death would meet the requirements of the case — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The appellant, a fruit vendor, purchased a house and started living in the new house along with his family consisting of his wife, four daughters and a son aged 5 years, though a portion of the price (Rs 40,000) remained yet to be paid. However the appellant's wife and daughters did not like the house and started pressurising him to sell and purchase another house in some other locality. This caused annoyance in the mind of the appellant. He purchased five litres of petrol in a plastic can and kept it in the kitchen. According to the prosecution case, on the day of occurrence, after dinner at about 9 p.m. the appellant and his son had gone to sleep on the terrace of the house and other members slept in the rear room of the size 9' x 10' on the ground floor. At about 3 a.m. early next morning, the appellant collected the petrol in a steel bowl and sprinkled the same on his wife and daughters who were sleeping and by lighting a match set them on fire and in the process was said to have also sustained burn injuries on his left ear, left shoulder and right thumb. There was a huge fire in the room in which the deceased members of the family were sleeping and apprehending that he may also get burnt, the appellant ran away from the room by closing the door from outside and went to the police chowki where he stated that when he was lighting a lamp of petrol he sustained burn injuries and his wife and daughters seriously got caught in a big fire in the house and that they should be saved. On the direction of the chowkidar to go to the hospital for treatment he went by an auto-rickshaw to the hospital and got examined by the doctor PW 9 at around 3.30 a.m. and the statement then made by him was that he sustained burn injury while preparing tea at his house. Neighbours gathered and the brother of the appellant PW 13 brought the dead bodies to the hospital and identified them to be that of the wife and daughters of the appellant. The appellant, after his discharge from the hospital, was arrested and a case was registered against him under Section 302 IPC. At the trial, the stand of the appellant was one of denial. However, the trial court specifically found the following incriminating circumstances against the appellant, which proved the guilt of the appellant beyond reasonable doubt: the existence of misunderstandings and disputes over the purchase of the house where they were residing among the appellant and the wife and daughters; the purchase of five litres of petrol in a plastic can and keeping it in the kitchen, though he had no vehicle for its use; presence of the appellant alone in the house besides the deceased members at 3 a.m. when the incident had taken place; pouring of petrol by the appellant alone on the deceased members when they were asleep and setting them on fire resulting in their deaths; placing in a safe place on the terrace his son to save his life; that due to the highly inflammable nature of petrol — five litres poured on the bodies of the deceased ladies they were engulfed in a huge fire and got roasted without any chance to escape from the interior room where they were sleeping; the appellant's failure to make any attempt to save the ladies and himself alone running away from the house and going to the hospital and giving there a false version that he had sustained burn injuries due to the flames of a kerosene stove while preparing tea; the appellant not informing about the fire incident involving the lady members or the injuries sustained by them, due to sprinkling or spilling, as the appellant would like to claim, of petrol on their bodies, the report of the Forensic Science Laboratory and the panchnama of the place of occurrence — the details of the place of incident, the bowl, half-burnt pieces of quilt and coired thread of wooden cots on which also the presence of petrol was detected, the plea raised as in the written reply was not probable or believable and was not only false and got up and belied by the fact that no petrol was detected on his body; the fact that the theory of fire taking place due to electric short-circuit was also completely ruled out and found raised merely to mislead the court. All these circumstances found amply proved only led to the inevitable conclusion of the trial court that the appellant alone was the culprit. The High Court after going into the merits at great length and detail, not only affirmed the incriminating circumstances found established by the trial court but also held that the false plea set up by the appellant also militated against his innocence and the absence of proper or reasonable explanation and/or a false explanation given regarding the incriminating circumstances strengthened and completed the chain and further held that the prosecution had proved the charge beyond any reasonable doubt and the guilt of the accused conclusively. The case was considered to be one of the "rarest of rare cases" justifying the imposition of death sentence and thus the sentence also was confirmed by the High Court.

Dismissing the accused's appeal except in respect of the sentence,

Held :

The entire case against the appellant rests only on circumstantial evidence, and having regard to the manner, place and time of occurrence it was difficult for the prosecution to gather or produce any direct or ocular evidence for the commission of the murder. The area of controversy is very limited and even the indisputable facts placed on record, some of which by the very admission of the appellant, would provide sufficient basis for legitimately inferring the actual role played by the appellant and it is in this context only both the courts below have chosen to appreciate and highlight the varying as well as the falsity of the plea of the very appellant. Every one of the circumstances found established in this case definitely forms a chain of evidence so complete and definite as not to leave any doubt that the appellant had been carefully planning and meticulously preparing at every stage to get rid of the wife and the daughters as a whole lot. On the evidence on record it could not be properly contended that the courts below found the appellant guilty solely on the basis of the falsity of the stand or explanation given by him of the occurrence. The circumstances held proved in this case by cogent and convincing materials brought on record are sufficient to substantiate the homicidal crime committed by the appellant beyond reasonable doubt and bring home the guilt of the accused with reasonable and positive definiteness. The false nature of the varying explanations and the narration in the written statement of events as to how the incident took place has been highlighted by the courts below more in the process of finding out the reasonableness of the explanation and plausibility of its acceptance, more as an additional circumstance to reinforce the conclusions arrived at and not to use such reasoning as a substitute for the ordinary proof normally expected of the prosecution to substantiate the guilt of the accused. The reliance placed by the courts below on the deposition of the PWs and the facts noticed in the panchnama relating to the place of the incident to arrive at the conclusions cannot be said to be either inappropriate, unreasonable or unjustified. Both the courts below have analysed the materials carefully and in their proper perspective and the manner of appreciation of evidence by them cannot be said to be either perverse or suffer from any glaring infirmities. It cannot also be legitimately contended that improper and wrong inferences have been drawn from the materials placed on record or facts proved. Therefore, there is no reason to interfere with the concurrent findings of facts recorded by the courts below on the guilt of the appellant. (Para 8)

However, as regards the quantum of sentence, as to what category a particular case would fall depends, invariably on varying facts of each case and no absolute rule for invariable application or yardstick as a ready reckoner can be formulated. In this case it is on evidence that despite his economic condition and earnest attempt to purchase a house for the family after raising loans, the wife and daughters were stated to be not pleased and were engaging in quarrels constantly with the appellant. Though they were all living together, the continuous harassment and constant nagging could have very well affected his mental balance and such sustained provocation could have reached a boiling point resulting in the dastardly act. The appellant, though hailing from a poor family, had no criminal background and it could not be reasonably postulated that he will not get rehabilitated or that he would be a menace to the society. The boy of tender age would also once for all be deprived of the parental protection. Keeping in view all these aspects, it could not be said that the imposition of life imprisonment would not adequately meet the requirements of the case or that an imposition of the extreme punishment alone would do real or effective justice. Consequently, the sentence of death is directed to be modified into one of rigorous imprisonment for life. (Paras 9 and 10) . Vashram Narshibhai Rajpara v. State of Gujarat, (2002) 9 SCC 168: AIR 2002 SC 2211: 2002 Cri LJ 2930.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Brijesh Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-4-2002]

Panchhi v. State of U.P., (1998) 7 SCC 177: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1561; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Om Prakash v. State of Haryana, (1999) 3 SCC 19: 1999 SCC (Cri) 334, relied on

[3712] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Rarest of rare case — Conviction of two accused under Ss. 302, 302/149, 380 and 460 for committing dacoity and murder of all the six male members of a family including two minor children — A-1 awarded death sentence with the aid of Section 149 IPC as also on the basis of a general statement made by the four eyewitnesses that the miscreants had gunned down the six persons during the incident — While evidence showing that A-1 had also exhorted that no male member of the family should be kept alive, one of the eyewitnesses admitting that A-1 was not having any firearm in his hands at the time of the incident — But all the eyewitnesses consistently deposing that A-2 had fired from his firearm on all the six persons who died instantaneously — A-2 having animosity against the family members of the deceased as he believed that one of them was responsible for causing murder of his brother and nephew — But A-1 not related to A-2 — Held, case of A-1 would not fall within the rarest of rare category — But the case of A-2 would fall within that category

In the face of this evidence, a distinction based on the degree of complicity and brutality will have to be drawn which has got a vital impact in awarding the sentence. It is well settled that while awarding the sentence, the court has to bear in mind the crime and the criminal.

A-2 was the principal offender/miscreant who fired from his firearm on all the six persons including the two innocent children. He had a deep-rooted desire for revenge based upon suspicion about the murders of his brother and nephew by one of the family members of the deceased persons which prompted him to take revenge against the deceased and had gone to the extent of killing the six deceased in a most brutal, heinous and barbaric manner. Nothing was suggested to the eyewitnesses on behalf of A-2 that any of these deceased persons had played any role in committing the murders of his brother and nephew and at any rate having regard to the ages of two minor children (10 years and 8 years) it could not be even remotely suspected that they could be the assailants. A-2 wanted not only to teach a lesson to the family members of the person against whom he had grudge but also to create terror in the minds of the family members to satisfy his ego and muscle power. A-2 exhibited most inhuman conduct while rejoicing in his victory after commission of the crime. In this background the trial court as well as the High Court have committed no error in awarding death sentence to him.

But A-1 who was not related to A-2 might not be suffering from the same degree of revenge and brutality as A-2 had. Keeping this distinction in mind the case of A-1 will not fall in the category of rarest of rare cases. Therefore, death sentence awarded to him was not justified having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case. The death sentence awarded to him by the courts below is altered to one of life imprisonment. Shobhit Chamar v. State of Bihar, (1998) 3 SCC 455: 1998 SCC (Cri) 790: AIR 1998 SC 1693.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-3-1998]

Shiv Ram v. State of U.P., (1998) 1 SCC 149: 1998 SCC (Cri) 278, relied on [3713] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — When not called for — Merciless killing of three brothers with a big knife by appellant — Incident aftermath of assassination of the then Prime Minister Smt Indira Gandhi — Incident not an organised activity but result of temporary mob frenzy — Held, case cannot be called a rarest of the rare cases — Hence imposition of maximum punishment of capital sentence not warranted — Sentence reduced to that of life imprisonment. Kishori v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2000) 2 SCC 83: 2000 SCC (Cri) 324: AIR 2000 SC 562: 2000 Cri LJ 756.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-12-1999]

Kishori v. State of Delhi, (1999) 1 SCC 148: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1, applied

Jagmohan Singh v. State of U.P., (1973) 1 SCC 20: 1973 SCC (Cri) 169; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580, relied on

State v. Kishori, (1998) 76 Delhi LJ 209, partly reversed

[3714] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — When not justified — Pre-planned murder — Poisoning of four persons of a family viz. parents and grandparents of accused's paramour S, who was his student to start with — Initially accused wanted to kill only the mother of S, since she objected to S getting familiar with him, but when accused thought he was seen by father of S and grandparents were also coming to that place he gave sweets mixed with poison to them also out of confusion and fright — Thus the subsequent events of murdering the other members of the family occurred unexpectedly — In the circumstances held, it was not a fit case in which death sentence could be regarded as appropriate sentence — Hence sentence reduced to that of life imprisonment (Paras 10 and 11). Ranadhir Basu v. State of W.B., (2000) 3 SCC 161: 2000 SCC (Cri) 587: AIR 2000 SC 908: 2000 Cri LJ 1417.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-2-2000]

[3715] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Whether a rarest of rare case — Court has to balance aggravating and mitigating factors and exercise its discretionary judgment — It has not only to keep in view rights of the criminal but also rights of the victim and the society at large — Cold-blooded barbaric murder of brother, his two minor sons and aged aunt and attempt to murder brother's wife and daughter with a view to wipe out entire family of his brother in a calculated manner when they were fast asleep by cutting their necks with a sharp-cutting weapon — Dispute between the brothers relating to respective shares of land already settled with mediation of Sarpanch and only a minor quarrel relating to deceased brother's objection to accused's attempt to put barbed wire fencing taking place few days prior to the incident — No provocation nor any immediate or even proximate cause of resentment shown — No remorse shown by accused — In the circumstances held, death sentence concurrently awarded by courts below justified — Penology — Retributive and deterrent aspects of punishment considered in award of death sentence

The accused-appellant, his deceased brother and his another brother were living in one compound (Ahata) in their respective residential unit pursuant to partition of the joint lands which had taken place long ago. There was an occasion for difference and dispute between the accused and the deceased in respect of only one killa of land but such dispute had been sorted out at the intervention of the Sarpanch of the village about eight to ten months before the incident. After that no fresh incident had taken place in recent past for which there was any occasion for the accused to feel aggrieved concerning his landed property. A few days before the incident, there was a quarrel between the accused and the deceased when the accused intended to put a barbed fencing on a portion of their residential complex but the deceased objected to such course of action. On the fateful night when the deceased brother and his family members were fast asleep, the appellant murdered his deceased brother, his two minor sons and aged aunt (bua) by cutting their necks with a sharp-cutting weapon (kassi). He also attempted to murder his brother's wife and daughter in the same manner thereby critically injuring them though they survived after hovering between life and death for a number of days in hospital. The Sessions Judge sentenced him to death and in appeal the High Court confirmed the sentence. Dismissing the accused's further appeal

Held :

For deciding just and appropriate sentence to be awarded for an offence, the aggravating and mitigating factors and circumstances in which a crime has been committed are to be delicately balanced in a dispassionate manner and discretionary judgment has to be exercised by the court in the particular circumstances of the case. Punishment must also respond to the society's cry for justice against the criminal. While considering the punishment to be given to the accused, the Court should be alive not only to the right of the criminal to be awarded just and fair punishment by administering justice tempered with such mercy as the criminal may justly deserve, but also to the rights of the victims of the crime to have the assailant appropriately punished and the society's reasonable expectation from the court for the appropriate deterrent punishment conforming to the gravity of the offence and consistent with the public abhorrence for the heinous crime committed by the accused.

In the instant case, there was absence of any provocation. There is no material on record from which it can be reasonably held that the accused had any occasion to reasonably feel aggrieved for any unjust and improper conduct on the part of the deceased brother. The incident such as the quarrel relating to putting the barbed wire fencing cannot be reasonably held to be a cause for being temperamentally upset and for entertaining so much wrath and spirit of vengeance as may impel a man of normal composure and frame of mind to run amok and perpetrate ghastly murders of such magnitude. There is no evidence to indicate that in view of such quarrel happening a few days prior to the incident there had been any aftermath and further dispute and resentment between the deceased and the accused either immediately before or even proximately before the incident of murders and attempts to commit murders. The accused, in a cool and calculated manner intended to wipe out the entire family of his brother. With that end in view, he selected the most opportune moment, namely, the dead of night when his brother and other members of his family would remain asleep so that they would be absolutely helpless and not capable of giving any defence to save themselves. In order to ensure death, the accused chose to cut vital part of the body, namely, the neck by a sharp-cutting weapon (kassi) when his victims were asleep. The murders had been committed very brutally and mercilessly of absolutely innocent persons, namely, the Bua and two minor sons of his brother with whom there was no occasion to come in conflict and to entertain any grudge or ill-feeling. The accused was in full senses and had committed the murders of four close relatives one after the other and also attempted to commit murder of his brother's wife and daughter in a cool and calculated manner. He did not even feel remorse and being quite alive to the enormity of the crime committed by him he escaped from the place of occurrence. Such murders and attempt to commit murders in a cool and calculated manner without provocation cannot but shock the conscience of the society which must abhor such heinous crime committed on helpless innocent persons. In the facts and circumstances of the case, the crime committed by the accused falls in the category of rarest of rare cases for which extreme penalty of death is fully justified. It is true that the appellant was not convicted for any other offence on any previous occasion. Such fact can hardly be considered as a mitigating factor in favour of the appellant that will outweigh all the aggravating factors and circumstances in which the crime of the murders had been committed. Therefore, there is no reason to interfere with the sentence of death awarded against the appellant since confirmed by the High Court. Surja Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (1996) 6 SCC 271: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1314: AIR 1997 SC 18.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.N. Ray and G.T. Nanavati, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-9-1996]

Dennis Councle McGautha v. State of California, 402 US 183: 28 L Ed 2d 711 (1971); Shankar v. State of T.N., (1994) 4 SCC 478: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1252; Jashubha Bharatsinh Gohil v. State of Gujarat, (1994) 4 SCC 353: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1193; Dhananjoy Chatterjee v. State of W.B., (1994) 2 SCC 220: 1994 SCC (Cri) 358; Ravji v. State of Rajasthan, (1996) 2 SCC 175: 1996 SCC (Cri) 225, relied on [3716] — S. 354(3) — Sentence — Death sentence — Murder of 5 persons — Appellant wiping out the entire family of his uncle to grab his properties — Victims unarmed and killed during the course of their sleep — No extenuating or mitigating circumstances in favour of the appellant found — Held, in the circumstances of the case, capital punishment imposed by the High Court proper — Case falls under the "rarest of rare" cases. Govindaswami v. State of T.N., (1998) 4 SCC 531: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1092: AIR 1998 SC 2889.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-4-1998]

Mahesh v. State of M.P., (1987) 3 SCC 80: 1987 SCC (Cri) 379, relied on

[3717] — S. 354(3) — When not justified — Murder of an undertrial prisoner in jail by a life convict — Held, felonious propensity of an offender can be taken into consideration but cannot be made the sole basis for awarding extreme penalty of death — In the circumstances of the case death sentence imposed upon the appellant reduced to imprisonment for life — Penology

In the instant case the principal reason which weighed with the courts below to hold that the extreme penalty of death was called for, was that earlier the appellant had committed a murder for which he was serving the sentence of life imprisonment at the material time and that he committed another murder while he was released on parole. Undoubtedly, felonious propensity of an offender is a factor which requires consideration while dealing with the question of imposition of the sentence of death but that cannot be made the sole basis for such sentence as all other factors relating to the commission of the crime including motive, manner and magnitude have also to be taken into consideration. Taking an overall view of the attending facts and circumstances of the case death sentence imposed upon the appellant reduced to life imprisonment. Krishan v. State of Haryana, (2000) 10 SCC 451: 1997 SCC (Cri) 648: AIR 1997 SC 2598: 1997 Cri LJ 3180.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and K. Venkataswami, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-5-1997]

[Ed.: Under Section 303 IPC murder by a life convict was mandatorily punishable with death. But Section 303 was declared unconstitutional in Mithu v. State of Haryana, (1983) 2 SCC 277. Hence it seems the trial was conducted under Section 302 IPC.]

[3718] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — 'Rarest of rare' case — Murder and robbery — Number of victims large — Effect — Appellants putting a bus on fire for robbing the passengers resulting in death of 23 passengers and serious burns to a number of other passengers — Held, in the circumstances of the case, appellants deserved the extreme penalty of death sentence — Number of the victims, held, not an extraneous consideration in award of death sentence — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 307, 341, 440 and 120-B. Gentela Vijayavardhan Rao v. State of A.P., (1996) 6 SCC 241: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1290: AIR 1996 SC 2791.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr A.S. Anand and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-8-1996]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681; Dhananjoy Chatterjee v. State of W.B., (1994) 2 SCC 220: 1994 SCC (Cri) 358; Bheru Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (1994) 2 SCC 467: 1994 SCC (Cri) 555; Sk Ishaque v. State of Bihar, (1995) 3 SCC 392: 1995 SCC (Cri) 534, followed [3719] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — When not justified — Murder for gain — Nothing exceptionally gruesome about manner of committing the murder — Held, murder by its very nature is shocking but that per se does not justify death penalty — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 307 and 394 r/w S. 397. State of H.P. v. Manohar Singh Thakur, (1998) 6 SCC 158: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1426: AIR 1998 SC 2941: 1998 Cri LJ 3630.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, C.J. and Sujata V. Manohar, J. [Date of decision: 28-7-1998]

[3720] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Rarest of rare case — Rape and murder of a 7 years' old girl — Appellant kidnapping the deceased, committing rape on her, strangulating her to death and throwing the dead body in a well — Held, in the circumstances of the case appellant deserved death sentence — Penology — Deterrent and retributive aspects of punishment considered while awarding — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 363, 376 and 201

The evidence on record clearly establishes that the appellant was close to the family of father of the deceased and the deceased and the siblings used to call him 'Uncle'. Obviously her closeness with the appellant encouraged her to go to his shop, which was near the saloon where she had gone for a haircut with her father and brother, and ask for some biscuits. The appellant readily responded to the request by taking her to the nearby grocery shop and handing over a packet of biscuits apparently as a prelude to his sinister design which unfolded in her kidnapping, brutal rape and gruesome murder — as the numerous injuries on her person testify; and the finale was the dumping of her dead body in a well. When an innocent hapless girl of 7 years was subjected to such barbaric treatment by a person who was in a position of her trust his culpability assumes the proportion of extreme depravity and arouses a sense of revulsion in the mind of the common man. In fine, the motivation of the perpetrator, the vulnerability of the victim, the enormity of the crime, the execution thereof persuade us to hold that this is a "rarest of rare" cases where the sentence of death is eminently desirable not only to deter others from committing such atrocious crimes but also to give emphatic expression to society's abhorrence of such crimes. Kamta Tiwari v. State of M.P., (1996) 6 SCC 250: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1298: AIR 1996 SC 2800.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-9-1996]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, followed

[3721] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — If justified on facts — Gruesome killing of a nine-year-old child — Accused sacrificing a child of another person before Goddess Kali in a most brutal and diabolic manner for personal gain and to promote his fortunes by pretending to appease the deity — Accused also facing trial in another case involving similar accusations — Held, the present one was an illustrative and most exemplary case to be treated as the "rarest of rare cases" in which death sentence is and should be the rule, with no exception whatsoever — Superstition cannot and does not provide justification for any killing, much less a planned and deliberate one — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 201

The fact situation of this case shows that the accused-appellant was not possessed of the basic humanness and he completely lacks the psyche or mindset which can be amenable for any reformation. He had at the time of occurrence a child of the same age as the victim and yet he diabolically designed in a most dastardly and revolting manner to sacrifice a very hapless and helpless child of another for personal gain and to promote his fortunes by pretending to appease the deity. The brutality of the act is amplified by the grotesque and revolting manner in which the helpless child's head was severed. Even if the helpless and imploring face and voice of the innocent child did not arouse any trace of kindness in the heart of the accused, the nonchalant way in which he carried the severed head in a gunny bag and threw it in the pond unerringly shows that the act was diabolic of the most superlative degree in conception, and cruel in execution. The tendency in the accused and for that matter in anyone who entertains such revolting ideas cannot be placed on a par with even an intention to kill someone but really borders on a crime against humanity indicative of the greatest depravity shocking the conscience of not only any right-thinking person but of the courts of law, as well. The socially abhorrent nature of the crime committed also ought not to be ignored in this case. If this act is not revolting or dastardly, it is beyond comprehension as to what other act can be so described, is the question. Superstition is a belief or notion, not based on reason or knowledge, in or of the ominous significance of a particular thing or circumstance, occurrence or the like but mainly triggered by thoughts of self-aggrandizement and barbaric at times as in the present case. Superstition cannot and does not provide justification for any killing, much less a planned and deliberate one. No amount of superstitious colour can wash away the sin and offence of an unprovoked killing, more so in the case of an innocent and defenceless child. (Para 22)

Criminal propensities of the accused are clearly spelt out from the fact that similar accusations involving human sacrifice existed at the time of trial. Though the result could not be brought on record, yet the fact that similar accusation was made against the accused-appellant for which he was facing trial cannot also be lost sight of. (Para 23)

Thus, in view of the above facts, this is an illustrative and most exemplary case to be treated as the "rarest of rare cases" in which death sentence is and should be the rule, with no exception whatsoever. (Para 23). Sushil Murmu v. State of Jharkhand, (2004) 2 SCC 338: 2004 SCC (Cri) 529: AIR 2004 SC 394: 2004 Cri LJ 658.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-12-2003]

Bhola Singh v. State of Jharkhand, 2003 Cri LJ 262 (Jhar), affirmed

Ediga Anamma v. State of A.P., (1974) 4 SCC 443: 1974 SCC (Cri) 479; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, relied on

[3722] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — 'Rarest of rare' cases — Factors to be considered — Kidnapping for ransom and brutal murder of a young boy aged 10 years — A-1 and A-4 actually committing the murder — Aggravating circumstances demonstrating their depraved state of mind and the brutality with which they killed the boy — Even after disposing of the dead body of the boy A-1 not losing his lust for money and getting the ransom amount — Death sentence to A-1 and A-4 imposed by the trial court and confirmed by the High Court upheld — However, in view of mitigating circumstances death sentence of A-2 and A-3 commuted to imprisonment for life — Penology — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 365 & 364-A

It is true, that the extreme penalty of death should not be imposed in all cases of conviction under Section 302 and should be awarded only in rarest of rare cases where the court finds that murder has been committed in a premeditated and calculated manner with extreme cruelty and brutality and the aggravating circumstances would justify such extreme penalty. While considering the question whether in a given case the extreme penalty of death should be imposed or not the court should try to find out any mitigating circumstances and on being satisfied about the existence of such mitigating circumstances, the court would be justified in imposing the lesser sentence of imprisonment for life. Mohan v. State of T.N., (1998) 5 SCC 336: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1308: AIR 1998 SC 2238.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-5-1998]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470 1983 SCC (Cri) 681; Suresh v. State of U.P., (1981) 2 SCC 569. 1981 SCC (Cri) 559; A. Devendran v. State of T.N., (1997) 11 SCC 720: 1998 SCC (Cri) 220; State of U.P. v. Bhoora, (1998) 1 SCC 128: 1998 SCC (Cri) 265, followed

[3723] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — When not justified — Rape and murder of a young girl aged 14 years — Circumstances indicating that she willingly allowed the appellant to have some liberty with her — Death sentence reduced to imprisonment for life — Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989 — S. 3(ii)(v) — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 376

The prosecution case was that the victim, aged about 14 years, had gone to ease herself in a field near her house and that while she was so doing, the appellant pounced upon her, pinned her down on the ground, committed rape and when she started resisting and raising shouts, strangulated and killed her by tying her salwar around her neck. The trial court imposed death sentence upon the appellant which was confirmed by the High Court. On appeal, reducing the sentence to life imprisonment,

Held :

The circumstances indicate that probably the prosecutrix was not unwilling initially to allow the appellant to have some liberty with her. The appellant not being able to resist his urge for sex went ahead in spite of her unwillingness for a sexual intercourse who offered some resistance and started raising shouts at that stage. In order to prevent her from raising shouts the appellant tied the salwar around her neck which resulted in strangulation and her death. Therefore, this is not a fit case in which the extreme penalty of death deserves to be imposed upon the appellant. The High Court erred in not considering all the aspects disclosed by the evidence on record. (Para 6). Kumudi Lal v. State of U.P., (1999) 4 SCC 108: 1999 SCC (Cri) 491: AIR 1999 SC 1699: 1999 All LJ 1262.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 31-3-1999]

[3724] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — When not justified — If rarest of rare cases — Fake encounter — Police personnel committing murder of three innocent persons — Absence of aggravating circumstances — Merely because firing took place from a very close range or that the trial is a sensational one extreme penalty of death cannot be awarded — On facts, courts below not justified in awarding death sentence to two of the appellants merely because they happened to be police officers and the constables at their command might have resorted to fire from their rifles — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34. Brijlala Pd. Sinha v. State of Bihar, (1998) 5 SCC 699: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1382: AIR 1998 SC 2443: 1998 Cri LJ 3611.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and G.B. Pattanaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-7-1998]

[3725] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Rarest of rare cases — Absence of mitigating factors — Murder of brother's wife and her daughter aged 8 years — Accused trying to commit rape on his brother's wife and on failing committing her brutal murder, severing her head from the body and hanging her head on the tree — Accused also committing murder of her 8-year-old daughter who had witnessed the incident — Mother of the accused testifying about the bad characteristics and reputation of the accused — Character of accused beyond redemption or reformation — Facts establishing depravity and criminality of the accused in no uncertain terms — Held, in the circumstances, accused deserves death sentence — Plea that the accused was a young man of about 22 years of age not a mitigating factor — Penology — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The accused was charged for committing the murder of his brother's wife and her 8-year-old daughter. The prosecution case was that the accused entered the house and bolted from outside the mother's room and thereafter removed certain bricks from the wall and "choukat" thus facilitating the entry into the room where the deceased sister-in-law was sleeping with the child. The accused committed the murder of his sister-in-law at about 11.00 p.m. by parsul-blows and then kulhadi (tanga)-blows on her neck severing her head from the body and taking away her eight-year-old daughter and killing her in a jungle by axe-blows said to be by offering sacrifice to Mahua Maharaj and burying her in the sand covered with stones and it is thereafter that the accused came back home and carried the body of his deceased sister-in-law tied in a cloth to the jungle and hung the head tied on a branch with the hair and put the body on the trunk of the mahua tree. It was contended by the accused's counsel that the age of the accused is 22 years and he did not have any past criminal history and this is not such a case in which the accused may be awarded the maximum sentence, i.e., sentence of death. The trial Judge passed death sentence in the matter which was confirmed by the High Court. Dismissing the appeal by special leave,

Held :

Corelation of aggravating and mitigating circumstances and a balance be struck on the basis of the factual matrix of the matter in issue, before the exercise of discretion in terms of the provisions of Section 302. In the matter in issue, however, there is no balancing factor so as to strike a balance. As a matter of fact aggravating factors there are aplenty and galore without any mitigating circumstances. The age of the accused being 22 years cannot, in the factual matrix of the matter under consideration, be said to be a mitigating factor. The accused is 22 years of age while the victim was aged 30 years and at the time of the unfortunate death, she was under pregnancy between 22 to 30 weeks — the other victim was an innocent girl — a child of 8 years; the murders were cold-blooded while the two victims were in a helpless and hapless situation. No amount of perversity would prompt a person to break open the door by removing the bricks from the wall and commit such gruesome murders on failure to satisfy the lust — the human lust ought to know its limits. Imaginations shall have to run wild to consider existence of any mitigating factors in the matter of sentence, having due regard to even the subsequent conduct of the accused in the matter of disposal of the bodies. (Para 21)

Can there be any mitigating circumstances on account of such a ghastly act — the answer cannot but be in the negative. The mother of the accused was bolted inside the room and she watched as a bewildered spectator from the creeks of the window and it is the mother who had given evidence about the bad characteristics and the reputation of the accused in the locality; the sister-in-law has been murdered along with an innocent child. Is this a man who deserves any sympathy from the society? Is this a man who can correct himself and the law courts ought to permit him to lead a decent life after he serves the sentence? The mother's evidence becomes material and it is on this score that it cannot be said that there are some mitigating circumstances and there is likelihood of the accused being reformed or rehabilitated. (Para 22)

The facts establish the depravity and criminality of the accused in no uncertain terms — no regard being had for the precious life of the young child also. The compassionate ground of the accused being 22 years of age cannot in the facts of the matter be termed to be at all relevant. (Para 24)

The murder was cold-blooded and brutal without any provocation. It certainly makes it a rarest of the rare cases in which there are no extenuating or mitigating circumstances. (Para 25). Jai Kumar v. State of M.P., (1999) 5 SCC 1: 1999 SCC (Cri) 638: AIR 1999 SC 1860.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and M. Srinivasan and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-1999]

Kamta Tiwari v. State of M.P., (1996) 6 SCC 250: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1298; Dhananjoy Chatterjee v. State of W.B., (1994) 2 SCC 220: 1994 SCC (Cri) 358, relied on

[3726] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Rarest of rare cases — Conspiracy hatched by the husband with his two associates to kill his wife and two children simply to gain control over the property — Murder of wife committed in an extremely brutal, gruesome, diabolical, revolting and dastardly manner — Victim's body truncated into two parts in a devilish style — Death of the two children caused by inflicting severe injuries on neck and other parts of body — Held, the case of accused husband falls within the category of 'rarest of rare cases' — Death sentence awarded by courts below justified — However, in the facts and circumstances of the case, death sentence awarded to his two associates commuted to imprisonment for life — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 302/120-B and 201

The main accused had entertained some grievances against his wife because she had made up her mind to dispose of her house and migrate to America along with her children with the sale proceeds against the wishes of her husband and, therefore, to put an end to her life he planned a long drawn plot and hatched a conspiracy with the other two accused for execution of this plan. Her murder was committed in an extremely, brutal, gruesome, diabolical, revolting and dastardly manner so as to arouse intense and extreme indignation of the society. The victim was subjected to inhuman acts of torture and cruelty while causing her murder as her body was truncated into two parts in a devilish style evincing total depravity simply to gain control over the property. Having been not satisfied with the killing of his wife the accused was further determined to kill his two innocent children making them believe that they were being taken on a pleasure trip to the farm and then after they were done to death by inflicting severe injuries on neck and other parts of the body he threw their dead bodies in the river having no consideration for the human life and that too for his own flesh and blood. The accused may be having some differences with his wife with regard to the sale of house and her idea about settlement with the children at America but he certainly had no grievance or even any remote cause against his innocent minor children who could never conceive that their father who was their guardian of the first degree was taking them for committing their murder. (Para 104)

The cold blooded cruel murder of the innocent children by none else but by their own real father shows the enormous proportion of depravity with which it was committed eliminating almost all members of the family. The question is whether there could be still a worse case than this where a husband could hatch a conspiracy and kill his wife in a most callous and ghastly fashion as in the present case only on a trifling matter which could have been sorted out in an amicable manner for which no effort was made by the accused. Not only this but the accused became thirsty of the blood of his own children for absolutely no fault of theirs. In the facts and circumstances of the case, so far as the main accused is concerned, the rule of the rarest of rare cases has to be applied as his case falls within the category of the said rule and for the perpetration of the crime of the nature discussed above there could be no other proper and adequate sentence except the sentence of death as there are no mitigating circumstances whatsoever. Therefore, the death sentence awarded to the main accused is confirmed. But in the facts and circumstances of the case death sentence awarded to the other two accused is converted to imprisonment for life. (Para 105). Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80: 1995 SCC (Cri) 60: AIR 1994 SC 2420: 1994 Cri LJ 3271.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-7-1994]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681; Dhananjoy Chatterjee v. State of W.B., (1994) 2 SCC 220: 1994 SCC (Cri) 358, followed

[3727] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Rarest of rare cases — Rape and murder of a helpless and defenceless school-going girl of 18 years by a security guard — Death sentence imposed by trial court and confirmed by High Court upheld — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 376 and 380

The sordid episode of the security guard, whose sacred duty was to ensure the protection and welfare of the inhabitants of the flats in the apartment, should have subjected the deceased, a resident of one of the flats, to gratify his lust and murder her in retaliation for his transfer on her complaint, makes the crime even more heinous. Keeping in view the medical evidence and the state in which the body of the deceased was found, it is obvious that a most heinous type of barbaric rape and murder was committed on a helpless and defenceless school-going girl of 18 years. The faith of the society by such a barbaric act of the guard, gets totally shaken and its cry for justice becomes loud and clear. The offence was not only inhuman and barbaric but it was a totally ruthless crime of rape followed by cold blooded murder and an affront to the human dignity of the society. The savage nature of the crime has shocked our judicial conscience. There are no extenuating or mitigating circumstances whatsoever in the case. A real and abiding concern for the dignity of human life is required to be kept in mind by the courts while considering the confirmation of the sentence of death but a cold blooded preplanned brutal murder, without any provocation, after committing rape on an innocent and defenceless young girl of 18 years, by the security guard certainly makes this case a "rarest of the rare" cases which calls for no punishment other than the capital punishment. Dhananjoy Chatterjee v. State of W.B., (1994) 2 SCC 220: 1994 SCC (Cri) 358.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-1-1994]

[3728] — S. 354(3) — Charge of assassination of Prime Minister of India — Conviction of one of the accused (Satwant Singh) upheld on the basis of direct evidence and clinching circumstances apart from his confession — Criminal conspiracy by another accused (Kehar Singh) with the co-accused having been proved, his conviction also upheld — But criminal conspiracy by the third accused (Balbir Singh) with co-accused having not been proved on facts, his conviction set aside — Death sentence to the accused who actually committed the murder as well as to the accused who conspired and inspired for commission of the murder, held, justified — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 r/w Ss. 120-B, 109 and 34

On October 31, 1984 at about 9 a.m. when Smt Indira Gandhi, the then Prime Minister of India, left her residence and proceeded towards her office through the connected pathway, Beant Singh, SI, a security guard of the Prime Minister who was then standing on the left side, opened fire at her from his service revolver. He fired five rounds. At the same time Satwant Singh, Constable, on security duty who was on the right side, also started firing from his carbine releasing about 25 bullets at Smt Gandhi. The Indo-Tibetan Border Police personnel secured both the assassins. They were then taken to guard room where they sustained gunshot injuries as a result of which Beant Singh died and Satwant Singh suffered grievous injuries but recovered later on. Smt Gandhi was immediately rushed to hospital where she died.

Apart from Satwant Singh, Kehar Singh, who was uncle of deceased Beant Singh's wife, and Balbir Singh, an SI posted on the security duty at the residence of the Prime Minister, were also held on charge of criminal conspiracy. The prosecution case against Kehar Singh was that he was a religious fanatic. He had intense hate against Smt Indira Gandhi for causing damage to the Akal Takht in Golden Temple, Amritsar by "Operation Bluestar". He was in a position to influence Beant Singh, being related to Beant Singh's wife. He converted Beant Singh and through him Satwant Singh to religious bigotry. He made them to undergo "Amrit Chakhna Ceremony" on October 14 and 24, 1984 respectively. He also took Beant Singh to Golden Temple, Amritsar on October 20, 1984.

On October 31, 1984 Balbir Singh's duty was to commence in the evening. When he reported for duty in the normal course he was asked to go to the Security Police Lines. At about 3 a.m. on November 1, 1984 he was awakened from his sleep and his house was searched but nothing except a printed book on Sant Bhindranwala was recovered. It is alleged that about 4 a.m. he was taken to Yamuna Velodrome. He was kept there till late in the evening when he was reported to have been released. This custody in Yamuna Velodrome was described as 'de facto custody'. But there was no evidence nor any police officer was examined to say that he had allowed this accused to go in the evening on November 1, 1984. Thereafter he is alleged to have been arrested on December 3, 1984 at Najafgarh bus-stand when his personal search was taken and certain articles were recovered from his possession including a piece of paper containing certain entries said to have been written by him.

After investigation, charge-sheet was filed against the accused-appellants Satwant Singh, Kehar Singh and Balbir Singh. They were accused of offences under Ss. 120-B, 109 and 34 r/w S. 302 and also of substantive offences under Ss. 302 and 307 of the IPC and Ss. 27, 54 and 59 of the Arms Act.

In due course, the accused were committed to take their trial in the Court of Session. In the meanwhile, the High Court of Delhi issued two notifications. By one notification, the High Court directed that the trial of the case shall be held in the Central Jail, Tihar according to law. By another notification, the High Court directed that "the case be tried by Shri Mahesh Chandra, Additional Sessions Judge, New Delhi". In pursuance of the above notifications, the accused were tried in Central Jail, Tihar. The trial Judge found the accused guilty of all the charges framed against them and sentenced them to death.

On appeal the High Court confirmed the order of conviction and sentence passed by the trial court against all the three accused. On further appeal the Supreme Court confirmed the conviction and sentence against Kehar Singh and Satwant Singh but acquitted Balbir Singh in absence of sufficient evidence. As regards sentence of death imposed on Satwant Singh and Kehar Singh

Held :

Per Oza, J.

The act of the accused not only took away the life of a popular leader of the country but also undermines the democratic system which has been working in the country so well for the last forty years. There is yet another serious consideration. Two of the accused (viz. the deceased Beant Singh and Satwant Singh) were posted on the security duty of the Prime Minister to protect her from any intruder or from any attack from outside and therefore if they themselves resort to this kind of offence, there appears to be no reasons or no mitigating circumstance for consideration on the question of sentence. Additionally, an unarmed lady was attacked by these two persons with a series of bullets and it has been found that a number of bullets entered her body. The manner in which mercilessly she was attacked by these two persons on whom the confidence was reposed to give her protection repels any consideration of reduction of sentence. In this view of the matter, even the conspirator who inspired the persons who actually acted does not deserve any leniency in the matter of sentence. The death sentence awarded by the trial court and maintained by the High Court appears to be just and proper.

Per Ray J. (concurring)

It was a gruesome murder committed by the accused who was employed as a security guard to protect the Prime Minister. It was one of the rarest of rare cases in which extreme penalty of death was called for.

Per Shetty, J. (concurring)

Section 354(3) of the Code, 1973 marks a significant shift in the legislative policy of awarding death sentence. Now the normal sentence for murder is imprisonment for life and not sentence of death. The court is required to give special reasons for awarding death sentence. Special reasons means specific facts and circumstances obtained in the case justifying the extreme penalty.

In this case the crime charged was not simply murder of a human being, but it was the crime of assassination of the duly elected Prime Minister of the country. The motive for the crime was not personal, but the consequence of the action taken by the Government in the exercise of constitutional powers and duties. In our democratic republic, no person who is duly constituted shall be eliminated by privy conspiracies. The security guards who were duty-bound to protect the Prime Minister at the cost of their lives, themselves became the assassins. It was a betrayal of the worst order. It was the most foul and senseless assassination. The preparations for execution of this egregious crime do deserve the dread sentence of the law. Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1988) 3 SCC 609: 1988 SCC (Cri) 711: AIR 1988 SC 1883.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: G.L. Oza[1], B.C. Ray[2] and K. Jagannatha Shetty[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 3-8-1988]

[3729] — S. 354(3) — Conviction under TADA Act and S. 302 r/w S. 149 IPC — Death sentence — Award of, if on facts was justified — Whether the instant case falling within the realm of the "rarest of the rare cases" — Caste war — Appellants along with many others, all members of the Maoist Community Centre (MCC), a militant organisation, attacking members of a particular community in a village in Bihar and setting fire to their houses — Murder of 35 persons and injuries sustained by several others as a result of the said gruesome acts — Charge-sheet submitted against 119 accused persons, but only 13 persons put on trial — Designated Court acquitting 4 persons and convicting the remaining 9 — Appellants sentenced to life imprisonment for the offence under S. 302 r/w S. 149 IPC and awarded death sentence for the offence under TADA Act — Affirming the death sentence, held (per majority), where 35 persons were killed in an extremely diabolic, revolting and dastardly manner, the crime affecting the normal tempo of life of the community in locality was not only ghastly but enormous in proportion — Considering the guidelines stated by the Supreme Court regarding the imposition of death penalty, held on facts, it would be a mockery of justice if death sentence is not imposed in the present case — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 r/w S. 149 — TADA, 1987 — S. 3(1)

The appellants, who were members of the Maoist Community Centre (MCC), a militant organisation, came in a group along with other members of MCC and attacked the members of a particular community in a village in Bihar. The accused persons also set fire to the houses of the members of the said community. Several persons were injured in this incident. Some of the villagers were done to death by firearms whereas a vast majority were massacred by slitting their throats with pasuli which resulted in 35 casualties. Upon completion of investigation, charge-sheet was submitted against 119 accused persons, but only 13 persons were put on trial. The Designated Court acquitted 4 accused persons and convicted the remaining accused under Sections 302/149 IPC as well as the TADA Act. The appellants, who were sentenced to death as well as life imprisonment by the Designated Court, submitted that the prosecution had failed to prove the participation of the appellants in the crime by credible evidence. It was further submitted that the benefit of doubt should be given to the appellants as the informant was not examined, as such the FIR cannot be used as substantive evidence. The appellants challenged their conviction and sentence on the grounds (i) that their names were not mentioned in the confessional statement said to be made by co-accused B, (ii) that no incriminating articles had been recovered from the appellants, (iii) that the identification of the appellants was not possible in the dead of night, and (iv) that the appellants were not the assailants, but mere sightseers. It was further contended that in any view of the matter, it was not a fit case for awarding the extreme penalty of death. On the other hand, the State filed the death reference and submitted that the prosecution had succeeded in proving its case and complicity of the appellants in the crime by unimpeachable evidence and there was no infirmity in their convictions. Thus, the State contended that the sentence of death awarded against the appellants was in accordance with law as the present case fell within the ambit of "rarest of the rare cases".

Dismissing the appeal and accepting the death reference,

Held :

Per B.N. Agrawal, J.

In the case of Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, a three-Judge Bench of the Supreme Court following the decision in Bachan Singh observed that in rarest of rare cases when the collective conscience of the community is so shocked that it will expect the holders of the judicial power centre to inflict death penalty irrespective of their personal opinion as regards desirability or otherwise of retaining death penalty, death sentence can be awarded. The community may entertain such a sentiment in the following circumstances:

I. When the murder is committed in an extremely brutal, grotesque, diabolical, revolting or dastardly manner so as to arouse intense and extreme indignation of the community.

II. When the murder is committed for a motive which evinces total depravity and meanness.

III. When murder of a member of a Scheduled Caste or minority community etc. is committed not for personal reasons but in circumstances which arouse social wrath.

IV. When the crime is enormous in proportion.

V. When the victim of murder is (a) an innocent child who could not have or has not provided even an excuse, much less a provocation, for murder, (b) a helpless woman or a person rendered helpless by old age or infirmity, (c) when the victim is a person vis-à-vis whom the murderer is in a position of domination or trust, or (d) when the victim is a public figure generally loved and respected by the community for the services rendered by him and the murder is committed for political or similar reasons other than personal reasons. (Para 42)

The Supreme Court in Machhi Singh case held that where the question of imposing death sentence arises, the following propositions emerge from the case of Bachan Singh:

(i) The extreme penalty of death need not be inflicted except in gravest cases of extreme culpability.

(ii) Before opting for the death penalty the circumstances of the "offender" also require to be taken into consideration along with the circumstances of the "crime".

(iii) Life imprisonment is the rule and death sentence is an exception. In other words death sentence must be imposed only when life imprisonment appears to be an altogether inadequate punishment having regard to the relevant circumstances of the crime, and provided, and only provided, the option to impose sentence of imprisonment for life cannot be conscientiously exercised having regard to the nature and circumstances of the crime and all the relevant circumstances.

(iv) A balance sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances has to be drawn up and in doing so the mitigating circumstances have to be accorded full weightage and a just balance has to be struck between the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances before the option is exercised. (Para 43)

Further, in order to apply the aforesaid guidelines, it was laid down in Machhi Singh case that the following questions may be answered:

(a) Is there something uncommon about the crime which renders sentence of imprisonment for life inadequate and calls for a death sentence?

(b) Are the circumstances of the crime such that there is no alternative but to impose death sentence even after according maximum weightage to the mitigating circumstances which speak in favour of the offender? (Para 44)

From the evidence adduced, it has been amply proved that the accused persons, who belonged to a militant group (Maoist Community Centre), hatched up a conspiracy to massacre members of one particular community in the village in question. Pursuant to the conspiracy hatched up, the militants formed different groups and went to different localities in the village in police uniforms armed with firearms and explosive substances, broke open the doors of houses of members of that particular community, took out the entire family members after tying their hands, had taken some of them to the temple and thereafter to the canal whereas others were directly taken to the canal after tying their hands where their legs were also tied and after surrounding them from all sides, when they were in the most helpless condition and could not take recourse to save their lives, some of them were done to death by firearms but a vast majority were massacred by slitting their throats with pasuli which resulted in 35 casualties and several others were injured including prosecution witnesses. (Para 46)

There cannot be any manner of doubt that the villagers were done to death in an extremely diabolic, revolting and dastardly manner which had affected the normal tempo of life of the community in the locality. The crime in the present case is not only ghastly, but also enormous in proportion as 35 persons, all of whom belonged to one community, were massacred. Thus, after taking into consideration the balance sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances, the court has no doubt in holding that culpability of the accused persons assumes the proportion of extreme depravity that a special reason can legitimately be said to exist within the meaning of Section 354(3) CrPC in the case at hand and it would be a mockery of justice if extreme penalty of death is not imposed. The trial court was quite justified in upholding the convictions of the appellants and awarding the extreme penalty of death, which punishment alone was called for in the facts of the present case. (Para 46)

Per Arijit Pasayat, J. (concurring)

The factual scenario highlighted and established by the prosecution shows how gruesome and macabre acts were perpetrated by the accused persons. Thirty-five people lost their lives and several others have been seriously injured because of caste war. The gruesome acts were diabolic in their conception and cruel in execution. There was deliberate and planned destruction of extensive properties and annihilation of a large number of persons. All this happened on account of caste war. In a country like ours where discrimination on the ground of caste or religion is a taboo, taking lives of persons belonging to another caste or religion is bound to have a dangerous and reactive effect on the society at large. It strikes at the very root of the orderly society which the founding fathers of our Constitution dreamt of. It has been conclusively held that the accused persons were not innocent bystanders or onlookers. Chain of evidence clearly shows what their object was. (Para 52)

The guidelines which emerge from Bachan Singh case have to be applied to the facts of each individual case where the question of imposition of death sentence arises. In the case at hand, in the minimum, guidelines (1) and (4) as laid down in Machhi Singh case are clearly applicable. (Para 53)

The criminal law adheres in general to the principle of proportionality in prescribing liability according to the culpability of each kind of criminal conduct. It ordinarily allows some significant discretion to the Judge in arriving at a sentence in each case, presumably to permit sentences that reflect more subtle considerations of culpability that are raised by the special facts of each case. Punishment ought always to fit with the crime. (Para 54)

In view of the above facts and legal position, the accused-appellants deserve death sentence which has been awarded by the trial court. (Para 55)

Shah, J. (dissenting)

It requires to be stated that this case illustrates how faulty, delayed, casual, unscientific investigation and lapse of long period in trial affects the administration of justice which in turn certainly shakes the public confidence in the system. Is it not possible for the authorities to find out ways and means for speedy, efficient, scientific investigation in at least heinous brutal carnage and for trying the case within a few months of the occurrence? If this is not done, it is of no use to complain that the accused are not punished in such cases. In any case, for deciding such criminal case, it is the bounden duty of the court to appreciate the evidence brought on record, as it is, in accordance with established law without being influenced by the allegations levelled by the prosecuting agency or by the incident. (Para 56)

Having regard to the evidence, it can be stated as under:

(1) The investigation in the present case is totally defective. The investigating officers have not taken any care and caution in recording the statement of witnesses immediately. No identification parade of the accused was held. The investigating officer is not examined.

(2) When the accused are charged with heinous brutal murders punishable to the highest penalty prescribed by the Penal Code, the judicial approach in dealing with such cases has to be cautious, circumspect and careful. In case of defective investigation, the court can rely upon the evidence led by the prosecution and connect the accused with the crime, if found reliable and trustworthy.

(3) In the present case almost all the witnesses have exaggerated to a large extent by naming a number of persons as accused but they could identify only one or two accused. This would clearly reveal that for one or the other reason, witnesses were naming a number of persons as accused who were not known to them or whom they had not seen at the time of incident. In that set of circumstances, their evidence to a large extent becomes doubtful and/or tutored.

(4) Nowhere the witnesses assigned any specific role to the accused, except their presence in the mob at the time of offence.

(5) The witnesses nowhere stated that the identified accused were having any weapon of offence.

(6) Investigating officers have not recovered any weapon of offence or any incriminating article from the possession of any of the accused. (Para 96)

Thus, in view of the aforesaid shortcomings in the investigation and the evidence which only proves the presence of the accused at the scene of offence, this would not be a fit case for imposing the death penalty. (Para 97). Krishna Mochi v. State of Bihar, (2002) 6 SCC 81: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1220: AIR 2002 SC 1965: 2002 Cri LJ 2645.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.B. Shah[3], B.N. Agrawal[1] and Arijit Pasayat[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 15-4-2002]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Ram Deo Chauhan v. State of Assam, (2000) 7 SCC 455: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1392, relied on

Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, applied

[3730] — S. 354(3) — Choice of sentence, death or life imprisonment — Considerations — Delhi riot of 1984 following assassination of Prime Minister of India — Mob attack resulting in death of three persons — Absence of evidence to establish that the death was caused only on account of injuries inflicted by the appellant — Appellant neither leader of the mob nor exhorting others to do any particular act — Murder of several persons having taken place in a chain of events occurring on one night and day the appellant cannot be said to have indulged in criminal activities one after another — Acts attributed to the said mob only the result of temporary frenzy and not any organized systematic activity — Riotous mob not expected to follow high ideals of secularism in such situation — In the circumstances death sentence passed by the trial court and confirmed by the High Court converted to sentence for life imprisonment — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 [Ss. 302/149 and 148]

In the year 1984 a riot in Delhi broke out as a result of assassination of the Prime Minister of India, Mrs Indira Gandhi. The appellant was held responsible as a member of the riotous mob for the death of three persons and, therefore, he was convicted under Sections 148 and 302/149 IPC. The trial court passed sentence of death on the appellant which was confirmed by the High Court. On appeal by special leave reducing the sentence from that of capital punishment to life imprisonment,

Held :

The law is well settled that capital punishment can be imposed in the rarest of the rare cases and if there are any aggravating circumstances such as the accused having any criminal record in the past, the manner of committing the crime, delay in imposing the sentence and so on. It is common experience that when people congregate in crowds, normal defences are lowered so that the crowd instinct assaults on the sense of individuality or transcends one's individual boundaries by offering a release from inhibitions from personal doubts and anxiety. In such a situation, one can well imagine that a member of such a group loses one's self and the normal standard or sense of judgment and reality. The primary motivational factor in the assembly of a violent mob may result in the murder of several persons. Experts in criminology often express that when there is a collective action, as in the case of a mob, there is a diminished individual responsibility unless there are special circumstances to indicate that a particular individual had acted with any predetermination such as by use of a weapon not normally found. If, however, a member of such a crowd picks up an article or a weapon which is close by and joins the mob, either on his own volition or at the instigation of the mob responding to the exhortation of the mob, playing no role of leadership, it can be said that such a person did not intend to commit all the acts which a mob would commit left to himself, but did so under the influence of collective fury. In the instant case though the appellant is stated to be responsible for inflicting certain knife injuries, yet it is not clear whether those injuries of themselves would have been sufficient to result in the death of the deceased. In the absence of any medical evidence in these cases, it has become very difficult to draw any inference as to the injuries inflicted by the appellant. There is no doubt that when an accused person is charged with an offence not only under Section 302 but also read with Section 34 or Section 149 IPC, the culpability of such an accused resulting in the death of the person will not be less than that of homicide amounting to murder. But in the present case the question was whether such culpability was of such a nature which should result in capital punishment to the accused.

Though the appellant had been charged with offences in seven cases and he had been convicted in all those cases, on appeal he had been acquitted in four cases and it is only in three cases that his conviction has been affirmed. Therefore, the basis upon which the Sessions Court concluded that he had been convicted in a number of cases, thereby indicating that the appellant is a hard-boiled criminal, may not stand to reason. On the other hand, what could be seen is that all these killings had taken place in a chain of events occurring on one night and day and, therefore, pertained to one incident. Looked from that angle, it could not be stated that the appellant was indulging in criminal activities one after another. None of the witnesses has stated that the appellant was the leader of the mob or he exhorted the members thereof to do any particular act. His role appears was only as a member of the mob.

It is no doubt true that the high ideals of the Constitution have to be borne in mind, but when normal life breaks down and groups of people go berserk losing balance of mind, the rationale that the ideals of the Constitution should be upheld or followed, may not appeal to them in such circumstances, nor can one expect such loose heterogeneous group of persons like a mob to be alive to such high ideals. Therefore, to import the ideas of idealism to a mob in such a situation may not be realistic. It is no doubt true that courts must be alive and in tune with the notions prevalent in the society and punishment imposed upon an accused must be commensurate with the heinousness of the crime.

The acts attributed to the mob of which the appellant was a member at the relevant time cannot be stated to be a result of any organized systematic activity leading to genocide. To the extent there was unlawful assembly and to the extent that the mob wanted to teach a stern lesson to the Sikhs, there was some organisation; but in that design, that they did not consider that women and children should be annihilated which is a redeeming feature. When an amorphous group of persons come together, it cannot be said that they indulge in any systematic or organized activity. Such group may indulge in activities and may remain cohesive only for a temporary period and thereafter would disintegrate. The acts of the mob of which the appellant was a member cannot be stated to be the result of any organisation or any group indulging in violent activities formed with any purpose or scheme so as to call an organised activity. The acts of the mob of which the appellant was a member was only the result of a temporary frenzy. He did not play the role of a leader of the mob.

On totality of circumstances this is not a case where the courts below should have imposed capital punishment. Therefore, the sentence reduced from that of capital punishment to life imprisonment. Kishori v. State of Delhi, (1999) 1 SCC 148: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1: AIR 1999 SC 382.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S. Rajendra Babu, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-12-1998]

[Ed.: In the realm of grave and sudden provocation it has been held by the Supreme Court in the celebrated case of K.M. Nanavati, AIR 1962 SC 605 that such a defence would not be available if the accused had "sufficient time to regain self-control" or "after the passion had cooled down by lapse of time, or otherwise giving room and scope for premeditation and calculation". [See also (1972) 4 SCC 819 where accused was held to have got sufficient time to cool down while fetching his gun a furlong away.] Should not a similar consideration of opportunity for tempers to cool down or realization of acts done or being done be applied to actions done out of mob frenzy or mob fury. Here the "killing had taken place in a chain of events occurring on one night and day". Was it really one long continuous incident where the accused participant never attended to calls of nature of hunger or ablution, etc. and never got a moment with himself to regain self-control? The Court itself has recognized (para 13) that such amorphous group of persons "may remain cohesive only for a temporary period and thereafter disintegrate". So, on facts, if there was any opportunity to further plan the attacks or arm oneself for further acts of violence, would it be justified to extend to such further acts the cover of acts done out of mob frenzy or mob fury. Mob violence is on the increase throughout the country and can be easily activated even on misplaced notions of propriety or public morality or for perceived attack upon cultural values or religious sentiments. It would be unfortunate if this ruling serves as a precedent to mitigate offences committed by such mobs.]

[3731] — S. 354(3) — Choice of sentence, death or life imprisonment — Principles restated — Rarest of rare cases — Appellant amputating hand of the deceased, severing his head from the body, carrying it through the road to the police station by holding it in one hand and the blood-dripping weapon in the other hand — Held, in the circumstances, case falls within the category of rarest of rare cases — In view of aggravating circumstances of the case the fact that the appellant was a young man having three unmarried sisters and aged parents would not justify lesser punishment — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The deceased was taking his morning cup of tea on the corner tea stall of the road. The appellant arrived at the scene with a sword-like weapon and with it dealt blows on the deceased who fell down on the ground. The appellant amputated the right hand and thereafter severed the head of the deceased. With the head of the deceased in one hand and the blood-dripping weapon in the other hand, he moved majestically towards the Police Outpost. The trial Judge sentenced the appellant to death which was confirmed by the High Court. Dismissing the appeal by special leave

Held :

On conviction under Section 302 IPC the normal rule is to award punishment of life imprisonment and the punishment of death should be reserved only for the rarest of rare cases. Whether a case falls within "the rarest of rare" cases has to be examined with reference to the facts and circumstances of each case. The court has to take note of the aggravating as well as the mitigating circumstances and conclude whether there was something uncommon about the crime which renders the sentence of imprisonment for life inadequate and calls for a death sentence. The court is also expected to consider whether the circumstances of the crime are such that there is no alternative but to impose death sentence after according maximum weightage to the mitigating circumstances which speak in favour of the offender. (Para 8)

In the instant case the murder committed was extremely gruesome, heinous, cold-blooded and cruel. The manner in which the murder was committed was atrocious and shocking. After giving blows with a sword to the deceased when he fell down the appellant amputated his hand, severed his head from the body, carried it through the road to the police station by holding it in one hand and the blood-dripping weapon in the other hand. This depict the extreme depravity of the appellant. (Para 14)

It was contended that the appellant is a young man of 33 years and is having three unmarried sisters and aged parents and he was not well at that time. These circumstances when weighed against the aggravating circumstances leave one in no doubt that this case falls within the category of rarest of rare cases. The trial court has correctly applied the principles in awarding the death sentence and the High Court has committed no error of law in confirming the same. (Para 15). Mahendra Nath Das v. State of Assam, (1999) 5 SCC 102: 1999 SCC (Cri) 664: AIR 1999 SC 1926: 1999 Cri LJ 2873.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.S.M. Quadri and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-5-1999]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681; Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1988) 3 SCC 609: 1988 SCC (Cri) 711; Shankar v. State of T.N., (1994) 4 SCC 478: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1252; Govindaswami v. State of T.N., (1998) 4 SCC 531: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1092, followed

Raja Ram Yadav v. State of Bihar, (1996) 9 SCC 287: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1004; Ronny v. State of Maharashtra, (1998) 3 SCC 625: 1998 SCC (Cri) 859; State of H.P. v. Manohar Singh Thakur, (1998) 6 SCC 158: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1426; Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490, distinguished [3732] — S. 354(3) — Consideration in award of sentence — Individualisation of sentence where more than one accused involved. Shobhit Chamar v. State of Bihar, (1998) 3 SCC 455: 1998 SCC (Cri) 790: AIR 1998 SC 1693.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-3-1998]

[3733] — S. 354(3) — Death caused while suffering under a hallucination — Case based on circumstantial evidence — Nature and extent of injuries not known — Special reasons for the award of death sentence being absent, death penalty commuted to life imprisonment. Ashok Laxman Sohoni v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 2 SCC 103: 1977 SCC (Cri) 243: AIR 1977 SC 1319: 1977 Cri LJ 829.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-2-1977]

[3734] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Double murder by a matured man of 60 years of his daughter and son-in-law living with him — Blows inflicted by axe on vital parts of body with such a great intensity that head almost severed from trunk — Murders not only pre-planned and coldblooded but acts of treachery of worst kind — High Court cannot be held to have erred in taking the view that there were special reasons which it had recorded for imposing death sentence. Rau Chima Chougule v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 4 SCC 518: 1977 SCC (Cri) 651: AIR 1977 SC 2407: 1978 Cri LJ 14.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.K. Goswami, P.N. Shinghal and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-9-1977]

[3735] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Mitigating circumstances — Expectation of survival entertained by convict after High Court altered sentence of death awarded by trial court to that of life imprisonment — Held, such expectation cannot be a mitigating factor to interfere in State's appeal before Supreme Court for enhancement of sentence, if such enhancement on facts is called for — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

There is no legal basis for the argument that after the High Court refused to confirm the death sentence, the respondents have entertained a just expectation of survival and, therefore, the Supreme Court should not interfere with the said judgment. In a judicial system like ours where there is a hierarchy of courts, the possibility of reversal of judgments is inevitable; therefore, expectations of an accused cannot be a mitigating factor to interfere in an appeal for enhancement of sentence if the same is otherwise called for in law. (Para 25). State of U.P. v. Dharmendra Singh, (1999) 8 SCC 325: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1425: AIR 1999 SC 3789.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.S.M. Quadri and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-9-1999]

Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, (1988) 4 SCC 574: 1989 SCC (Cri) 25, relied on

Ronny v. State of Maharashtra, (1998) 3 SCC 625: 1998 SCC (Cri) 859, distinguished

[3736] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Rarest of rare cases — Sentence — Death sentence — When not justified — Brutality not the sole criterion for awarding capital punishment — Murder of four persons of a family by four assailants which included two ladies — Incidents between the members of the two rival families happening on earlier occasions also indicating the intensity of the bitterness which prevailed between them — Attacks and counter-attacks between them being frequent events during the preceding days — Six days before the occurrence a young female member of accused family attacked by two elderly persons of the deceased family — Held, in the circumstances of the case, death sentence not justified — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34

Brutality of the manner in which a murder was perpetrated may be a ground but not the sole criterion for judging whether the case is one of the "rarest of rare cases". In a way, every murder is brutal, and the difference between one from the other may be on account of mitigating or aggravating features surrounding the murder.

In the instant case the incidents which happened on earlier occasions between members of the two rival families are indicative of the intensity of the bitterness which prevailed between them. It was a thirst for retaliation which became the motivating factor. Attacks and counter-attacks between them were frequent events during the preceding days. Six days before the occurrence, two elderly persons of the deceased family attacked a young female member of the accused family. The brutality with which the murders were committed by the assailants which include two ladies makes one think that more skirmishes would have happened prior to the incident which would have escalated the simmering thirst for vengeance to reach a boiling point.

Therefore, this case cannot be treated as one of the "rarest of rare cases" where the lesser sentence is not at all adequate. Panchhi v. State of U.P., (1998) 7 SCC 177: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1561: AIR 1998 SC 2726.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, C.J. and K.T. Thomas and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-8-1998]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681; Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 5: 1989 SCC (Cri) 490, followed

[3737] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Rarest of rare cases — Aggravating factors — Murder of wife and 2 children and causing grievous injuries to the remaining 3 children in the course of attempt to kill them — Accused causing 64 injuries to all the 6 persons — Absence of provocation or any quarrel between the accused and his wife or among any one of the family members — Manner of committing crime indicating that it was a premeditated one and not on account of sudden provocation or any mental derangement — Offence committed by the accused found to be gruesome, cold-blooded, heinous, atrocious and cruel — Held, there being no mitigating circumstances but only aggravating circumstances capital sentence justified — Penology — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The accused, his wife and all the five children took their dinner together before going to bed and had also viewed the programme on the television. The accused along with his family members slept in a room. At about 12 midnight or 1 a.m. the accused started to kill his wife with the help of a sword and on hearing the shoutings the children woke up. The wife questioned the accused why he was trying to kill her and the accused without giving any answer inflicted more injuries on her head, hand and foot. By that time, the eldest daughter tried to save her mother and instead of leaving his wife from attack, he started inflicting wounds on his first daughter with the same sword. Not satisfied with that, he also inflicted injuries with the same sword to another daughter and finding that the sword he had used had been bent, he left that sword and took out another big sword, kept in a box in the room, and with the help of the second sword, he inflicted injuries to the other children. All the injured persons fell down; the wife and two children succumbed to the injuries and the other three children escaped death. The accused after committing the crime confessed to a witness: "I had slaughtered all of them, how the three left alive?". The above attitude of the accused clearly revealed that he had caused injuries with a view to liquidate all the members of his family and he was not happy to find that in spite of his act his three children had escaped from death.

The accused had caused in all 64 sword injuries to all the six persons including the three deceased persons and those injuries speak for themselves about the gruesome nature of the crime committed by the accused. There was no provocation and there is nothing to suggest that there was any quarrel between the accused and his wife or among any one of the family members. The way in which the crime was executed clearly shows that it was a premeditated one and not on account of sudden provocation or any "mental derangement". The motive suggested in the course of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses is also not helpful to the accused inasmuch as he has pleaded alibi in his statement (under Section 313 CrPC) and that has also been taken note of by the trial court as well as by the High Court. The crime indulged by the accused is undoubtedly gruesome, cold-blooded, heinous, atrocious and cruel. On the facts established on the record, there appears to be no mitigating circumstances whatsoever, but only aggravating circumstances which justify the imposition of death sentence. Looking into the manner in which the crime was committed, the weapon used, the brutality of the crime, number of persons murdered and the helplessness of the victims there can be no any other conclusion except the one, the Sessions Judge and the High Court arrived at to award the capital sentence to the accused. Umashankar Panda v. State of M.P., (1996) 8 SCC 110: 1996 SCC (Cri) 543: AIR 1996 SC 3011.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and K. Venkataswami, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-2-1996]

[3738] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Rarest of the rare cases — Murder of 5 persons, an old man of 75 years, a woman aged 32 years, two boys aged 12 years and a girl aged 15 years, at night when they were asleep by inflicting multiple injuries to wreak vengeance — Lower part of the body of the girl denuded — Held, the ghastly and barbaric murder can be termed as rarest of the rare cases — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302. State of U.P. v. Dharmendra Singh, (1999) 8 SCC 325: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1425: AIR 1999 SC 3789.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.S.M. Quadri and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-9-1999]

Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, (1988) 4 SCC 574: 1989 SCC (Cri) 25, relied on

Ronny v. State of Maharashtra, (1998) 3 SCC 625: 1998 SCC (Cri) 859, distinguished

Dharmendra Singh v. State of U.P., 1998 All LJ 477, reversed

[3739] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Special reasons — Rarest of the rare case — Determination of, on facts — Rape, murder and robbery committed in a cold-blooded and pre-planned way — All the three inmates of the house viz. husband, wife and their son aged 17 years brutally murdered by throttling after committing rape on the lady aged over 45 years and the ornaments and valuables looted by three appellants, one of them (A-1) being a close relative (nephew) — Mitigating and aggravating circumstances considered — From the facts and circumstances of the case what particular role was played by each of the appellants and whose case fell with the rarest of the rare category not ascertainable — Possibility of reform and rehabilitation cannot be ruled out — In the circumstances held, sentence of death should be reduced to sentence of life imprisonment — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

With regard to the quantum of punishment to be awarded to persons found guilty of offences dealt with in the Indian Penal Code, the scheme of the Code is that it confers a wide discretion on the court in the matter of awarding appropriate punishment by prescribing the maximum punishment and in some cases both the maximum as well as the minimum punishment for the offence. Though no general guidelines are laid down in the Code for the purpose of awarding punishment, generally the judicial discretion of the court is guided by the principle that the punishment should be commensurate with the gravity of the offence having regard to the aggravating and mitigating circumstances vis-à-vis an accused in each case. The obligation of the court in making the choice of death sentence for the person who is found guilty of murder is onerous indeed. But by sentencing a person to death, the court is giving effect to the command of law which is in public interest whereas in committing the murder or being privy to commit murder, even if it be a vengeance for another murder, the convict is violating the law which is against public interest. However, on the question of awarding the sentence for the offences for which life imprisonment as well as the death sentence is prescribed, sub-section (3) of Section 354 CrPC enjoins that in the case of sentence of death, special reasons for such sentence shall be stated. Whether the case is one of the rarest of the rare cases is a question which has to be determined on the facts of each case. The choice of the death sentence has to be made only in the rarest of the rare cases and where culpability of the accused has assumed depravity or where the accused is found to be an ardent criminal and menace to the society and; where the crime is committed in an organised manner and is gruesome, cold-blooded, heinous and atrocious; where innocent and unarmed persons are attacked and murdered without any provocation, the case would present special reason for purposes of sub-section (3) of Section 354 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In the present case the mitigating circumstances in favour of the appellants are that A-1 is a qualified civil engineer and a married person having a son of four years' old, his parents are serving at Spiritual Life Centre, Narsapur for the last thirty-six years; A-2 is "Thaneshri" and "Vasaishri", titles conferred on him for his body-building; his marriage is a love marriage performed against the will of his parents as well as the volition of the parents of the wife and there is nobody to look after his wife and their two daughters and two sons of whom one is 1 1/2 years' old; A-3 pleaded that he is having a sick father and that he is only 27 years' old and an unmarried person. They are having no adverse antecedents in the sense of being habitual criminals. The aggravating circumstances are that A-1 is no other than the nephew (sister's son) of the deceased. Because of the relationship he gained access inside the house for himself and for his friends; they enjoyed the hospitality of the deceaseds' family as it was found that there were five used plates in the sink which indicate that the five had food; maybe, all the three appellants and the couple or two of them. The victims were unarmed; the heinous crime was committed for gain, namely to rob the valuables of the deceaseds' family; to give effect to their nefarious plans the unholy alliance of the appellants not merely robbed the family of valuables but killed all the three members of the family then in the house and above all committed sexual assault on the lady. It cannot but be a dastardly act for A-1 to commit rape on the lady who is none other than the wife of his maternal uncle and perhaps as old as his mother.

Considering the cumulative effect of all the factors, it cannot be said that the offences were committed under the influence of extreme mental or emotional disturbance for the whole thing was done in a pre-planned way; having regard to the nature of offences and circumstances in which they were committed, it is not possible for the Court to predict that the appellant would not commit criminal act of violence or would not be a threat to the society. A-1 is 35 years' old, A-2 is 35 years' old and A-3 is 27 years' old. The appellants cannot be said to be too young or too old. The possibility of reform and rehabilitation, however, cannot be ruled out. From the facts and circumstances, it is not possible to predict as to who among the three played which part. It may be that the role of one has been more culpable in degree than that of the others and vice versa. Where in a case like this it is not possible to say as to whose case falls within the "rarest of the rare" cases, it would serve the ends of justice if the capital punishment is commuted into life imprisonment. Accordingly, the sentence awarded by the courts below under Section 302 read with Section 34 is modified from death to life imprisonment. The sentences for the offences for which the appellants are convicted, except under Section 376(2)(g) IPC, shall run concurrently; they shall serve sentence under Section 376(2)(g) IPC consecutively, after serving sentence for the other offences. Ronny v. State of Maharashtra, (1998) 3 SCC 625: 1998 SCC (Cri) 859: AIR 1998 SC 1251.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-3-1998]

[3740] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — Trial court giving cogent reasons for awarding sentence of death — High Court while agreeing with those reasons reducing the sentence to that of life imprisonment on ground that the convicts were languishing in death cell for more than 3 years — Held, High Court erred both in law and in fact in doing so — There is no law which entitles a convict to commutation of death sentence if he is in custody for 3 years or more — Factually also the convicts were not in death cell for 3 years or more — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The complainant had purchased a part of the family house and some other land belonging to the family of Respondent 1 from the latter's grandfather and started living with his family in that part of the residential building. Respondent 1 resented this purchase as he himself was intending to purchase the same. Respondent 2, then a student of LLB. was harbouring evil designs on the complainant's niece aged about 15 years who was also residing there and in furtherance thereof he was constantly teasing her when she used to be on her way to school. It is stated by the prosecution that in order to fulfil his lust, about 4-5 days prior to the occurrence, he had tried to molest her and also threatened her with dire consequences should she dare to complain against him. It is stated that in spite of the threat the girl did complain to her uncle, the complainant, about the misdemeanours of Respondent 2 as a sequel to which the complainant and his nephew gave a thrashing to him. In this background of hatred entertained by the two respondents for their own causes they along with their four friends caused death of 5 members of the family — an old man aged 75 years, a woman aged 32, two boys aged 12 years and the said girl aged 15 years — at about 3 a.m. in the night while they were asleep by inflicting multiple (53) injuries on them. They also denuded the lower part of the body of the said girl. The Sessions Judge on considering the material placed by the prosecution before him, came to the conclusion that the prosecution had proved the charges against the accused persons and held them guilty of the said charges, and while convicting the said persons awarded life sentence in regard to the 4 accused persons, the friends of the respondents. But the Sessions Judge held that the respondents committed a crime which could be termed as "rarest of the rare cases" and hence after assigning reasons awarded them death sentence. In appeal the High Court upheld the conviction of all the accused persons and while confirming the sentence awarded on the other accused persons, came to the conclusion that the sentence of death was not called for in view of the fact that the two respondents were languishing in the death cell since 3-6-1994 and 28-5-1994 respectively which is for a period of more than 3 years and consequently, reduced the sentence to that of imprisonment for life. Against the judgment of the High Court confirming the conviction and awarding of sentence, the accused had preferred SLPs before the Supreme Court which came to be dismissed on 23-1-1998. Against the order of the High Court refusing to confirm the sentence of death awarded to the respondents herein, the State preferred the present appeals and the complainant also preferred a companion petition. On the other hand, on behalf of the respondents it was contended that this is not a fit case even for conviction; much less a case for extreme penalty of death. It was contended that both the courts below had based the conviction on conjectures and surmises against all probabilities. At any rate, the prosecution has failed to establish who amongst the 6 accused persons had actually dealt the blows i.e. individual overt acts have not been established. Therefore, even if the conviction is to be upheld, capital punishment should not be granted. It was also argued that even otherwise the facts of the case do not warrant imposition of death sentence and these two respondents having reconciled themselves to the judgment of the High Court, have an expectation of survival and which expectation of theirs should not be destroyed. Limited question for consideration in the present appeals was whether it is a case which could be termed as rarest of the rare cases so as to invoke the extreme penalty of death.

Allowing the appeals of the State,

Held :

In refusing to confirm the sentence of death awarded by the trial court the High Court erred in its conclusion both factually as well as inferentially. First of all these respondents were not in the death cell for 3 years nor is there a law which says that a person in the death cell for 3 years ipso facto is entitled to commutation of death sentence. While it is true that prolonged trial or execution of the death sentence beyond all reasonable period may be a ground for commuting the death sentence in a given case, it will be highly erroneous to lay down as a principle in law or draw an inference on the fact that awarding of death sentence is improper in cases where the accused persons are in custody for 3 years or more, even though the facts of the case otherwise call for a death sentence. If the view taken by the High Court in this case is to be accepted as a correct principle then practically in no murder case death sentence can be awarded, since in this country normally a murder trial and confirmation of death sentence takes more than 3 years. (Para 16)

The Supreme Court would not ordinarily interfere in the sentence unless there is any illegality or it involves any question of principle. Further, the question of sentence is a matter of discretion and that it is well settled that when discretion has been properly exercised along accepted judicial lines, an appellate court should not interfere to the detriment of an accused except for very strong and cogent reasons. The basis of the High Court's judgment to the extent that it has refused to confirm the death sentence awarded by the trial court is factually incorrect and opposed to accepted legal principles. Consequently, it has failed to exercise its discretion along accepted judicial lines. (Para 17)

The trial court has given cogent reasons for awarding the extreme penalty of death in regard to these respondents. The High Court has, as a matter of fact, concurred with the conclusions arrived at by the trial court in this regard. It is not possible to accept the argument that the findings of the courts below even in regard to the commission of the offence, are contrary to facts and hence at least, in regard to the awarding of sentence, the Supreme Court should not interfere in these appeals. So far as the commission of the offence is concerned, the special leave petition filed by the respondents was dismissed by this Court and the findings of the courts below have become final. (Paras 19 and 21)

The case of the prosecution shows that these two persons (respondents) in furtherance of their diabolic motive conspired to teach a lesson to the complainant by killing such of those members of the family who were vulnerable and helpless. This is clear from the timing of the attack which was when other able members of the family were away from the house and only the aged and the weak remained alone in the house. Also the fact that they solicited the help of four of their friends (other accused) shows that the intention was to kill as many members of the complainant family as possible, irrespective of the fact whether the victims were the cause of their vengeance or not. The ghastly manner of attack on the deceased, which is evident from the post-mortem report, shows that the act in question was premeditated, senseless, dastardly and beyond all human reasoning inasmuch as 53 wounds were inflicted on the 5 deceased persons; each one suffering at least 10 wounds on an average. The attacks were aimed at such parts of the body in succession where even a single stab would have, in the ordinary course, sufficed to cause death. The denuding of the lower part of the body of the girl showed an element of perversity which could be attributed to the mind of frustrated men who totally lacked human sensitivity. A holistic examination of the material on record shows that the barbaric offence in question could only be termed as a "rarest of the rare" case. (Para 22)

There is no legal basis for the argument that after the High Court refused to confirm the death sentence, the respondents have entertained a just expectation of survival and, therefore, the Supreme Court should not interfere with the said judgment. In a judicial system like ours where there is a hierarchy of courts, the possibility of reversal of judgments is inevitable; therefore, expectations of an accused cannot be a mitigating factor to interfere in an appeal for enhancement of sentence if the same is otherwise called for in law. (Para 25)

Taking into consideration the brutality of the attack, the number of persons murdered, the age and infirmity of the victims, their vulnerability and the diabolic motive, acts of perversion on the person of the girl, cumulatively the sentence awarded by the trial court was just and proper. On examination of the case carefully and giving anxious thought to the facts, it must be held that there are no mitigating circumstances in favour of the respondents herein. (Para 26). State of U.P. v. Dharmendra Singh, (1999) 8 SCC 325: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1425: AIR 1999 SC 3789.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.S.M. Quadri and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-9-1999]

Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, (1988) 4 SCC 574: 1989 SCC (Cri) 25, relied on

Ronny v. State of Maharashtra, (1998) 3 SCC 625: 1998 SCC (Cri) 859, distinguished

Dharmendra Singh v. State of U.P., 1998 All LJ 477, reversed

[3741] — Ss. 354(3), 377 and 386 — Supreme Court would not ordinarily interfere in the sentence unless there are very strong reasons, there is any illegality or it involves any question of principle — Constitution of India — Art. 136. State of U.P. v. Dharmendra Singh, (1999) 8 SCC 325: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1425: AIR 1999 SC 3789.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.S.M. Quadri and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-9-1999]

[3742] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — When called for — Factors to be considered — Murders of innocent boys committed for gain as a means of living — Held on facts, death sentence justified

The accused indulged in illegal business of purchase and sale of ganja. They conspired to entice innocent boys from affluent families, took them to far flung places where the dead body could not be identified. Letters were written to the parents purporting to be by the deceased to delude the parents that the missing boys would one day come home alive and that they would not give any report to the police and the crime would go undetected. Four murders in a span of five years were committed for gain in cold-blooded, premeditated and planned way. One of the deceased was the nephew (elder sister's son) of the first accused. In each case the Sessions Court convicted the accused persons under Ss. 120-B, 364, 392 r/w S. 397; S. 302 r/w S. 34 IPC and sentenced them to death. The High Court confirmed the conviction and sentence of the appellants. Dismissing the appeals of the accused

Held :

There is no infirmity in the sentence awarded by the Sessions Court and confirmed by the High Court warranting interference. The facts would establish depravity and hardened criminality of the accused. No regard for precious lives of innocent young boys was shown. They adopted the crime of murder for gain as a means of living. The compassionate grounds such as the accused are youngmen and breadwinners of their family consisting of a young wife, minor child and aged parents would always be present in most cases and are not relevant for interference. (Paras 12 and 11). Sevaka Perumal v. State of T.N., (1991) 3 SCC 471: 1991 SCC (Cri) 724: AIR 1991 SC 1463: 1991 Cri LJ 1845.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.C. Ray and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-5-1991]

[3743] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — When not called for — Whether a rarest of the rare cases — Mob violence — Breaking open the house and cutting the deceased into pieces — Acts attributed by the prosecution to the accused-appellants not any different from rest of the accused persons — Held, murder, as it is, is though liable for the sentence befitting the crime, but the present case cannot be brought under the maxim "rarest of the rare cases" so as to award death sentence — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 (Paras 14 and 15). Ramji Rai v. State of Bihar, (1999) 8 SCC 389: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1446: AIR 1999 SC 3857.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-10-1999]

[3744] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence — When not justified — Dacoity — Death of 4 persons — Appellants, armed with firearms, remaining outside the house and causing death of two persons outside the house — Occurrence taking place more then a decade ago — Held, death sentence not warranted

The two appellants who are alleged to be armed with firearms, did not even enter the house to commit the dacoity and remained outside the house and caused the death of two persons outside the house, it was only the other accused persons who went inside the house differently armed, the number of injuries inflicted by them on the deceased inside the house and the weapons used in causing those injuries, while committing dacoity and not keeping or using the firearms, which were otherwise available, it is not possible to say that it is the "rarest of the rare cases" which may warrant the imposition of the sentence of death for the occurrence which occurred more than a decade ago. Brij Mohan v. State of Rajasthan, (1994) 1 SCC 413: 1994 SCC (Cri) 527: AIR 1994 SC 739: 1994 Cri LJ 922: (1994) 1 Crimes 288.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-12-1993]

[3745] — S. 354(3) — Death sentence whether in circumstances proper — High Court confirming death sentence on ground that accused a professional hired killer — Held, on facts no evidence on record to justify findings of trial court as confirmed by High Court — Not a case in the 'rarest of rare' category — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302. Bullu Das v. State of Bihar, (1998) 8 SCC 130.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-11-1998]

[3746] — S. 354(3) — Deviation from normal rule of sentence of life imprisonment if justified — Young college-going boy and the only male member of the family murdered — Considering the factors of unrest prevailing in the mind of the accused, on being despised due to his low social status and probability of an altercation taking place between the accused and the deceased before the murder, held, confirmation of death sentence not justified — Hence sentence reduced to life imprisonment — Penology. Dudh Nath Pandey v. State of U.P., (1981) 2 SCC 166: 1981 SCC (Cri) 379: AIR 1981 SC 911: (1981) 2 SCR 771: 1981 Cri LJ 618: 1981 ALJ 228.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and A.P. Sen, J. [Date of decision: 11-2-1981]

[3747] — S. 354(3) — Family dispute over property — Death caused of five unarmed persons by the three accused — "Special reasons" existed on facts to justify death sentence — However on facts the sentence of one appellant deserved to be commuted to life imprisonment. Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 4 SCC 332: 1979 SCC (Cri) 968: AIR 1979 SC 1173: 1979 Cri LJ 700.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N.L. Untwalia and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-1-1979]

[3748] — S. 354(3) — Special reasons for death sentence — Absence of — Death sentence — Commutation of — Murder of wife and her two children by the husband and his friend — Motive being to grab the property — Murder not proved to have been committed in a cold-blooded manner — Absence of evidence to show how the murder had taken place — In the absence of such evidence, the case does not fall within the category of rarest of rare cases — Death sentence commuted to life imprisonment — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34

Under sub-section (3) of Section 354 CrPC when the conviction is for an offence punishable with death or in the alternative, with an imprisonment for life, the Court is required to state reasons for sentence awarded, and in case of sentence of death, the special reasons for such sentence are to be given. Thus, under the provisions of Code of Criminal Procedure, life imprisonment for the offence of murder is the rule and death sentence is an exception to be resorted to for special reasons to be recorded by the Court.

In the instant case the special reasons given by the trial court in awarding death sentence to the appellants and confirmed by the High Court, were that it was such a cruel act where the appellants have not even spared the innocent child and the motive being to grab the property. It was not pointed out by the prosecution that it was a cold-blooded murder. There is nothing on record to show how the murder has taken place. In the absence of such evidence, the case does not fall within the category of rarest of rare cases. Sk. Abdul Hamid v. State of M.P., (1998) 3 SCC 188: 1998 SCC (Cri) 726: AIR 1998 SC 942.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.T. Nanavati and V.N. Khare, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-2-1998]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, followed

[3749] — Ss. 354(3), 366 and 368 — Award of death sentence — Whether the present case was one of the rarest of the rare cases warranting death sentence — Wife, along with her husband, murdering not only her stepbrother and his whole family including three tiny tots of 45 days, 2½ years and 4 years, but also her own father, mother and sister so as to deprive her father from giving property to her stepbrother and his family — Murders committed in a cruel and diabolic manner while victims were sleeping, without any provocation from victims' side — This indicating cold- blooded and premeditated approach of accused to cause death of victims — Accused not possessing basic humanness and completely lacking the psyche or mindset amenable to any reformation — Their act was revolting and dastardly — Hence held, the present case clearly fell within the category of the rarest of the rare cases — High Court was not justified in commuting death sentence to life imprisonment — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

Accused SA and her husband SJ were tried and convicted in relation to various offences including murder. The accused were sentenced to death. The order of convictions and sentences gave rise to a murder reference by the trial court. Appeals were preferred by SA and SJ before the High Court. By the impugned judgment, while upholding their convictions under Section 302 read with Section 34 and Section 120-B IPC and other provisions, the High Court commuted the sentence of death to life imprisonment. Hence these appeals by special leave.

Before the Supreme Court, two appeals were preferred on behalf of the prosecution for enhancement of sentence from life imprisonment to death and one appeal was filed by the accused assailing the impugned judgment of their convictions and sentences.

Dismissing the appeal filed by the accused persons but allowing the appeals preferred by the prosecution,

Held :

The accused SA, along with the accused SJ (her husband) has not only put an end to the lives of her stepbrother and his whole family, which included three tiny tots of 45 days, 2 1/2 years and 4 years, but also her own father, mother and sister in a very diabolic manner so as to deprive her father from giving the property to her stepbrother and his family. The fact that murders in question were committed in such a diabolic manner while the victims were sleeping, without any provocation whatsoever from the victims' side indicates the cold-blooded and premeditated approach of the accused to cause death of the victims. The brutality of the act is amplified by the grotesque and revolting manner in which the helpless victims have been murdered which is indicative of the fact that the act was diabolic of the most superlative degree in conception and cruel in execution and that both the accused persons are not possessed of the basic humanness and completely lack the psyche or mindset which can be amenable to any reformation. If this act is not revolting or dastardly, it is beyond comprehension as to what other act can be so. In view of these facts, there would be failure of justice in case death sentence is not awarded in the present case as the same undoubtedly falls within the category of the rarest of the rare cases and the High Court was not justified in commuting death sentence to life imprisonment. (Para 66). Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 1: AIR 2007 SC 1218: 2007 Cri LJ 1642.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Agrawal and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-2-2007]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, followed

[3750] — Ss. 354(3), 366 and 368 — Death sentence — Award of — When warranted — "The rarest of the rare" case — Multiple murders — Brutal execution — Murder of defenceless children — Accused not amenable to reformation, inferred from facts — Accused brutally murdering three innocent defenceless children aged 8, 15 and 16 years and causing injuries to all other helpless inmates of the house — Accused staying as a paying guest (for a sum of Rs 500 for food and meals) for a continuous period of 4 years — No provocation or reason for committing this ghastly act at a time when children would have been sleeping and would not have been in a position to defend themselves — Medical evidence indicating brutality — Several incised wounds (muscle-deep or bone-deep) were caused to the deceased persons — Considering the brutality, diabolic, inhuman nature and enormity of the crime (i.e. multiple murders and attacks), held, the mindset of the accused could not be said to be amenable to any reformation — Therefore, it came under the rarest of rare case where not awarding a death sentence would have caused a failure of justice — Death penalty confirmed

The appellant-accused was charged under Section 302 of the Penal Code, 1860 (IPC) for committing the murder of informant's son D, aged about 16 years, daughter K, aged about 15 years and niece P, aged about 8 years, and further under Section 307 IPC for attempting to commit the murder of the informant (PW 3) and his wife (PW 2). The Sessions Court found him guilty of the offence under Section 302 IPC and sentenced him to death. He was also found guilty of the offence under Section 307 IPC. The High Court accepted the death reference and dismissed the appeal filed by the appellant-accused.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

The case falls in the category of the rarest of rare cases. The Sessions Court and the High Court were justified in imposing death sentence on the appellant-accused. There would be failure of justice in case death sentence is not awarded in the present case. The enormity of the crime is writ large. The appellant-accused caused multiple murders and attacked three witnesses. The brutality of the act was amplified by the manner in which the attacks had been made on all the inmates of the house in which the helpless victims had been murdered, which was indicative of the fact that the act was diabolic of the superlative degree in conception and cruel in execution and did not fall within any comprehension of the basic humanness which indicates the mindset which could not be said to be amenable to any reformation. The appellant-accused was living as a family member of PW 3 and PW 2 and was provided with shelter and meals, although for a sum of Rs 500 per month, being a friend of PW 1. He lived with the family not for a month or two, but for a continuous period of four years. There does not appear to be any apparent provocation or reason for committing the ghastly brutal murder of three innocent defenceless children who were aged 8, 15 and 16 years. It can safely be assumed that the time at which the incident happened, the children must have been asleep and were not in a position to defend themselves. It came in the evidence of PW 1, PW 2 and PW 3 that the appellant-accused had assaulted them when they were running here and there to save themselves. The medical evidence led by the prosecution indicates the brutality in the commission of crime. Several incised wounds (muscle-deep and bone-deep) were caused to the deceased persons. The victims apparently did not have any weapon with them. (Paras 28, 27 and 26)

The statements of PWs 1, 2 & 3 fully prove the guilt of the appellant-accused in the commission of murder of three persons and causing grievous injuries to the witnesses. These statements implicating the appellant-accused in the commission of crime and the injuries caused to them and the deceased persons were fully supported by the medical evidence. PW 1, PW 2 and PW 3 having been the residents of the same house, their presence at the place of occurrence in the dead hours of night and they having witnessed the incident, could not be ruled out. These witnesses were close and direct relations of the deceased children and, therefore, implicating a false person, leaving out the actual culprit, was highly improbable and unacceptable. These witnesses corroborated each other in the material particulars and the manner in which the incident happened. PW 3 and PW 2 at the relevant time were in their room on the 3rd floor and came down on hearing the noise to the 2nd floor where they watched the drastic act being committed. When they tried to intervene, they were also attacked. PW 1 was in the adjoining room where the incident happened and he came to the place of incident immediately after hearing the noise. Nothing had been brought about in the cross-examination to disbelieve the ocular version of the witnesses. Two courts below on detailed scrutiny of the evidence of these witnesses, did not find any infirmity in the evidence pointing finger towards the appellant-accused. (Para 21). Prajeet Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (2008) 4 SCC 434: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 416: 2008 Cri LJ 3596.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: P.P. Naolekar and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-4-2008]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, followed

[3751] — Ss. 354(3), 366 and 433-A — Death sentence should be imposed in very extreme cases — Accused-appellant, not a habitual criminal, committing murder of a young boy as a result of a land dispute — In the circumstances, held, life imprisonment and not death sentence would be justified — But government will not, save for weighty reasons, reduce or commute the sentence to less than 14 years as contemplated in S. 433-A. Shidagouda Ningappa Ghandavar v. State of Karnataka, (1981) 1 SCC 164: 1981 SCC (Cri) 163: AIR 1981 SC 764: (1981) 1 SCR 1269: 1981 Cri LJ 324.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and A.C. Gupta, J. [Date of decision: 11-11-1980]

[3752] — Ss. 354(3), 368 and 235(2) — 'Special reasons' for death sentence — Vague reason such as 'terrific' double murder is not sufficient — Court must make genuine efforts under S. 235(2) to elicit relevant information from the accused — While confirming the sentence High Court must scrutinize the case carefully and decide in the light of different aspects having important bearing on the issue — In view of infirmities in the case which High Court failed to appreciate properly and in absence of any 'special reasons' shown, held, High Court not justified in confirming the death sentence by merely calling the murders 'cold-blooded'

All murders are terrific and therefore, the fact of the murder being "terrific" cannot be an adequate reason for imposing death sentence, otherwise death sentence will become the rule, not an exception and S. 354(3) will become a dead letter.

The obligation to hear the accused on the question of sentence under S. 235(2) is not discharged by putting a formal question to the accused as to what he has to say on the question of the sentence. The judge must make a genuine effort to elicit from the accused all information which will eventually bear on the question of sentence. It is the bounden duty of the judge to cast aside the formalities of the court scene and approach the question of sentence from a broad, sociological point of view. Questions which the judge can put to the accused under S. 235(2) and the answers which the accused makes to those questions are beyond the narrow constraints of the Evidence Act. The court, while on the question of sentence, is in an altogether different domain in which facts and factors which operate are of an entirely different order than those which come into play on the question of conviction. In the present case the Sessions Court complied with the form and letter of the obligation imposed under S. 235(2) and not with its spirit and substance as it made no serious effort to elicit from the accused what he wanted to say on the question of sentence.

The High Court's condemnation of the murders by calling them as 'cold-blooded' without seeing the failings of the Sessions Court in the matter of sentencing led to an unexamined confirmation of the death sentence. Muniappan v. State of T.N., (1981) 3 SCC 11: 1981 SCC (Cri) 617: AIR 1981 SC 1220: (1981) 3 SCR 270: (1982) 1 MLJ (SC) 1: 1981 Cri LJ 726.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and A.P. Sen, J. [Date of decision: 18-3-1981]

[3753] — Ss. 354(3), 374 and 384 — Appeal against conviction for murder and sentence of imprisonment for life should not be dismissed by High Court in limine by a single word 'dismissed' — Speaking order essential for dealing with SLP under Art. 136

Summary dismissal of appeal against conviction for murder and sentence of life imprisonment or death by High Court is not proper. Whenever a further right to question the judgment of a court or tribunal is provided by the Constitution or statute, the court or tribunal should make a speaking order when finally adjudicating the case. If a speaking order, however brief, is made by the High Court while dismissing an appeal or writ petition under Art. 226, it will be most useful to Supreme Court in dealing with applications under Art. 136. Raghunath Laxman Makadwada v. State of Maharashtra, (1986) 2 SCC 90: 1986 SCC (Cri) 108: AIR 1986 SC 1070: 1986 Cri LJ 858.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: O. Chinnappa Reddy and V. Khalid, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-2-1986]

[3754] — Ss. 354(3) and 253(2) — Death sentence — Rarest of rare cases — Calculated, cold-blooded and brutal murder of a seven years old girl by her own uncle after committing rape on her — Victim totally helpless — Death sentence imposed by trial court and confirmed by High Court, on facts and circumstances, held, justified — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 376

The extreme penalty can be inflicted only in gravest cases of the extreme culpability and in making choice of the sentence, in addition to the circumstances of the offender also. Having regard to these principles with regard to the imposition of the extreme penalty it may be noticed that there are absolutely no mitigating circumstances in the present case. On the contrary the facts of the case disclose only aggravating circumstances against the appellant.

The hard facts of the present case are that the appellant is the uncle of the deceased and almost occupied the status and position that of a guardian. Consequently the victim who was aged about 7 years must have reposed complete confidence in the appellant and while reposing such faith and confidence in the appellant must have believed in his bona fides and it was on account of such a faith and belief that she acted upon the command of the appellant in accompanying him under the impression that she was being taken to her village unmindful of the preplanned unholy designs of the appellant. The victim was a totally helpless child there being no one to protect her in the desert where she was taken by the appellant misusing her confidence to fulfil his lust. It appears that the appellant had preplanned to commit the crime by resorting to diabolical methods and it was with that object that he took the girl to a lonely place to execute his dastardly act.

The appellant seems to have acted in a beastly manner as after satisfying his lust he thought that the victim might expose him for the commission of the offence of forcible rape on her to the family members and others, the appellant with a view to screen the evidence of his crime also put an end to the life of innocent girl who had seen only seven summers. The evidence on record is indicative of the fact as to how diabolically the appellant had conceived of his plan and brutally executed it and such a calculated, cold-blooded and brutal murder of a girl of a very tender age after committing rape on her would undoubtedly fall in the category of rarest of the rare cases attracting no punishment other than the capital punishment and consequently the sentence of death imposed upon the appellant for the offence under S. 302 must be confirmed. Laxman Naik v. State of Orissa, (1994) 3 SCC 381: 1994 SCC (Cri) 656: AIR 1995 SC 1387.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-2-1994]

[3755] — Ss. 354(3) and 386 — Death sentence — Motivated and planned murder of innocent children by professional killers — Held, on facts, sentence proper. Kuljeet Singh v. Union of India, (1981) 3 SCC 324: 1981 SCC (Cri) 726: AIR 1981 SC 1572: (1981) 3 SCR 512: 1981 Cri LJ 1045.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and A.P. Sen and Baharul Islam, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-4-1981]

[3756] — S. 354(5) — Constitutionality of, open to judicial review

It will be legislating if the court directs that since, if at all, the provision contained in S. 354(5) is unconstitutional, the death sentence imposed upon the petitioners should be executed by the method of electrocution or gas-chamber or lethal injection or shooting or guillotine and the like. Deena v. Union of India, (1983) 4 SCC 645: 1983 SCC (Cri) 879: AIR 1983 SC 1155: 1983 Cri LJ 1602.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and R.S. Pathak and Sabyasachi Mukharji, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-9-1983]

[3757] — S. 354(5) — Execution of death sentence on the command of a judicial verdict not interdicted by Art. 21

Article 21 has as much relevance on the passing of a sentence, as on the manner of executing it and therefore, a two-fold consideration has to be kept in mind in the area of sentencing. Substantively, the sentence has to meet the constitutional prescription contained, especially, in Arts. 14 and 21. Procedurally, the method by which the sentence is required by law to be executed has to meet the mandate of Art. 21, which is not that the death sentence shall not be executed but that it shall not be executed in a cruel, barbarous or degrading manner.

When Bachan Singh case has declared it to be lawful to execute death sentence in appropriate cases, it would be lawful to execute that sentence in an appropriate manner, unaccompanied by torture or degradation of any kind. It is not unlawful in the abstract and in the absolute, to execute a lawful order.

The argument, it carried to its logical conclusion will make it impossible to execute any sentence whatsoever, particularly of imprisonment, because every sentence of imprisonment necessarily involves pain and suffering to a lesser or greater degree. A Constitution so carefully conceived as ours cannot be construed to produce such a startling result.

No sustenance can be derived from the Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution. Deena v. Union of India, (1983) 4 SCC 645: 1983 SCC (Cri) 879: AIR 1983 SC 1155: 1983 Cri LJ 1602.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and R.S. Pathak and Sabyasachi Mukharji, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-9-1983]

[3758] — S. 354(5) — Hanging by rope for executing death sentence, held, not violative of Art. 21 — Constitution of India — Article 21

The method prescribed by S. 354(5) for executing the death sentence by hanging does not violate Art. 21.

To the present challenge the State has discharged the heavy burden which lay upon it to prove constitutionality of the method of hanging described in S. 354(5). The system of hanging is as painless as is possible in the circumstances, it causes no greater pain than other known method of executing the death sentence and it involves no barbarity, torture or degradation. This conclusion is based on reason, supported by expert evidence and the findings of modern medicine. This system is in operation in a large part of the civilised world. It was in operation when our Constitution was framed.

The system of hanging which is now in vogue consists of a mechanism which is easy to assemble. The preliminaries to the act of hanging are quick and simple and they are free from anything that would unnecessarily sharpen the poignancy of the prisoner's apprehension. The chances of an accident during the course of hanging can safely be excluded. The method is a quick and certain means of executing the death penalty. It eliminates the possibility of a lingering death. Unconsciousness supervenes almost instantaneously after the process is set in motion and the death follows as a result of the dislocation of the cervical vertebrae. The chances of strangulation which results on account of too short a drop or of decapitation which results on account of too long a drop are now remote. The system is consistent with the obligation of the State to ensure that the process of execution is conducted with decency and decorum without involving degradation or brutality of any kind.

On the question of pain involved in a punishment the concern of law has to be to ensure that the various steps which are attendant upon or incidental to the execution of any sentence, more so the death sentence, do not constitute punishment by themselves. If a prisoner is sentenced to death, it is lawful to execute that punishment and that only. Torture, brutality, barbarity, humiliation and degradation of any kind, even as necessary steps in the execution of sentence, is impermissible. The process of hanging does not involve any of these, directly, indirectly or incidentally. At the moment of final impact when life becomes extinct, some physical pain would be implicit in the very process of the ebbing out of life. But, the act of hanging causes the least pain imaginable on account of the fact that death supervenes instantaneously.

Neither electrocution, nor lethal gas, nor shooting, nor even the lethal injection has any distinct or demonstrable advantage over the system of hanging, and therefore, it is impossible to conclude with any degree of certainty that the method of hanging should be replaced by any of these methods. Deena v. Union of India, (1983) 4 SCC 645: 1983 SCC (Cri) 879: AIR 1983 SC 1155: 1983 Cri LJ 1602.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and R.S. Pathak and Sabyasachi Mukharji, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-9-1983]

[3759] — S. 354(5) — Where constitutionality of method of execution of death sentence under, is involved, court can allow arguments beyond the scope of the averments without asking the petitioner to amend his petition. Deena v. Union of India, (1983) 4 SCC 645: 1983 SCC (Cri) 879: AIR 1983 SC 1155: 1983 Cri LJ 1602.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and R.S. Pathak and Sabyasachi Mukharji, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-9-1983]

[3760] — S. 354(5) — Where validity of challenged on ground of violation of Art. 21, held, burden lies on State to prove that the procedure for execution of death sentence provided therein is constitutional being just, fair and reasonable — Constitution of India — Article 21. Deena v. Union of India, (1983) 4 SCC 645: 1983 SCC (Cri) 879: AIR 1983 SC 1155: 1983 Cri LJ 1602.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and R.S. Pathak and Sabyasachi Mukharji, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-9-1983]

[3761] — Ss. 354(5), 413, 414 — Public hanging — Order for execution of death sentence by public hanging, held, violative of Art. 21 being barbaric — Any Jail Manual providing for public hanging would be unconstitutional — Constitution of India — Article 21. Attorney-General of India v. Lachma Devi, 1989 Supp (1) SCC 264: 1989 SCC (Cri) 413: AIR 1986 SC 467.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: P.N. Bhagwati, C.J. and D.P. Madon and G.L. Oza, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-12-1985]

— S. 354(6) See Ss. 125 and 354(6)

See also Ss. 354(1)(b) and (6)

— S. 355 See Ss. 354, 355, 361, 264, 412 and 384(3)

— S. 357 See Ss. 29(2), 5, 4(2), 325(1) and 357

See also Ss. 235(2), 248(2) and 357

See also Ss. 320 and 357

See also Ss. 357(1)(b) and 357(3), below

See also Ss. 401(2) and 357

See also Ss. 421(1) proviso and 357

See also Ss. 482, 148(3), 342, 359, 357, 358 and 227

See also Ss. 482 & 357

[3762] — Ss. 357 and 421 & 431 and 374 and 389 & 387 — Suspension of payment of compensation till period of presenting appeal thereagainst has elapsed or pending decision of the appeal — Applicability of mandate of S. 357(2) and S. 357(3) — Recoverability of compensation as fine under S. 421 r/w S. 431 — Fundamental right of appeal of convict under S. 374 r/w Art. 21 — Effect of — Conditions that may be imposed for hearing of appeal against order of compensation — Situation distinguished from that obtaining under S. 389 r/w S. 387 — Interpretation of S. 357 in the context of S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — Held, if under S. 357(2) realisation of fine is to be stayed automatically, there is no reason why the legislative intent cannot apply in relation to compensation directed to be paid under S. 357(3) — In absence of any express provision, as in the present case, the question must be considered having regard to the overall object of the statute — In such a case, court must invoke doctrine of purposive construction — Compensation awarded under S. 357(3) may be recoverable as fine under S. 421 r/w S. 431, but it would not therefore become automatically recoverable — The said provisions would be subject to S. 357(2) — Thus, S. 357(2) would be attracted even when appellant-accused had been directed to pay compensation under S. 357(3) — It will be for the appellate court to stay the direction for payment of compensation, which would necessarily mean that some conditions may be imposed therefor — A part of the compensation may be directed to be deposited, but the same must be a reasonable amount — An order may not be passed which the appellant cannot comply with, resulting in him being sent to prison — S. 421 may be taken recourse to, but therefor appellant-accused cannot be remanded to custody — This is especially the case in case of offences under S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 since bail will ordinarily be granted in case of such offences

Accused 1, Goodvalue Marketing Co. Ltd., a company registered and incorporated under the Companies Act, 1956 and Accused 2, the appellant, were convicted under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (the Act). The Company was sentenced to a fine of Rs 25,000 while Accused 2, the Chairman was sentenced to suffer SI for one month and directed to pay compensation of Rs 15 lakhs to the complainant.

An appeal was preferred thereagainst. The appellate court while admitting the appeal, directed Accused 1 and 2 to deposit a sum of Rs 5 lakhs each within four weeks from the said date. A writ petition was filed by the appellants questioning the legality of the said order which had been dismissed by reason of the impugned judgment.

The appellants were before the Supreme Court thereagainst by special leave.

Partly allowing the appeals,

Held :

Fine for an offence under Section 138 of the Act can be imposed only in terms of the provisions of the Act. When fine is not imposed, compensation can be directed to be paid for loss or injury caused to the complainant by reason of commission of such offence. Section 357(1)(b) CrPC provides for payment of compensation out of the fine, which may be in respect of the entire amount or in respect of a part of the fine. Section 357(3) seeks to achieve the same purpose, the difference being that whereas under Section 357(1) fine imposed forms a part of the sentence, under Section 357(3) compensation can be directed to be paid when fine does not form a part of the sentence. (Paras 30 and 29)

A statute must be read harmoniously. Section 357(1)(b) and Section 357(3) seek to achieve the same purpose. What is necessary is to find out the intention of the lawmaker and the object sought to be achieved. Section 357(2) uses the word "fine". It does not say that what would be stayed i.e. application of fine. Section 357(2) does not contemplate any other interpretation. If under Section 357(2), realisation of fine, at least in respect of the factor(s) enumerated in Section 357(1) is to be stayed automatically, there is no reason as to why the legislative intent cannot be held to apply in relation to the amount of compensation directed to be paid in terms of Section 357(3). Unfortunately, the legislature has not made any express provision in this behalf. In absence of any express provision, the question must be considered having regard to the overall object of a statute. A penal statute, in the event different meanings are possible to be given, must be construed liberally in favour of an accused.

While the court shall give due weight to the need of the victim, it cannot ignore the right of an accused. In a case of conflict, construction which favours the accused shall prevail. It must be cautioned however that the right of an accused unnecessarily need not be enlarged but it is the court's duty to duly protect his right. In a case of this nature, the court must invoke the doctrine of purposive construction. Section 357(2) was enacted for a definite purpose. It must be given its full effect. It cannot be the case that although a compensation payable out of the quantum of fine under Section 357(1)(b) would remain stayed under Section 357(2), if a compensation is directed to be paid under Section 357(3), the same would not attract the said provision. Thus, Section 357(2) would be attracted even when the appellant had been directed to pay compensation without imposition of any fine under Section 357(3). [Paras 11, 32, 43, 45, 52, 53, 55, 58 to 60, 70 and 72(i)]

A legal fiction, it is well settled, must be construed having regard to the purport of the statute. (Para 47)

When a direction is issued for payment of compensation, having regard to Section 357(2), the application thereof should ordinarily be directed to be stayed. It will, therefore, be for the court to stay the operation of that part of the judgment whereby and whereunder compensation has been directed to be paid, which would necessarily mean that some conditions therefor may also be imposed. A fortiori a part of the amount of compensation may be directed to be deposited, but the same must be a reasonable amount. (Para 55)

The appellate court while suspending the sentence, is entitled to put the appellant on terms. However, an order may not be passed which the appellant cannot comply with, resulting in him being sent to prison. The appellate court, in such cases, must make an endeavour to strike a balance. Section 421 CrPC may be taken recourse to, but therefor the appellant-accused cannot be remanded to custody. The matter has to be considered from another angle as well. An accused for commission of an offence under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act would ordinarily be granted bail, in view of the fact that the offence is a bailable one. Thus, while exercising the appellate power, ordinarily, a person should not suffer imprisonment only because the conditions imposed for suspending the sentence are harsh. The amount of compensation must not only be reasonable one, the conditions for suspending the sentence should also be reasonable. [Paras 56, 65, 68, 69 and 72(ii)]

Section 389 does not deal with exactly a similar situation. Section 389 is to be read with Section 387 thereof. Suspension of a sentence and enlarging an appellant who is convicted on bail, and realisation of fine have been dealt with by Parliament under different provisions. The power of the court, thus, to suspend a sentence in regard to realisation of compensation may be different from that of a direction in realisation of fine. Parliament has dealt with the imposition of substantive sentence and a sentence of fine vis-à-vis payment of compensation differently. (Paras 51 and 57)

Prima facie (without going into the merit of the appeal) the direction of the trial Judge appears to be somewhat unreasonable. The appellant has been sentenced to imprisonment. Only a fine has been imposed on the Company. Thus, for all intent and purpose, the trial Judge has invoked both Sections 357(1) and (3). The liability of the appellant was a vicarious one in terms of Section 141 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. The question may also have to be considered from the angle that the trial Judge thought it fit to impose a fine of Rs 25,000 only upon the Company. If that be so, an amount of compensation for a sum of Rs 15 lakhs should not have been directed to be paid by the Chairman of the Company. In the facts and circumstances of the case it would be reasonable to direct the appellant to deposit a sum of Rs 1 lakh within a period of four weeks, from date. (Paras 71 and 74). Dilip S. Dahanukar v. Kotak Mahindra Co. Ltd., (2007) 6 SCC 528: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 209: (2007) 137 Comp Cas 1: (2007) 2 KLT 488: 2007 Cri LJ 2417: (2007) 55 AIC 244 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-2007]

Sadashiv Dada Patil v. Purushottam Onkar Patil, (2006) 11 SCC 161; M.P. SEB v. Union of India, (2006) 10 SCC 736; Maruti Udyog Ltd. v. Ram Lal, (2005) 2 SCC 638: 2005 SCC (L&S) 308; Bharat Petroleum Corpn. Ltd. v. P. Kesavan, (2004) 9 SCC 772; P. Suresh Kumar v. R. Shankar, (2007) 4 SCC 752: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 696; Maruti Udyog Ltd. v. Ram Lal, (2005) 2 SCC 638: 2005 SCC (L&S) 308; R (Haw) v. Secy. of State for the Home Deptt., (2006) 3 All ER 428; K.L. Gupte v. Municipal Corpn. of Greater Bombay, AIR 1968 SC 303: (1968) 1 SCR 274; Reserve Bank of India v. Peerless General Finance & Investment Co. Ltd., (1987) 1 SCC 424; Punjab Land Development and Reclamation Corpn. Ltd. v. Presiding Officer, (1990) 3 SCC 682: 1991 SCC (L&S) 71; Balram Kumawat v. Union of India, (2003) 7 SCC 628; Pratap Singh v. State of Jharkhand, (2005) 3 SCC 551: 2005 SCC (Cri) 742; National Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Laxmi Narain Dhut, (2007) 3 SCC 700: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 142; Balraj v. State of U.P., (1994) 4 SCC 29: 1994 SCC (Cri) 823; Garikapati Veeraya v. N. Subbiah Choudhry, AIR 1957 SC 540; Babu Rajirao Shinde v. State of Maharashtra, (1971) 3 SCC 337: 1971 SCC (Cri) 616; Siddanna Apparao Patil v. State of Maharashtra, (1970) 1 SCC 547: 1970 SCC (Cri) 224; State of Gujarat v. Salimbhai Abdulgaffar Shaikh, (2003) 8 SCC 50: 2003 SCC (Cri) 2006; Madhav Hayawadanrao Hoskot v. State of Maharashtra, (1978) 3 SCC 544: 1978 SCC (Cri) 468;

Mardia Chemicals Ltd. v. Union of India, (2004) 4 SCC 311; Transmission Corpn. of A.P. v. Ch. Prabhakar, (2004) 5 SCC 551: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1681; Jolly George Varghese v. Bank of Cochin, (1980) 2 SCC 360; Dadu v. State of Maharashtra, (2000) 8 SCC 437: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1528, relied on

Stanny Felix Pinto v. Jangid Builders (P) Ltd., (2001) 2 SCC 416: 2001 SCC (Cri) 345, distinguished

V. Prasada Rao v. State of A.P., 2002 Cri LJ 395: (2001) 3 APLJ 79 (AP), broadly approved

Dilip S. Dhanukar v. Kotak Mahindra Co. Ltd., (2006) 133 Comp Cas 727: 2006 Cri LJ 3653, modified

[3763] — Ss. 357, 421 and 431 — Fine and compensation — Difference between and recoverability of

Section 357(2) was enacted for a definite purpose. It must be given its full effect. It cannot be the case that although a compensation payable out of the quantum of fine under Section 357(1)(b) would remain stayed under Section 357(2), if a compensation is directed to be paid under Section 357(3), the same would not attract the said provision. Thus, Section 357(2) would be attracted even when the appellant had been directed to pay compensation without imposition of any fine under Section 357(3). (Paras 11, 32)

There exists a distinction between fine and compensation, although, in a way it seeks to achieve the same purpose. An amount of compensation can be directed to be recovered as a "fine" but the legal fiction raised is in relation to recovery of fine only, it is in that sense "fine" stands on a higher footing than compensation awarded by the court. The amount of compensation, in view of the legal fiction, may be recovered under Section 421 CrPC. But the amount of compensation, having regard to Section 357(2) cannot be recovered forthwith unless the period of appeal expires. Section 421 only provides for a mode of recovery of fine. Section 424 provides for an enabling clause so as to enable the court to take recourse to either of the situations provided for therein. The said provisions, however, would be subject to Section 357(2). Section 431 provides for a legal fiction in terms whereof any money other than a fine shall be recoverable as if it were a fine. Section 357(2) would be attracted in such a situation. There does not appear to be any reason as to why the amount of compensation should be held to be automatically payable, although the same is only to be recovered as if a fine has been imposed. (Paras 31, 11, 46 and 48). Dilip S. Dahanukar v. Kotak Mahindra Co. Ltd., (2007) 6 SCC 528: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 209: (2007) 137 Comp Cas 1: (2007) 2 KLT 488: 2007 Cri LJ 2417: (2007) 55 AIC 244 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-2007]

[3764] — Ss. 357 and 29 — There is no limit on the award of compensation under S. 357

The method usually adopted by Parliament for conferring special jurisdiction or powers on Magistrates of the First Class in the matter of awarding sentences, obviating the limitation stipulated in Section 29(2) of the Code can be illustratively seen in Section 12 of the Essential Commodities Act or Section 36 of the Drugs and Cosmetics Act or Section 21 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act. In the absence of any such provision in the Negotiable Instruments Act it is not possible to read any special power into it as having conferred on a Magistrate of the First Class in the matter of imposition of sentence. (Paras 12 and 14)

If a Magistrate of the First Class thinks that the fact-situation in a particular case warrants imposition of a sentence more severe than the limit fixed under Section 29 of the Code, the legislature has taken care of such a situation also under Section 325(1) CrPC. Even that apart, a Magistrate who thinks it fit that the complainant must be compensated with his loss he can resort to the course indicated in Section 357 of the Code. He can, after imposing a term of imprisonment, award compensation to the complainant for which no limit is prescribed in Section 357 of the Code. (Paras 15, 17 and 18). Pankajbhai Nagjibhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2001) 2 SCC 595: 2001 SCC (Cri) 369: AIR 2001 SC 567: (2001) 104 Comp Cas 418: (2001) 1 KLT 517.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-1-2001]

[3765] — Ss. 357, 29(2) to (4) and 28 — "Compensation" and "fine" — Power to pass order in respect of — Necessary considerations — Held, consideration for payment of compensation is somewhat different from payment of fine — Purpose of imposition of fine and/or compensation must be considered having regard to relevant factors as envisaged under S. 357 CrPC (Para 16). P. Suresh Kumar v. R. Shankar, (2007) 4 SCC 752: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 696: AIR 2007 SC 1774: (2007) 52 AIC 24 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 2951.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-3-2007]

[3766] — S. 357 — Sentence of fine — Purpose and object of — Quantum of compensation to be awarded to deceased's dependant — Depends upon facts and circumstances of the case — Woman, deserted by her husband, dying while undergoing operation for abortion with her consent — Her minor son born prior to her desertion, becoming destitute — On the other hand, doctor responsible for causing the death having a roaring practice — Held, these facts relevant for enhancing the amount of fine awarded by High Court from Rs 5000 to Rs 1 lakh and issuing suitable directions for maintenance of the child with the interest earned from that amount by depositing the same in bank

Section 357 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has a message of its own. The power of imposing fine is intended to do something to reassure the victim that he or she is not forgotten in the criminal justice system. It is a measure of responding appropriately to crime as well as reconciling the victim with the offender. It is to some extent a constructive approach to crimes and a step forward in a criminal justice system. It is because of this that it was recommended that all criminal courts should exercise this power liberally so as to meet the ends of justice, by cautioning that the amount of compensation to be awarded must be reasonable. What is reasonable has to depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Jacob George (Dr.) v. State of Kerala, (1994) 3 SCC 430: 1994 SCC (Cri) 774: (1994) 2 An LT (Cri) 1: (1994) 1 KLT 872: (1994) 2 Crimes 100.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.M. Sahai and B.L. Hansaria, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-4-1994]

Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh, (1988) 4 SCC 551: 1988 SCC (Cri) 984, relied on

[3767] — S. 357 — Fitness of a case deserving compensation, and determination of a reasonable compensation — Nature of the crime, injury suffered and capacity of convict to pay, are relevant

In awarding compensation, it is necessary for the court to decide if the case is a fit one in which compensation deserves to be awarded. If the court is convinced that compensation should be paid, then the quantum of compensation is to be determined by taking into consideration the nature of the crime, the injury suffered and the capacity of the convict to pay compensation, etc. It goes without saying that the amount of compensation has to be reasonable, which the person concerned is able to pay. If the accused is not in a position to pay the compensation to the injured or his dependents to which they are held to be entitled to, there could be no reason for the court to direct such compensation. (Para 14). Manish Jalan v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 8 SCC 225: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 456: AIR 2008 SC 3074: (2008) 3 KLT 390: (2008) 68 AIC 124 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 3941.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-7-2008]

Sarwan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1978) 4 SCC 111: 1978 SCC (Cri) 549; Dilip S. Dahanukar v. Kotak Mahindra Co. Ltd., (2007) 6 SCC 528: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 209, relied on [3768] — S. 357 — Compensation — Quantum — Adequacy — Compensation should be commensurate with the capacity of the accused to pay as also other facts and circumstances of the case like the gravity of the offence, needs of the victim's family — Where material on record is scanty, court will have to assess the quantum from the material available and also take into consideration the facts, judicial notice of which the court can take note of — Though High Court in the instant case did not have sufficient material before it to correctly assess the capacity of the accused to pay the compensation but keeping the object of S. 357 in mind as seen from the reasoning of the High Court, held, it was a fit case in which the Court was justified in invoking the provision — Fact that the accused owned agricultural land, tractor and trolley and a Maruti car indicated that the accused were reasonably affluent and on that basis it would be reasonable to conclude that they were capable of paying at least Rs 1 lakh per head, as compensation — Therefore, order of High Court reducing the compensation of Rs 2 lakhs each modified to Rs 1 lakh. Rachhpal Singh v. State of Punjab, (2002) 6 SCC 462: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1362: AIR 2002 SC 2710.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-7-2002]

[3769] — S. 357 — Compensation granted by court under — Nature of liability of accused in respect of — Held, although the amount which is awarded provides for a criminal liability, the same is considered to be a recourse of the victim in the same manner which may be granted in a civil suit

Compensation is awarded towards sufferance of any loss or injury by reason of an act for which an accused person is sentenced. Although it provides for a criminal liability, the amount which is awarded as compensation is considered to be recourse of the victim in the same manner which may be granted in a civil suit. (Para 27). Dilip S. Dahanukar v. Kotak Mahindra Co. Ltd., (2007) 6 SCC 528: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 209: (2007) 137 Comp Cas 1: (2007) 2 KLT 488: 2007 Cri LJ 2417: (2007) 55 AIC 244 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-2007]

Rachhpal Singh v. State of Punjab, (2002) 6 SCC 462: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1362; State of Punjab v. Gurmej Singh, (2002) 6 SCC 663: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1460; Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh, (1988) 4 SCC 551: 1988 SCC (Cri) 984; Sarwan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1978) 4 SCC 111: 1978 SCC (Cri) 549; Sube Singh v. State of Haryana, (2006) 3 SCC 178: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 54, relied on [3770] — S. 357 — Restorative and reparative theories — Appropriating a portion of wages earned by prisoner for the victims of his crime — Emerging form and pattern of deserves serious consideration — Amends by offender to victim or victims generally — Victim of the crime or his family members should be compensated from the wages earned in prison by the perpetrator of the crime by doing hard work pursuant to sentence of RI awarded by court — Appropriate legislation/rules should be made in that behalf to disburse through a fund keeping in view the sensibilities of victims and provisions of Art. 300-A — Constitution of India, Art. 300-A

Per Thomas, J.

The practice followed in many States, either by virtue of the jail rules or by convention, is that a portion of the money earned by the prisoner is sent to the dependants of the prisoner himself and the balance, after deducting the amount expended by him for his extra expenses, is preserved to be disbursed to him at the time of his release. One area which is totally overlooked in the above practice is the plight of the victims. It is a recent trend in the sentencing policy to listen to the wailings of the victims. Rehabilitation of the prisoner need not be by closing the eyes towards the suffering victims of the offence. A glimpse at the field of victimology reveals two types of victims. The first type consists of direct victims, i.e., those who are alive and suffering on account of the harm inflicted by the prisoner while committing the crime. The second type comprises of indirect victims who are dependants of the direct victims of crimes who undergo sufferings due to deprivation of their breadwinner. Restorative and reparative theories have developed from the aforesaid thinking. (Paras 45 to 47)

Per Wadhwa J.

Fixing wages for the prisoners the State has to show equal concern for the victim and the victim's family. To this end, the subject of victimology has gained ground these days. In the efforts to look after and protect the human rights of the convict, court cannot forget the victim or his family in case of his death or who is otherwise incapacitated to earn his livelihood because of the criminal act of the convict. The victim is certainly entitled to reparation, restitution and safeguard of his rights. Criminal justice would look hollow if justice is not done to the victim of the crime. A victim of crime cannot be a "forgotten man" in the criminal justice system. It is he who has suffered the most. His family is ruined particularly in case of death and other bodily injury. This is apart from the factors like loss of reputation, humiliation, etc. An honour which is lost or life which is snuffed out cannot be recompensed but then monetary compensation will at least provide some solace. (Paras 91 and 99)

Reparation is taken to mean the making of amends by an offender to his victim, or to victims of crime generally, and may take the form of compensation, the performance of some service or the return of stolen property (restitution), these being types of reparation which might be described as practical or material. The term can also be used to describe more intangible outcomes, as where an offender makes an apology to a victim and provides some reassurance that the offence will not be repeated, thus repairing the psychological harm suffered by the victim as a result of the crime. (Para 101). State of Gujarat v. Hon'ble High Court of Gujarat, (1998) 7 SCC 392: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1640: AIR 1998 SC 3164.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, C.J.[1] and K.T. Thomas[2] and D.P. Wadhwa[3], JJ. [Date of decision: 24-9-1998]

Palaniappa Gounder v. State of T.N., (1977) 2 SCC 634: 1977 SCC (Cri) 397, limited

[3771] — S. 357 — Compensation — Principles to be followed for fixation of — Compensation fixed on conjectures and surmises — Unsustainability — Compensation for prolonged custody of the seized vehicle even after deposit of value of the vehicle and amount of compensation as assessed by the authorities for its release — When a very low value of the vehicle was fixed by the authorities on the basis of prayer of the owner himself for reducing the valuation considering that the vehicle was quite old, held, trial court erred in decreeing the money suit of the owner for a much higher amount by assessing per day income from that vehicle in absence of any issue framed and evidence adduced regarding loss of income of the owner — High Court also erred in dismissing the appeal by arriving at an abrupt conclusion being unmindful of the fact that it was deciding an appeal in a money suit — However, instead of sending back the matter to trial court for fresh decision in view of long lapse of time and limited nature of controversy, Supreme Court fixing an amount to be paid to plaintiff by defendant in full and final settlement of the claim — Indian Forest (Tripura Second Amendm ent) Act, 1985 — S. 52-A — CPC, 1908, Or. 20 R. 10 and Or. 41 R. 33

A truck carrying illegal timber was seized by the forest authorities. A show-cause notice was issued to the owner of the vehicle as to why the vehicle should not be confiscated under Section 52-A of the Indian Forest (Tripura Second Amendment) Act, 1986. In response the truck owner pleaded guilty and prayed for compounding the offence. The Chief Conservator of Forests directed the case to be compounded on realisation of Rs 25,000 as valuation of the truck and Rs 5000 as compensation. The owner prayed for reassessment and reduction of the value of the truck as the same was old. The Chief Conservator reduced the value to Rs 10,000 and the compensation to Rs 2000. The owner deposited the value and the compensation within the stipulated time. In the meanwhile, gearbox of the truck was stolen and an FIR was lodged by the authorities. Consequently, the vehicle could not be returned to the owner.

The owner filed money suit praying for compensation of Rs 1,68,000 (which was subsequently amended to Rs 15,54,000) with interest @ 18% p.a. The trial court assessing that income of the owner from the truck would be roughly Rs 600 per day, decreed the suit for Rs 2,03,364 and Rs 252 per day after a specified date. The High Court in appeal observed that in case of such nature, accurate assessment to ascertain the actual net income of an old vehicle like one in hand would be very difficult and that the trial rightly applied a rough assessment on approximate calculation with which no interference was called for. Accordingly, the High Court dismissed the appeal.

Allowing the present appeal,

Held:

There was no specific issue framed regarding the income of the vehicle. The trial court itself noticed that the plaintiff had made an exorbitant claim and that the claim of the plaintiff, that the vehicle operated daily was an absurd claim. All the estimates made by the trial court were without any evidence. No evidence was led on the questions of loss of income. It is further relevant to note that the original claim was Rs 1,68,000 which was subsequently amended to Rs 15,54,000. No averments were made about the income or about the loss in the plaint. The judgment and decree of the trial court and the impugned order of the High Court have no legal basis. (Para 18)

In normal course, the Supreme Court would have set aside the impugned order and directed the trial court to rehear and decide the matter afresh. Considering the long passage of time and the limited nature of controversy, it is directed that in full and final settlement of the claim, the plaintiff shall be paid Rs 35,000 by the defendant within two months from the date of this judgment. (Para 19). State of Tripura v. Bina Choudhary, (2007) 7 SCC 52: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 300: AIR 2007 SC 2169: (2007) 56 AIC 237 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-5-2007]

[3772] — S. 357 — Compensation to victim of crime — Rationale and importance, emphasised

Though a comprehensive provision enabling the court to direct payment of compensation has been in existence all through but experience has shown that the provision has rarely attracted the attention of the courts. Time and again the courts have been reminded that the provision is aimed at serving the social purpose and should be exercised liberally yet the results are not very heartening. (Para 12). Manish Jalan v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 8 SCC 225: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 456: AIR 2008 SC 3074: (2008) 3 KLT 390: (2008) 68 AIC 124 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 3941.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-7-2008]

Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh, (1988) 4 SCC 551: 1988 SCC (Cri) 984, relied on [3773] — S. 357 — Court may substitute fine payable to the widow of the deceased instead of imprisonment. Fatta v. State of U.P., 1980 Supp SCC 159: 1979 SCC (Cri) 629: AIR 1979 SC 1504: 1980 Cri LJ 829: 1979 ALJ 901.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-2-1979]

[3774] — S. 357 — Imposition of fine — Necessity of — Case involving theft and murder — All the accused acquitted of the charge of murder — Considering (i) that accused-respondents were responsible for theft of Rs 8000 belonging to the deceased P and ear-studs of PW 1 (wife of P), and (ii) that in the incident in question PW 1 lost her husband who was the main earning member, held, in addition to the sentence imposed by the High Court, fine of amount of Rs 10,000 should also be imposed on each of the three respondents (Para 9). Pamula Saraswathi v. State of A.P., (2003) 3 SCC 317: 2003 SCC (Cri) 610: AIR 2003 SC 2416.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.N. Variava and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-2-2003]

[3775] — S. 357 — Acid-attack causing disfigurement — Assault with iron rods, kicks, blows and pouring of acid — Applicability of S. 307 — Sentence warranted — On facts, PWs 1 to 3 suffered injuries on account of acid pouring by appellant-accused — Doctor indicated that each of the injured persons suffered more than 50% burn injuries caused due to acid, sufficient to cause death if not attended by medical aid at appropriate time — Held, analysis of evidence on record shows a clear application of S. 307 r/w S. 34 — Acid burns had caused disfigurement — However, considering the nature of dispute, custodial sentence of appellants reduced to 5 years' from 10 years' RI imposed by courts below — But, each of the appellants directed to pay a fine of Rs 25,000 — Out of each deposit, Rs 10,000 to be paid to each of the victims PWs 1 to 3 — In case of non-deposit of fine imposed, default custodial sentence of one year each, imposed — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 307 and 34 (Paras 9 to 13). Sachin Jana v. State of W.B., (2008) 3 SCC 390: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 45: 2008 Cri LJ 1596: (2008) 64 AIC 187 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-1-2008]

Girija Shankar v. State of U.P., (2004) 3 SCC 793: 2004 SCC (Cri) 863; State of Maharashtra v. Balram Bama Patil, (1983) 2 SCC 28: 1983 SCC (Cri) 320, relied on [3776] — S. 357 — Compensation for vexations/take proceedings — Complainant made to pay compensatory costs — Cheating or civil dispute — Agreement for sale of land — Earnest money paid to the appellant as part-consideration — Possession of land transferred to the complainants — Complaint laid on the basis that the appellant cheated them of the earnest money as he was not willing to complete the bargain — Held, in the circumstances of the case, liability of the appellant, if any, is of civil nature and not criminal — Entire proceedings quashed and the complainant directed to pay Rs 10,000 to the appellant as compensatory costs — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 415 Ill. (g) and 420. Nageshwar Prasad Singh v. Narayan Singh, (1998) 5 SCC 694: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1378: AIR 1999 SC 1480.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: M.M. Punchhi, C.J. and K.T. Thomas and S. Rajendra Babu, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-4-1998]

[3777] — S. 357 — Orders passed by magistrates in respect of persons running motor vehicles unauthorisedly on notified routes levying fines to be paid over to SRTC — Propriety — Prima facie SRTC not entitled to be paid such compensation under S. 357 CrPC — Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 — S. 123

Prima facie the Corporation is not entitled to be paid any compensation under S. 357 Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 by orders of Magistrates in cases of unauthorised running of motor vehicles on the notified routes. It can be paid such compensation only when it is open to the Corporation to file a suit and recover damages in law for such unauthorised operation of stage carriages. The question whether such unauthorised running will give rise to a claim for damages in a civil court is not free from doubt. However, no opinion is expressed on this question. This is a matter in which the State is also interests. It was, therefore, hoped that the magistrates before whom such cases are filed hereafter will, before passing an order under S. 357 Criminal Procedure Code in favour of the Corporation, examine and decide the question in accordance with law. Ishwar Singh Bagga v. State of Rajasthan, (1987) 1 SCC 101: AIR 1987 SC 628.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: E.S. Venkataramiah and M.M. Dutt, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-11-1986]

[3778] — S. 357 — Compensation for loss of interest — Robbery of Rs 40,000 committed 15 years before — Almost entire amount (Rs 39,170) recovered from accused — Sentence reduced to fine but direction made to pay Rs 10,000 out of fine, if realised, as compensation for loss of interest. Suryamoorthi v. Govindaswamy, (1989) 3 SCC 221: 1989 SCC (Cri) 537: (1989) 2 Crimes 265.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Natarajan and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision : 5-5-1989]

[3779] — S. 357 — Appropriateness of fine under, to reimburse the victims of white-collar crimes

The social abhorrence of the crime is an input, since the emphatic denunciation of a crime by the community must be reflected in the punishment. The unconscionable exploitation of unfortunately unemployed young men by heartless deception, compounded by pretension to political influence, calls for punitive severity to serve as deterrent. The crime here is doubly bad and throws light on how gullible young men part with hard money in the hope that political influence, indirectly purchased through money, can secure jobs obliquely. But then the victims of the crime must be commiserated with and in such white-collar offences it is proper to insist upon reparation of the victims, apart from any other sentence. In the present case, four young men have been wheedled out of their little fortunes by two convicts and so, to drive home a sense of moral responsibility to repair the injury inflicted, it is right to direct the appellant to pay a fine of Rs 1200 which will be made over by the trial Court under S. 357 of the Code. Mohd. Giasuddin v. State of A.P., (1977) 3 SCC 287: 1977 SCC (Cri) 496: AIR 1977 SC 1926: 1977 Cri LJ 1557.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-1977]

[3780] — S. 357 — Award of compensation by High Court — Trial court awarding death sentence and a fine of Rs 5000 in respect of offence under S. 302 IPC — High Court altering sentence of death to life imprisonment, without awarding any fine or confirming the fine awarded by the trial court — Held, in such cases where court does not award a fine along with a substantive sentence, S. 357(3) comes into play and it is open to the court to award compensation to the victim or his family — High Court

therefore, had power to award compensation (Para 12). Rachhpal Singh v. State of Punjab, (2002) 6 SCC 462: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1362: AIR 2002 SC 2710.
Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-7-2002]

[3781] — S. 357 — Single blow causing death — Appellant-accused gave hammer-blow on head of deceased, resulting in his death — Compensation to widow — High Court converting appellant's conviction under S. 302 to S. 307 IPC and sentencing him to 7 years' RI with fine — Sustainability — Held, guilt of appellant amply established — Considering medical evidence and established facts and circumstances, held, appellant can be clothed with the knowledge that injury caused by him with a hammer on the head of deceased, a vital part of the body, was likely to cause his death, though without any intention to cause death or such injury as was likely to cause his death — Appellant gave a single blow on the head — Offence would, therefore, squarely fall under S. 304 Pt. II — He, accordingly, convicted for the said offence — Sentence for the offence under S. 304 Pt. II reduced to the period already undergone — But, in addition, he directed to pay a fine of Rs 20,000 by way of compensation under S. 357 CrPC, to widow of deceased — Penal Code, 1860, S. 307 or S. 304 Pt. II (Paras 4 to 7). Sarup Singh v. State of Haryana, (2009) 16 SCC 479.
Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-3-1995]

[3782] — S. 357 — Award of compensation to victim of offence (rape in this case) to be paid by State — Direction by trial court in respect of — Confirmation of, by High Court in appeal against conviction — Propriety of — Held, it was not open to State to challenge the said part of High Court's order against it in the appeal filed by accused — Hence, the said challenge rejected as meritless — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 376(2)(f) (Para 16). Dinesh v. State of Rajasthan, (2006) 3 SCC 771: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 1: AIR 2006 SC 1267: 2006 Cri LJ 1679: (2006) 1 KLT 1006.
Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-2-2006]

[3783] — S. 357 — Compensation — Offence under S. 326 r/w S. 34 — Fine collected payable as compensation — Held, out of the fine amount, if realised, a sum of Rs 4000 be paid to each of the injured as compensation — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 326 r/w S. 34 (Para 16). Bankat v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 1 SCC 343: 2005 SCC (Cri) 316: AIR 2005 SC 368: 2005 Cri LJ 646: (2005) 2 Mah LJ 707.
Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-11-2004]

[3784] — S. 357 — Compensation awarded to the victim lady against the person found guilty of offences under Ss. 354 and 509 IPC — Disposal of amount on refusal of victim to accept the same — The victim lady refusing to accept the amount of compensation and requesting the same to be given to any women's organisation engaged in doing service for the cause of women — Relief — Since the amount was lying in the court deposit with the High Court, the matter left to the Chief Justice of High Court to deal with that amount in an appropriate manner as requested by the said lady — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 354 and 509 (Para 7). Kanwar Pal Singh Gill v. State, (2005) 6 SCC 161: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1420: AIR 2005 SC 3104: 2005 Cri LJ 3443.
Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-7-2005]

[3785] — S. 357 — Ingredients for exercising right of private defence, restated — Exceeding of said right — Murder trial — Payment of fine — High Court altering conviction of appellant-accused by trial court to that under S. 304 Pt. I r/w Ss. 109 and 34, sentencing him to five years' imprisonment and fine of Rs 20,000 with default stipulation — Before Supreme Court appellant contending that he was protected as he was exercising right of private defence — Sustainability — Held, on facts, as appellant exceeded his exercise of right of private defence, hence, High Court rightly found him guilty under S. 304 Pt. I IPC — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 304 Pt. I, 109, 34, 96, 97 and 100

In the present case the High Court has rightly held that even if it is accepted that at some point of time the appellant was exercising the right of private defence, the same was exceeded and has rightly found him guilty under Section 304 Part I IPC and sentenced him to undergo imprisonment for five years. The sentence as imposed cannot be considered to be harsh. On payment of fine of Rs 20,000, same was to be paid to the heirs of the deceased. Here again there appears to be no infirmity in the order of the High Court. (Para 9). Ranveer Singh v. State of M.P., (2009) 3 SCC 384.
Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-1-2009]

V. Subramani v. State of T.N., (2005) 10 SCC 358: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1521; Salim v. State of Haryana, (2008) 12 SCC 705, relied on [3786] — S. 357 — Offence under S. 494 IPC — Compensation to first wife — Rs 7000 directed to be paid out of the amount of fine imposed on the accused. Ananda Dagadu Jadhav v. Rukminibai Anand Jadav, 1993 Supp (3) SCC 68: 1993 SCC (Cri) 868.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Ratnavel Pandian, Kuldip Singh and R.M. Sahai, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-2-1992]

[3787] — S. 357 — Offences under Ss. 306 and 498-A r/w S. 34 IPC — Compensation — 80% of the fine amount, if realised, directed to be paid to the parents of the victim girl as compensation — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 306 and 498-A r/w S. 34 (Para 16). Kamalakar Nandram Bhavsar v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 10 SCC 192: AIR 2004 SC 503: 2004 Cri LJ 615: (2004) 14 AIC 336 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-11-2003]

[3788] — S. 357 — Victim-complainant awarded part of the fine — Sentence for offence under S. 326 IPC r/w S. 27, Arms Act — High Court altering sentence of five years' RI and fine of Rs 2000 to period of custody already undergone (63 days) and enhancing fine to Rs 25,000 — Held, High Court erred in doing so — Custodial sentence, in light of enhanced fine, however, raised only to 18 months, and of the Rs 25,000 fine Rs 10,000 awarded to victim-complainant — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 326 — Arms Act, 1959 — S. 27

The trial court found the respondent-accused guilty of the offence punishable under Section 326 IPC and Section 27 of the Arms Act. He was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for five years and to pay a fine of Rs 2000 with default stipulation for the offence relatable to Section 326 IPC. He was also sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year in respect of the offences under the Arms Act. On appeal, however, the High Court while upholding the conviction reduced the sentence to the period of custodial sentence already undergone. The fine was, however, enhanced to Rs 25,000. The appellant complainant/victim was before the Supreme Court by special leave.

Allowing the appeals,

Held :

When the factual scenario as noted by the trial court, and the principles of law as noted above are considered, the inevitable conclusion is that the High Court was not justified in reducing the custodial sentence. Taking into account the enhanced fine as imposed by the High Court which admittedly had been paid, it would be appropriate to fix the custodial sentence at eighteen months. The accused-Respondent 1 shall surrender to custody forthwith to serve the remainder of sentence. The custodial sentence has been fixed taking note of the peculiar facts of the case. Out of the fine deposited a sum of Rs 10,000 shall be paid to the appellant. (Paras 9 and 10). Surjit Singh v. Nahara Ram, (2004) 6 SCC 513: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1801: AIR 2004 SC 4122.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-8-2004]

Friedman: Law in Changing Society, relied on

State of M.P. v. Ghanshyam Singh, (2003) 8 SCC 13: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1935, relied on

[3789] — Ss. 357, 320, 431 and 428 — Leniency for a convict under Ss. 279 and 304-A IPC (offence not being compoundable under S. 320 CrPC) — Factual considerations and extent of leniency — Appellant-accused willing to pay mother of deceased rupees one lakh (mother having no grievance against accused) — Appellant not under the influence of any drug or intoxicant while driving — High Court awarding sentence of one year simple imprisonment and fine of Rs 5000 for offence under S. 279 IPC and simple imprisonment for six months and a fine of Rs 5000 for the offence under S. 304-A IPC — On facts, held, lenient view can be taken — Sentence of imprisonment reduced to period already undergone with the condition of payment of rupees one lakh to the mother of the deceased failing which S. 431 CrPC would be attracted — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 304-A and 279

The appellant dashed against a Kinetic Honda scooter, being driven by the deceased, who fell down and was run over by the left wheel of the tanker. The deceased succumbed to the injuries on the way to the hospital. Both the courts below have found the appellant guilty of the offence under Sections 279 and 304-A IPC. The trial court sentenced him to undergo simple imprisonment for one year and to pay fine of Rs 5000 for both the offences and in default to undergo simple imprisonment for two months. On appeal, the impugned order of High Court maintained the conviction and awarded simple imprisonment for one year and a fine of Rs 5000 for the offence under Section 279 IPC and simple imprisonment for six months and a fine of Rs 5000 for the offence under Section 304-A IPC.

Partly allowing the appeal,

Held :

The prayer for compounding of offences was rejected as offences punishable under Sections 279 and 304-A IPC are not compoundable under Section 320 CrPC. Having regard to the fact that the mother of the victim has no grievance against the appellant and has prayed for some compensation, a lenient view can be taken in the matter and the sentence of imprisonment can be reduced. Ends of justice would be met if the sentence of imprisonment is reduced to the period already undergone but in addition thereto, the appellant who was willing to pay an amount of Rs 1,00,000 to the mother of the deceased by way of compensation should be directed to pay the amount. Accordingly, the conviction of the appellant under Sections 279 and 304-A IPC is maintained. However, the substantive sentence of imprisonment is reduced to the period already undergone. If the appellant fails to pay the said amount within the stipulated time of three months, the same shall be recovered as per the procedure prescribed under Section 431 CrPC and be paid to the mother of the deceased. (Paras 7, 17 and 18)

True that in the instant case the appellant has been found to be guilty of offences punishable under Sections 279 and 304-A IPC for driving rashly and negligently on a public street and his act unfortunately resulted in the loss of a precious human life. But it is pertinent to note that there was no allegation against the appellant that at the time of accident he was under the influence of liquor or any other substance impairing his driving skills. It was a rash and negligent act simpliciter and not a case of driving in an inebriated condition which is, undoubtedly despicable aggravated offence warranting stricter and harsher punishment. (Para 16). Manish Jalan v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 8 SCC 225: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 456: AIR 2008 SC 3074: (2008) 3 KLT 390: (2008) 68 AIC 124 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 3941.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-7-2008]

[3790] — Ss. 357 and 29(2) — Dishonour of cheque — Sentencing — Power under S. 138 to impose fine up to twice the amount of cheque — Limitation under S. 29(2) CrPC that sentence of fine must not exceed Rs 5000 (now Rs 10,000 after amendment vide Act 25 of 2005) — Effect of — Compensation under S. 357 CrPC — Limitation, if any, on awarding of — Without going into question as to whether in view of provisions of S. 29(2) CrPC, the jurisdiction of the Magistrate would be to impose a fine for a sum of Rs 5000 or not, held, although the power of court to impose fine may or may not be limited, the power to award compensation is not — In present case, a cheque amounting to Rs 7 lakhs issued by respondent got dishonoured — Trial court directing respondent to pay a fine of Rs 7,05,000 and in default to undergo 3 months' simple imprisonment — Out of the said amount, a sum of Rs 7 lakhs was to be paid to complainant by way of compensation and remaining sum of Rs 5000 was to be credited to Govt. — In appeal filed by respondent, appellate court setting aside award of compensation and modifying the sentence by directing respondent to pay a fine of Rs 5000 and in default to undergo 3 months' simple imprisonment — In revision, High Court confirming the appellate court's order — Considering the facts, held, respondent to pay Rs 7 lakhs by way of compensation instead of fine of Rs 5000 — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — S. 138 (Paras 16, 14 and 25). P. Suresh Kumar v. R. Shankar, (2007) 4 SCC 752: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 696: AIR 2007 SC 1774: (2007) 52 AIC 24 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 2951.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-3-2007]

Rachhpal Singh v. State of Punjab, (2002) 6 SCC 462: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1362, relied on

[3791] — Ss. 357, 358 and 397 — Compensation of Rs 1 lakh for illegal detention and sexual harassment — Awarded by High Court to accused facing prosecution for murder even before the commencement of trial on the ground of her illegal detention and sexual harassment by police — Held, was not justified

The High Court in revision challenging the order granting police remand, has awarded Rs 1 lakh as compensation to the accused on the ground that she was illegally detained in the police station and the police personnel committed acts of molestation, obscene violation, etc. It is noteworthy that after investigation, the police has submitted charge-sheet against the accused. Her application for bail was rejected by the learned Sessions Judge and thereafter by the High Court on 18-1-2002 prior to the decision of the revision. There is absolutely no justification for awarding compensation to a person who is facing prosecution for a serious offence like murder even before the trial has commenced. This direction, therefore, deserves to be set aside. (Paras 18 and 25). State v. N.M.T. Joy Immaculate, (2004) 5 SCC 729: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1722: AIR 2004 SC 2282: 2004 Cri LJ 2515.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu, C.J.[1] and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan [2] and G.P. Mathur[1], JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2004]

2002 MLJ (Cri) 661, reversed

[3792] — Ss. 357 and 358 — Custodial violence/death or illegal detention — Compensation against State — Awarding of — Power under Arts. 32/226 — Held, courts may award compensation under Arts. 32/226 in cases where violation of Art. 21 involving custodial death/torture is established or is incontrovertible — But, may not award the same where there is no evidence of custodial torture except the statement of person aggrieved and where such allegation is not supported by any medical report or other corroborative evidence (including visible marks/scars), or where there are clear indications that the allegations are false or exaggerated, fully or in part — In such cases, the aggrieved party is to be relegated to traditional remedies available under civil/Questions to be considered before awarding compensation as public law remedy, indicated — Quantum of compensation would depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case — Award of such compensation will not affect the right to claim additional compensation by way of civil/criminal action — Degree of proof required in criminal prosecution relating to such matters, held, is not strict — Constitution of India — Arts. 21, 32, 226 and 300

The question involved in this appeal was whether on the facts and circumstances of this case, compensation should be awarded to the petitioner and his family members as a public law remedy for the violation of their fundamental rights under Article 21 of the Constitution.

The petitioner wrote an undated letter to the Supreme Court alleging illegal detention, custodial torture and harassment to him and his family members by the police. The said letter was received by the Supreme Court on 19-11-1998 and was registered as a writ petition under Article 32 of the Constitution.

The letter (re: alleged torture and illegal detention)

In the letter the petitioner alleged that ASI DS (in charge of police post concerned), along with some police officers, came to his house on 10-3-1998 at about 11 a.m. to enquire about the whereabouts of his son J. When he informed them that he was not aware of it, they started beating him. Thereafter, the police took him, his wife and two minor daughters forcibly to the police post, through the bazaar. He was beaten with sticks on the way. At the police post, on direction of the Superintendent of Police (SP), DS took the petitioner inside and beat him for about 10 minutes and brought him back before the SP again. By then, his wife and daughters were made to sit in an uncomfortable posture (as students are made to sit in schools by way of punishment). When the petitioner stated that he was not aware of his son's whereabouts, the SP became furious and ordered his men to remove his moustache, whereupon DS sat on his chest (with three policemen pressing his hands and feet) and plucked his moustache. Again, they started beating the petitioner, searched his pockets and took away Rs 2350 which he was carrying. Then the police took him back to his house and ransacked the house. DS broke open the lock of his trunk and seized his licensed gun, some cartridges and arms licence, as also some jewellery found in the trunk. Thereafter, the petitioner was taken back to the police post. Though his wife and daughters were sent back to the house, he was illegally detained in police custody for a day and then taken to police station GH where he was kept for 10 days and during the first 5 days of such detention, he was regularly beaten. Because of such police harassment and torture, when he was released he and his younger son G fled from their house.

Subsequently, when on 8-7-1998 the petitioner returned to his house, he was handcuffed and taken to the police post concerned by the police officers and was tortured by them. When he requested for water, he was forced to drink hot water with salt. He was kept in a wooden shikanza for 5 days and was not allowed to sleep. Then he was taken to a place J. After three days he was again taken back to the aforesaid police post and kept there for 2 days. Thereafter, he was released with a condition to visit the police post everyday in the morning and evening.

The petitioner alleged that his friends and relatives who wanted to meet him, when he was being illegally detained, were not permitted to meet him and were also tortured. He also alleged that the police demanded money from him. In view of such torture he was forced to leave his house and remain outside. The petitioner prayed for a direction to the police to stop the atrocities and torture. He sought compensation for himself and his wife and daughters for the social, physical and financial loss, and return of his licensed gun, gold ornaments and other belongings. He also prayed for a thorough inquiry into the atrocities and torture committed by the police and imposition of punishment to those who were responsible.

The alleged second round of harassment

J, who was involved in several criminal cases, was arrested in June 1999, but he escaped from police custody on 25-1-2001. The petitioner filed an affidavit dated 22-2-2001 before the Supreme Court alleging interrogation by the police in regard to escape of J. He alleged that on 14-2-2001 he and his brother N were handcuffed and taken to the police station and interrogated and released on 15-2-2001. A further affidavit was filed by the petitioner on 1-10-2001 wherein he alleged that his younger son G was forcibly taken from his sister's house on 22-6-2001 and tortured.

The Supreme Court on not being satisfied with the enquiry report of the Inspector General of Police (Law and Order), directed CBI to inquire into the matter with reference to the allegations made in the letter as also the subsequent affidavits filed by the petitioner and his relatives and the reply-affidavits filed by the respondents. CBI held a preliminary inquiry and submitted the report. It concluded that some of the allegations of the petitioner were substantiated while several others were not substantiated. On the direction of the Supreme Court, an FIR was lodged against several police officers on 17-10-2002 under Sections 323, 342, 343, 365 and 384 IPC on the basis of the CBI report.

On behalf of the petitioner, a submission was made that in such cases, apart from the CBI inquiry and criminal prosecution, compensation has to be awarded to the victims. The State argued that having regard to the facts of the case and having regard to the registration of the FIR, the matter may have to await the result of the prosecution. The Supreme Court directed hearing on the limited question as to whether compensation should be awarded or not.

The Supreme Court found that the petitioner and his relatives made false and exaggerated claims in regard to illegal detention, torture, etc., apart from suppressing material facts. The fact of filing of writ petition before the High Court in the matter was not disclosed to the Supreme Court. There were many contradictions between the facts alleged before the Supreme Court and the High Court. Further, the CBI enquiry disclosed that the petitioner and his family members had not disowned J. They were regularly meeting J when he was in custody. This fact was contrary to what was asserted in the letter.

Disposing of the writ petition,

Held :

Compensation as public law remedy for violation of Art. 21

It is now well settled that the award of compensation against the State is an appropriate and effective remedy for redressal of an established infringement of a fundamental right under Article 21, by a public servant. The quantum of compensation will, however, depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Award of such compensation (by way of public law remedy) will not come in the way of the aggrieved person claiming additional compensation in a civil court, in the enforcement of the private law remedy in tort, nor come in the way of the criminal court ordering compensation under Section 357 CrPC. Award of compensation as a public law remedy for violation of the fundamental rights enshrined in Article 21 of the Constitution, in addition to the private law remedy under the law of torts, was evolved in the last two-and-a-half decades. (Paras 38 and 31)

Whether compensation should be awarded for every violation of Article 21

In cases where custodial death or custodial torture or other violation of the rights guaranteed under Article 21 is established, the courts may award compensation in a proceeding under Article 32 or 226. But, the cases where violation of Article 21 involving custodial death or torture is established or is incontrovertible stand on a different footing when compared to those cases where such violation is doubtful or not established. Where there is no independent evidence of custodial torture and where there is neither medical evidence about any injury or disability, resulting from custodial torture, nor any mark/scar, it may not be prudent to accept claims of human rights violation, by persons having criminal records in a routine manner for awarding compensation. That may open the floodgates for false claims, either to mulct money from the State or as to prevent or thwart further investigation. The courts should, therefore, while zealously protecting the fundamental rights of those who are illegally detained or subjected to custodial violence, should also stand guard against false, motivated and frivolous claims in the interests of the society and to enable the police to discharge their duties fearlessly and effectively. While custodial torture is not infrequent, it should be borne in mind that every arrest and detention does not lead to custodial torture. (Paras 46 and 45)

Before awarding compensation, the Court will have to pose to itself the following questions: (a) whether the violation of Article 21 is patent and incontrovertible, (b) whether the violation is gross and of a magnitude to shock the conscience of the court, (c) whether the custodial torture alleged has resulted in death or whether custodial torture is supported by medical report or visible marks or scars or disability. Where there is no evidence of custodial torture of a person except his own statement, and where such allegation is not supported by any medical report or other corroborative evidence, or where there are clear indications that the allegations are false or exaggerated fully or in part, the courts may not award compensation as a public law remedy under Article 32 or 226, but relegate the aggrieved party to the traditional remedies by way of appropriate civil/criminal action. (Para 46)

However, the Supreme Court should not be understood as holding that harassment and custodial violence is not serious or worthy of consideration, where there is no medical report or visible marks or independent evidence. It is a fact that harassment or custodial violence cannot always be supported by a medical report or independent evidence or proved by marks or scars. Every illegal detention irrespective of its duration, and every custodial violence, irrespective of its degree or magnitude, is outright condemnable and per se actionable. Remedy for such violation is available in civil law and criminal law. The public law remedy is additionally available where the conditions mentioned above are satisfied. (Para 47)

The degree of proof required in criminal prosecution relating to such matters has been softened by earlier decisions of the Supreme Court. (Para 47)

In the present case, there was reasonable cause for the police to think that the family members of J might know about his whereabouts. The repeated questioning of the family members of J in the years 1998 and 2001, either at their houses or by calling them to the police station/post was part of the investigation process and cannot, per se, be considered as harassment or violation of Article 21. Whether the police exceeded their limits in questioning the petitioner or his relatives is of course a different aspect. (Para 29)

There is no clear or incontrovertible evidence about custodial torture, nor any medical report of any injury or disability. The grievance of the petitioner and his relatives is against different officers in different police stations at different points of time. More importantly, several of the allegations are proved to be exaggerated and false. Therefore, this is not a fit case for award of compensation. All reliefs which should be granted in such a case, have already been granted by ordering an inquiry by CBI and ensuring that the police officers named are prosecuted. The law will have to take its own course. However, this order will not come in the way of any civil court awarding compensation in an action in tort or the criminal court awarding compensation under Section 357 CrPC in the pending prosecution against any of the officers, if the charges are established. (Paras 50, 23 to 29 and 51). Sube Singh v. State of Haryana, (2006) 3 SCC 178: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 54: AIR 2006 SC 1117: (2006) 102 Cut LT 19.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Y.K. Sabharwal, C.J. and B.N. Srikrishna and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-2-2006]

Khatri (II) v. State of Bihar, (1981) 1 SCC 627: 1981 SCC (Cri) 228; Khatri (IV) v. State of Bihar, (1981) 2 SCC 493: 1981 SCC (Cri) 503; Rudul Sah v. State of Bihar, (1983) 4 SCC 141: 1983 SCC (Cri) 798; Bhim Singh v. State of J&K, (1985) 4 SCC 677: 1986 SCC (Cri) 47; Peoples' Union for Democratic Rights v. Police Commr., (1989) 4 SCC 730: 1990 SCC (Cri) 75; Nilabati Behera v. State of Orissa, (1993) 2 SCC 746: 1993 SCC (Cri) 527; D.K. Basu v. State of W.B., (1997) 1 SCC 416: 1997 SCC (Cri) 92; M.C. Mehta v. Union of India, (1987) 1 SCC 395: 1987 SCC (L&S) 7; Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan v. Vasant Raghunath Dhoble, (2003) 7 SCC 749: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1918; Munshi Singh Gautam v. State of M.P., (2005) 9 SCC 631: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1269; Dhananjay Sharma v. State of Haryana, (1995) 3 SCC 757: 1995 SCC (Cri) 608; State of M.P. v. Shyamsunder Trivedi, (1995) 4 SCC 262: 1995 SCC (Cri) 715. Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan v. Vasant Raghunath Dhoble, (2003) 7 SCC 749: 2003 SCC (Cri) 1918, relied on

[3793] — Ss. 357 and 358 — Custodial death — Compensation to aggrieved party — Liability of erring police officers — Whether appellant police officers liable to reimburse the State the amount (Rs 1,50,000) paid by it to the widow of the deceased as directed by High Court — Held, the said question would depend on the fact whether the alleged misdeed by the officer concerned was committed in the course of the discharge of his lawful duties, beyond or in excess of the same which would have to be determined in a proper enquiry — High Court did not conclusively hold that the amount should in any circumstance be recovered from the officers concerned — Hence the said question, held, was too premature at this stage for decision — This question would arise only as and when an enquiry specifically in this regard was conducted — Therefore, no direction need be issued in the matter concerned — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 — Constitution of India — Arts. 32 and 21

The question whether the compensation paid by the State can be recovered from the officers concerned will depend on the fact whether the alleged misdeed by the officer concerned is committed in the course of the discharge of his lawful duties, beyond or in excess of the same which will have to be determined in a proper enquiry. The High Court has not conclusively held that the amount should in any circumstance be recovered from the officers, therefore, at this stage it is too premature for the Supreme Court to go into this question whether the appellants in this case are liable to reimburse the State the amount paid by it to the widow of the deceased as directed by the High Court. This will have to be adjudicated in an inquiry wherein it will have to be decided whether the acts of the police officers concerned were in the performance of State duty (a sovereign function) or outside the same. If it is found that the appellant officers did cause the death of the deceased and the same is not in the performance of their official duty or in excess of the same then they cannot escape the liability. However, this question would arise only as and when an inquiry specifically in this regard is conducted. Therefore for the present the need for any direction in this regard does not arise. (Para 10). State of Maharashtra v. Christian Community Welfare Council of India, (2003) 8 SCC 546.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-10-2003]

Nilabati Behera v. State of Orissa, (1993) 2 SCC 746: 1993 SCC (Cri) 527, relied on

[3794] — Ss. 357 and 421 — Conviction under Ss. 304 Pt. II and 201 IPC — Compensation —

Reduction of — High Court directing that in case fine of Rs 1 lakh was deposited by the accused, the same was to be treated as compensation to the mother of the deceased — Considering the fact that the accused had died and his legal representatives were impleaded, Supreme Court, after confirming the conviction, reducing the fine to Rs 50,000 — Further holding that execution in accordance with law could be levied by deceased's mother if the fine was not deposited within four months — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 304 Pt. II and 201 (Para 10). N. Somashekar v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 11 SCC 334.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-5-2004]

[3795] — Ss. 357 and 482 — S. 482 which saves the inherent powers of High Court cannot override express provision contained in S. 357 which save that power. Palaniappa Gounder v. State of T.N., (1977) 2 SCC 634: 1977 SCC (Cri) 397: AIR 1977 SC 1323: 1977 Cri LJ 992: (1977) 3 SCR 132: (1978) 1 MLJ 13 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud and P.K. Goswami, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-3-1977]

— S. 357(1) See Ss. 357(3) & (1) and 421
See also Ss. 357(4), (3) and (1)

[3796] — S. 357(1) — Sentence — Fine in lieu of imprisonment — If realised to be paid as compensation — During commotion, while a twelve-year-old little girl went to rescue her father, appellant in the heat of the moment swishing a wooden hammer causing a single injury on her head which turned out to be fatal — Sentence of 3 years' RI under S. 304 Part II modified by imposing a fine of Rs 25,000 payable to deceased's father by way of compensation — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 304 Pt. II

It is true that a little girl died in the unfortunate incident. But it is also true that the appellant had no ire against that little girl either before or during the occurrence. It was an act done in a rash mood without any intention to cause even grievous hurt to her. Even so, the appellant must pay the penalty for it. There is only one injury which the little girl sustained and probably because the skull bone of the deceased was not grown to sturdiness as in grown-up persons, the strike had resulted in such a calamitous proportion. (Para 4)

Section 304 Part II of the Penal Code prescribes a punishment of imprisonment which may "extend to 10 years or with fine or with both". Having regard to the various aspects, a fine of Rs 25,000 is necessary to meet the ends of justice. Therefore, while confirming the conviction under Section 304 Part II, the sentence is altered to a fine of Rs 25.000. If the appellant fails to remit the fine in the trial court within six weeks he is directed to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three years. If the fine is realised from the appellant the trial court shall pay the same to the deceased's father by way of compensation as provided in Section 357(1) CrPC. (Paras 5 and 6). Bhojappa Hanamanthappa Choudannavar v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 10 SCC 177: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1783.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 21-9-1999]

[3797] — S. 357(1)(a) — Imposition of a substantive sentence of fine a sine qua non for an order of compensation under — Without imposing a sentence of fine, held, High Court not justified in directing payment of Rs 3000 as litigation costs to the State under S. 357(1)(a), especially where it released the accused on probation. Girdhari Lal v. State of Punjab, (1982) 1 SCC 608: 1982 SCC (Cri) 325: AIR 1982 SC 1229(2): 1982 Cri LJ 1742(1).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.R. Krishna Iyer and R.S. Pathak, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-9-1980]

— S. 357(1)(b) See also Ss. 357(5) and (1)(b)

[3798] — Ss. 357(1)(b) & (3) — Difference between Ss. 357(1)(b) and 357(3), explained

A statute must be read harmoniously. Section 357(1)(b) and Section 357(3) seek to achieve the same purpose. What is necessary is to find out the intention of the lawmaker and the object sought to be achieved. Section 357(2) uses the word "fine". It does not say that what would be stayed i.e. application of fine. Section 357(2) does not contemplate any other interpretation. If under Section 357(2), realisation of fine, at least in respect of the factor(s) enumerated in Section 357(1) is to be stayed automatically, there is no reason as to why the legislative intent cannot be held to apply in relation to the amount of compensation directed to be paid in terms of Section 357(3). Unfortunately, the legislature has not made any express provision in this behalf. In absence of any express provision, the question must be considered having regard to the overall object of a statute. A penal statute, in the event different meanings are possible to be given, must be construed liberally in favour of an accused. While the court shall give due weight to the need of the victim, it cannot ignore the right of an accused. In a case of conflict, construction which favours the accused shall prevail. It must be cautioned however that the right of an accused unnecessarily need not be enlarged but it is the court's duty to duly protect his right. In a case of this nature, the court must invoke the doctrine of purposive construction. Section 357(2) was enacted for a definite purpose. It must be given its full effect. It cannot be the case that although a compensation payable out of the quantum of fine under Section 357(1)(b) would remain stayed under Section 357(2), if a compensation is directed to be paid under Section 357(3), the same would not attract the said provision. Thus, Section 357(2) would be attracted even when the appellant had been directed to pay compensation without imposition of any fine under Section 357(3). [Paras 11, 32, 43, 45, 52, 53, 55, 58 to 60, 70 and 72(i)]. Dilip S. Dahanukar v. Kotak Mahindra Co. Ltd., (2007) 6 SCC 528: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 209: (2007) 137 Comp Cas 1: (2007) 2 KLT 488: 2007 Cri LJ 2417: (2007) 55 AIC 244 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-2007]

[3799] — S. 357(1)(b) — Additional compensation awarded by Supreme Court — High Court reducing substantive sentence to a month and a half — Appellant undergoing and remaining in custody for about fifteen days — Moreover, appellant on bail — Hence, held, directing appellant to surrender for undergoing remaining sentence is inappropriate, 10 years having passed from date of incident — Sentence already undergone, held, sufficient and adequate in the facts and circumstances of the case — However, appellant directed to pay additional amount of Rs 10,000 as compensation to the injured complainant over and above the amount of fine and compensation ordered to be paid by courts below — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 323 and 325

The appellant-accused voluntarily caused simple hurt to complainant and also assaulted the complainant with a stone resulting in grievous injuries to him. Moreover, the appellant-accused intentionally insulted the complainant by abusing him in filthy language thereby giving him provocation knowing fully well that such provocation would make the complainant to break public peace or to commit other offences. A complaint was filed and after usual investigation, charge was framed against the accused for offences punishable under Sections 323, 325 and 504 IPC. The trial court held that the accused caused simple as well as grievous hurt to the complainant, and thereby, he had committed offences punishable under Sections 323 and 325 IPC. Regarding the third charge, however, according to the court, the prosecution was not able to establish it and the accused was ordered to be acquitted. The trial court sentenced him with simple imprisonment and fine with default stipulation, under both sections, accordingly. Compensation of Rs 2000 was also ordered to be paid to the complainant under Section 357(1)(b) CrPC, out of the fine amount received.

In an appeal preferred by him, he was acquitted for the offence punishable under Section 323 IPC. However, conviction under Section 325 IPC was confirmed. The appellate court, however, was of the view that it was a fit case to reduce sentence of simple imprisonment from one year to six months. The appellate court also directed the accused to pay compensation of Rs 3000 to the complainant independently of what the trial court awarded. The sentence of fine and compensation passed by the trial court was confirmed.

The appellant challenged even that order passed by the appellate court in revision before the High Court which confirmed the order of conviction while partly allowing the revision by reducing sentence and ordering the appellant to undergo simple imprisonment for 1 1/2 months and to pay fine of Rs 1000 in addition to what was ordered by the courts below. Present appeal is against the said order of the High Court.

Allowing the appeal partly,

Held :

The High Court has reduced the substantive sentence to a month and a half. It is also not in dispute that the appellant has undergone and has remained in custody for about fifteen days. Moreover, he is on bail. Hence, even though in the facts and circumstances of the case, provisions of Section 360 read with Section 361 CrPC are not attracted and Om Prakash case, (2001) 10 SCC 477, does not help the appellant, it would not be appropriate to direct the appellant to surrender and to suffer the remaining sentence for about a month. The incident is of 1997 and about 10 years have passed. (Para 14)

The sentence already undergone by the appellant is held sufficient and adequate in the facts and circumstances of the case. It is, however, ordered that the appellant will pay an additional amount of Rs 10,000 to the injured complainant over and above the amount of fine and compensation ordered to be paid by the courts below. (Para 16). Manjappa v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 6 SCC 231: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 76: 2007 Cri LJ 3220.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: C.K. Thakker and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-5-2007]

Om Prakash v. State of Haryana, (2001) 10 SCC 477: 2003 SCC (Cri) 799, distinguished

[3800] — S. 357(1)(b) — Compensation to the victim under Ss. 376 and 323 IPC — Accused, besides imprisonment, sentenced to pay a fine of Rs 5000 and Rs 500 under Ss. 376 and 323 respectively — In case of the amount being recovered, a sum of

Rs 4500 directed to be paid to the victim — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 376 and 323 (Para 12). State of H.P. v. Lekh Raj, (2000) 1 SCC 247: 2000 SCC (Cri) 147: AIR 1999 SC 3916: 2000 Cri LJ 44.
Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Saghir Ahmad and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-11-1999]

[3801] — S. 357(1)(c) — Compensation to be paid to the heirs cannot decide the quantum of fine to be imposed — Sentence of imprisonment and fine to be imposed independently of any claim for compensation that may have been filed — Approach and considerations to be taken into account by the Court pointed out. Palaniappa Gounder v. State of T.N., (1977) 2 SCC 634: 1977 SCC (Cri) 397: AIR 1977 SC 1323: 1977 Cri LJ 992: (1977) 3 SCR 132: (1978) 1 MLJ 13 (SC).
Bench Strength 2. Coram: Y.V. Chandrachud and P.K. Goswami, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-3-1977]

[3802] — S. 357(1)(c) — Atrocities by armed forces — Compensation to heirs of deceased — Appreciation of evidence — A Major and four constables of Special Armed Force, going to the house of the deceased on the false pretext of searching for unauthorised firearms, forcibly taking her to the police station, beating her all the way — Deceased dying six days later — Trial Court acquitting the Major but convicting the constables under S. 304 Part II/34 IPC and sentencing them each to five years' imprisonment — High Court setting aside acquittal of the Major and convicting him under S. 304 Part II/149, IPC and sentencing him to five years' imprisonment — Conviction and sentence on others confirmed — Held, the findings recorded by the High Court against the accused were proper and justified and did not call for interference — In the absence of any evidence either oral or documentary, in support of the defence story set up by the accused, the same cannot be accepted — In the result, the conviction of the Major under S. 304 Part II/149 upheld but the conviction of the other four accused altered from S. 304 Part II/34 IPC to one under S. 304 Part II/149 IPC — Their substantive sentence reduced to three years from 5 years — However, considering the atrocities committed by the accused persons taking advantage of the helplessness of the deceased, the Major directed to pay a sum of Rs 20,000 and the other four accused a sum of Rs 10,000 each, as fine — The entire fine, if realised, directed to be paid to the heirs of the deceased — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 304 Part II/149. Sukhpal v. State of M.P., (1997) 9 SCC 773: 1997 SCC (Cri) 769: AIR 1997 SC 468.
Bench Strength 2. Coram: M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-1-1997]

— S. 357(3) See Ss. 357(1)(b) & (3)
See also Ss. 357(4), (3) and (1)

[3803] — S. 357(3) — Power of Court to award compensation to victim or dependants of victim of crime — Position compared with that under CrPC, 1898 — S. 357(3) where the Court may award compensation even in cases where court imposes a sentence of which fine does not form part — Matters to be considered in awarding compensation pointed out — CrPC, 1898 — S. 545(1)(bb) [as amended by Act 26 of 1955]

In the present case, the accused are possessed of sufficient funds to compensate the loss that has been suffered by the dependants of the deceased. Section 545(1)(bb) was introduced in the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, by Act 26 of 1955. By this amendment, the Court is enabled to direct the accused, who caused the death of another person, to pay compensation to the persons who are, under the Fatal Accidents Act, entitled to recover damages from the persons sentenced, for the loss resulting to them from such death. Though the section enables the Court only to pay compensation out of the fine that would be imposed under law, by S. 357(3) of the new Criminal Procedure Code of 1973, when a court imposes a sentence, of which fine does not form a part, the court may direct the accused to pay compensation. It is the duty of the court to take into account the nature of the crime, the injury suffered, the justness of the claim for compensation, the capacity of the accused to pay and other relevant circumstances in fixing the amount of fine or compensation. The Court should not first consider what compensation ought to be awarded to the heirs of the deceased and then impose a fine which is higher than the compensation.

In the present case, therefore, in addition to the sentence of five years' R.I., a fine of Rs 3500 should be imposed on each of the accused and the fine should be paid as compensation to the widow of the deceased; and in default of payment of fine, the accused would undergo further imprisonment for a period of six months. Sarwan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1978) 4 SCC 111: 1978 SCC (Cri) 549: AIR 1978 SC 1525: 1978 Cri LJ 1598.
Bench Strength 2. Coram: Jaswant Singh and P.S. Kailasam, JJ. [Date of decision: 30-8-1978]

[3804] — S. 357(3) — Award of compensation — Question in respect of, held, would not arise where the sentence imposed by the court includes fine — Hence, plea raised for awarding compensation in the instant case, not allowed — However, on facts, amount of fine imposed by the trial court enhanced

A reading of sub-section (3) of Section 357 would show that the question of award of compensation would arise where the court imposes a sentence of which fine does not form a part. The compensation cannot be awarded in the present case since a sentence of fine has also been imposed. The learned counsel for the appellant submitted that G lost both her parents as well as her brother in the incident and now she is alone and would have become of marriageable age or may have to start some work of her own. She would need some money. The Court is not considering for awarding any compensation to G but the amount of fine imposed, can in any case be reasonably enhanced. (Paras 9 and 11)

Thus, upholding the sentence of life imprisonment on all three counts under Section 302 IPC, the amount of fine imposed is enhanced from Rs 5000 to Rs 20,000 on each count. The sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine is also modified and enhanced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. (Paras 11 and 12). State of Punjab v. Gurmej Singh, (2002) 6 SCC 663: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1460: AIR 2002 SC 2811.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.C. Lahoti and Brijesh Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-8-2002]

Rachhpal Singh v. State of Punjab, (2002) 6 SCC 462: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1362, explained and distinguished

[3805] — S. 357(3) — Compensation — Whether could be awarded where no fine for the offence was statutorily prescribed — Trial court imposing a sentence of ten years' RI and a fine of Rs 2000 for an offence under S. 304-B IPC — High Court confirming the conviction of the accused-appellant but instead of setting aside the fine not warranted by law, enhancing it to Rs 2 lakhs with a direction that the same to be paid to the complainant when recovered — Contention by the respondent that the same be treated as compensation under S. 357(3) — Held, unsustainable — Enhancement of the amount by the High Court without any discussion, can only be treated as enhancement of fine already imposed — Moreover, in absence of any finding or observation by the High Court that the complainant had suffered any loss or injury, direction to pay Rs 2 lakhs on assumption that the amount was paid as dowry to the accused, without any evidence, unwarranted — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 304-B — Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961

Section 357 is an enabling provision by which the court can give direction to the effect that when passing judgment, sentence imposed for payment of fine can be recovered and applied either for defraying the expenses properly incurred in the prosecution or in payment to any person as compensation for any loss or injury caused by the offence, when compensation can be recoverable by such person in a civil court. Section 357(1) is applicable in cases where fine forms the part of the sentence whereas under Section 357(3), the court can direct the convicted person to pay compensation even in cases where the fine does not form part of the sentence. It is not possible to accept the contention that even if the court is not competent to impose fine as a punishment, the court can still order compensation under Section 357(3) CrPC and the direction of the High Court to pay Rs 2 lakhs to the complainant is to be treated as a direction given under Section 357(3). Here the trial court had imposed a sentence of fine of Rs 2000 and the High Court enhanced the quantum of fine without there being any further discussion on the matter. Therefore, the direction to the appellant to pay a fine of Rs 2 lakhs could only be treated as enhancement of fine already imposed by the Sessions Judge. Moreover, Section 357(3) contemplates a situation where the complainant has suffered any loss or injury and for which the accused person has been found prima facie responsible. There is no such finding or observation by the High Court. Of course, the daughter of the complainant passed away but the direction of the High Court to pay Rs 2 lakhs was on the assumption that the complainant had paid Rs 2 lakhs as part of the dowry to the appellant. There is no evidence to show that such an amount was given to the appellant. On the other hand, the appellant's counsel contended that it was a love marriage between the appellant and the deceased and no dowry passed between the parties. The direction to pay compensation under Section 357(3) is on the assumption of basic civil liability on the part of the person who committed the offence to redress the victim or his dependants by payment of compensation. The complainant could not have filed a civil suit for recovery of the dowry amount, if any, as the payment itself was illegal and prohibited under law. In any view of the matter, the direction of the High Court to pay a sum of Rs 2 lakhs as fine and the default sentence was not warranted by law and is set aside. (Para 33). Arun Garg v. State of Punjab, (2004) 8 SCC 251: (2004) 3 KLT 435.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.G. Balakrishnan and Dr. Ar. Lakshmanan, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-9-2004]

[3806] — S. 357(3) — Power to order compensation — Scope — Power under S. 357(3), held, cannot be exercised to enhance a fine already imposed as part of the sentence — Power under S. 357(3) can come into play only where court has imposed a sentence, which does not include a fine — Where appellant had been found guilty of offence under S. 138 r/w S. 142 of the Negotiable Instruments Act and sentenced to 6 months' RI (later modified to last only up to rising of appeal court) and a fine of Rs 5000, held, High Court erred in directing payment of Rs 1 lakh by appellant as compensation to respondent complainant under S. 357(3) — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — S. 138 r/w S. 142 (Para 5). Sivasuriyan v. Thangavelu, (2004) 13 SCC 795.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.B. Pattanaik and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-3-2002]

[Ed.: See also (1994) 3 SCC 430 where the Supreme Court itself enhanced the fine imposed by the High Court (Rs 5000) to Rs 1 lakh, expressly relying on the "message" of Section 357 CrPC.]

[3807] — S. 357(3) — Award of compensation to victims under — Object — Order under, is not ancillary but in addition to other sentences — Liberal exercise of power by courts under, recommended — In appropriate cases order for compensation instead of deterrent sentence of imprisonment would be more justifiable

The power of courts to award compensation to victims under S. 357, while passing judgment of conviction, is not ancillary to other sentences but is in addition thereto. This power was intended to do something to reassure the victim that he or she is not forgotten in the criminal justice system. It is a measure of responding appropriately to crime as well of reconciling the victim with the offender. It is, to some extent, a constructive approach to crimes, a step forward in our criminal justice system. Therefore, all courts are recommended to exercise this power liberally so as to meet the ends of justice in a better way. Any such measure which would give the victim succour is far better than a sentence by deterrence. Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh, (1988) 4 SCC 551: 1988 SCC (Cri) 984: AIR 1988 SC 2127.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-1988]

[3808] — S. 357(3) — Compensation to victim — Nature, scope and object of — Held, in addition to conviction, court may order accused to pay compensation to victim for injuries suffered by him — Power of courts to award compensation is not ancillary to other sentences but is in addition thereto — It is intended to reassure victim that he is not forgotten in criminal justice system — It is a measure of responding appropriately to crime as well as of reconciling victim with offender — Hence, recommended to all courts to exercise said power liberally to meet ends of justice in better way (Paras 14 and 16 to 18) . K.A. Abbas v. Sabu Joseph, (2010) 6 SCC 230.

Sarwan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1978) 4 SCC 111 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 549; Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh, (1988) 4 SCC 551 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 984; Balraj v. State of U.P., (1994) 4 SCC 29 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 823, followed

Dilip S. Dahanukar v. Kotak Mahindra Co. Ltd., (2007) 6 SCC 528 : (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 209; R. v. Oliver John Huish, (1985) 7 Cri App R (S) 272, considered

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P. Sathasivam and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-5-2010]

[3809] — S. 357(3) — Award of compensation to victims under, should be reasonable — Reasonableness of the compensation would depend upon facts and circumstances — Where injury inflicted by accused on head of the victim resulting in permanent impairment of his speech and accused able and willing to bear financial burden, High Court's order to each accused to pay Rs 2500 to the victim, being insufficient, altered and instead accused persons directed to pay Rs 50,000 to the victim

The order under S. 357 for payment by way of compensation must be reasonable. What is reasonable, may depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. The quantum of compensation may be determined by taking into account the nature of crime, the justness of claim by the victim and the ability of accused to pay. If there are more than one accused they may be asked to pay in equal terms unless their capacity to pay varies considerably. The payment may also vary depending upon the acts of each accused. Reasonable period for payment of compensation, if necessary by instalments, may also be given. The court may enforce the order by imposing sentence in default.

In this case the victim's power of speech has been permanently impaired. The lifelong disability of the victim ought not to be bypassed by the court. He must be made to feel that the court and accused have taken care of him. The compensation of Rs 2500 payable by each accused to the victim awarded by the High Court was inadequate, having regard to the nature of injury suffered by the victim. The accused persons have means and ability and are also not unwilling to bear the additional financial burden. With due regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case, award of Rs 50,000 as compensation payable by the accused persons to the victim would meet the ends of justice. Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh, (1988) 4 SCC 551: 1988 SCC (Cri) 984: AIR 1988 SC 2127.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: G.L. Oza and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-1988]

[3810] — Ss. 357(3) and 431 — Compensation to victim — Power to award compensation not ancillary to other sentences but in addition thereto — Widow of deceased left without any support with a family to be maintained — Accused having property and also some means — Accused directed to pay Rs 10,000 by way of compensation to the widow of the deceased. Balraj v. State of U.P., (1994) 4 SCC 29: 1994 SCC (Cri) 823: AIR 1995 SC 1935.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and Dr. A.S. Anand, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-4-1994]

Sarwan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1978) 4 SCC 111: 1978 SCC (Cri) 549; Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh, (1988) 4 SCC 551: 1988 SCC (Cri) 984, relied on

[3811] — Ss. 357(3) and 421 r/w S. 431 — Direction for payment of compensation under S. 357(3) and consequent direction for recovery under S. 421 r/w S. 431 — Nature and scope of power of court under — Comparison with power of civil court — Choice between directing application of fine as compensation and awarding compensation without imposition of fine — Quantum of compensation to be awarded — Considerations involved and procedure to be followed, discussed in detail — Considerations involved in directing payment of fine, compared and contrasted — Effect of guidelines under S. 357(5) — Held, Magistrate cannot award compensation in addition to fine — Also, amount of compensation cannot be arbitrary or unreasonable — Besides, amount of compensation granted under S. 357(3) should ordinarily be lesser than the amount which can be granted by a civil court upon appreciation of evidence brought before it for losses which might have reasonably been suffered by the plaintiff — Jurisdiction of civil court for realisation of the amount must also be borne in mind — A criminal case is not a substitution for a civil suit, far less for execution of a decree which may be passed — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — S. 138 — Constitution of India — Art. 21

Magistrates cannot award compensation in addition to fine. When a fine is imposed, however, the private party has no right to insist that compensation may be awarded to him out of the amount of fine. The power to award compensation under Section 357(3) is not an ancillary power. It is an additional power. (Para 44)

The purpose of imposition of fine and/or grant of compensation to a great extent must be considered having the relevant factors therefor in mind. It may be compensating the person in one way or the other. The amount of compensation sought to be imposed, thus, must be reasonable and not arbitrary. The considerations involved for payment of compensation are somewhat different from payment of fine. It is, to the said extent applied differently. Before issuing a direction to pay compensation, the capacity of the accused to pay the same and the purpose for which it is directed to be paid, must be judged. A fortiori, an enquiry in this behalf even in a summary way, may be necessary. Some reasons, which may not be very elaborate, may also have to be assigned; the purpose being that whereas the power to impose fine is limited and direction to pay compensation can be made for one or the other factors enumerated out of the same; but Section 357(3) does not impose any such limitation and thus, power thereunder should be exercised only in appropriate cases. Such a jurisdiction cannot be exercised at the whims and caprice of a Judge. (Paras 38 and 35)

Whereas under Section 357(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code a fine of Rs 5000 can be imposed; fine in terms of Section 357(2) thereof can be twice the amount of cheque whereas there is no upper limit for award of a compensation. But the same would be subject to other provisions of CrPC which mandate that the amount of fine imposed on an accused cannot be more than Rs 5000. The very fact that Parliament did not think it fit to put a ceiling limit in regard to the amount of compensation leviable upon an accused, the discretionary jurisdiction thereto must be exercised judiciously. (Para 68)

The amount of compensation must be a reasonable sum. Section 357(5) also provides for some guidelines. Prosecution under the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 may be contemplated as a measure of deterrence, but the same is never meant to be a persecution. Even in a case where violation of fundamental right guaranteed under Article 21 is alleged, the amount of compensation cannot be arbitrary or unreasonable under public law. Ordinarily, it should be lesser than the amount which can be granted by a civil court upon appreciation of the evidence brought before it for losses which might have reasonably been suffered by the plaintiff. Jurisdiction of the civil court, in this behalf, for realisation of the amount in question must also be borne in mind. A criminal case is not a substitution for a civil suit, far less for execution of a decree which may be passed. The court, while fixing the amount of compensation, must have regard to all relevant factors including the one referred to in Section 357(5) and no unreasonable amount of compensation can be directed to be paid. [Paras 39 to 41 and 72(iii) to (v)]

Compensation is awarded towards sufferance of any loss or injury by reason of an act for which an accused person is sentenced. Although it provides for a criminal liability, the amount which is awarded as compensation is considered to be recourse of the victim in the same manner which may be granted in a civil suit. (Para 27). Dilip S. Dahanukar v. Kotak Mahindra Co. Ltd., (2007) 6 SCC 528: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 209: (2007) 137 Comp Cas 1: (2007) 2 KLT 488: 2007 Cri LJ 2417: (2007) 55 AIC 244 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-4-2007]

Rachhpal Singh v. State of Punjab, (2002) 6 SCC 462: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1362; State of Punjab v. Gurmej Singh, (2002) 6 SCC 663: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1460; Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh, (1988) 4 SCC 551: 1988 SCC (Cri) 984; Sarwan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1978) 4 SCC 111: 1978 SCC (Cri) 549; Sube Singh v. State of Haryana, (2006) 3 SCC 178: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 54, relied on

[3812] — Ss. 357(3), 386 second proviso and 29(2) — Order to pay compensation instead of fine — S. 138, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — Even the High Court when functioning as a court of appeal held, has to conform to the second proviso to S. 386 and thus cannot impose greater punishment or fine than might have been inflicted by the trial court — However, the Magistrate or other trial court can award any sum as compensation under S. 357(3) and compensate for the loss to the complainant — Thus held, in respect of a cheque which covers an amount exceeding Rs 5,000 such court has the power to award appropriate compensation to the complainant — High Court in appeal erred in imposing a fine of Rs 1 lakh — Matter remanded to trial court on question of sentence

The appellate court cannot obviate the jurisdictional limit prescribed in Section 386 of the Code. Though the said provision confers power on the court of appeal to reverse an order of acquittal and find the accused guilty and pass sentence on him according to law, even the High Court when it is the court of appeal has to conform to the second proviso to Section 386 of the Code. (Para 27)

The trial in this case was held before a Judicial Magistrate of the First Class who could not have imposed a fine exceeding Rs 5000 besides imprisonment. The High Court while convicting the accused in the same case could not impose a sentence of fine exceeding the said limit. (Para 29)

If a Judicial Magistrate of the First Class were to order compensation to be paid to the complainant from out of the fine realised the complainant will be the loser when the cheque amount exceeded the said limit. In such a case a complainant would get only the maximum amount of rupees five thousand. But the Magistrate in such cases can alleviate the grievance of the complainant by making resort to Section 357(3) CrPC. The Supreme Court has emphasised the need for making liberal use of that provision. No limit is mentioned in the sub-section and therefore, a Magistrate can award any sum as compensation. Of course while fixing the quantum of such compensation the Magistrate has to consider what would be the reasonable amount of compensation payable to the complainant. Thus, even if the trial was before a Court of a Magistrate of the First Class in respect of a cheque which covers an amount exceeding Rs 5000 the Court has power to award compensation to be paid to the complainant. (Paras 30 and 31)

Therefore, the question of sentence and award of compensation must be considered by the trial court. The Magistrate shall hear the prosecution and the accused on those aspects. Of course, if the complainant and the accused settle their disputes regarding this cheque, in the meanwhile, that fact can certainly be taken into consideration in determining the extent or quantum of sentence. (Para 32). K. Bhaskaran v. Sankaran Vaidhyan Balan, (1999) 7 SCC 510: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1284: AIR 1999 SC 3762.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K.T. Thomas and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-9-1999]

Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh, (1988) 4 SCC 551: 1988 SCC (Cri) 984, followed [3813] — Ss. 357(3) & (1) and 421 — Power to order payment of compensation — Power to order default sentence of imprisonment in case of non-payment of the compensation [especially when compensation not part of fine as under S. 357(3)] — Jurisdiction under Ss. 357(1) & (3) in relation to — Comparison between — Extent of power under S. 357(3) — Held, compensation can be directed to be paid both in terms of Ss. 357(1) & (3) — But while exercising jurisdiction under S. 357(3), no sentence of imprisonment can be ordered for default in payment of compensation — Such an order can be passed only in terms of S. 357(1) — If the compensation directed to be paid under S. 357(3) is not deposited, the same can be realised as fine in terms of S. 421 CrPC (Paras 1 and 2). Ahammedkutty v. Abdullakoya, (2009) 6 SCC 660.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-8-2007]

[3814] — Ss. 357(3), 421 and 431 r/w S. 64 IPC — Content and scope — Compensation not part of fine — If default sentence can be imposed for non-payment of such compensation — Held, Ss. 357(3) and 431 CrPC, when r/w S. 64 IPC, empower the court, while making an order for payment of compensation not part of fine, to also include a default sentence in case of non-payment of the same — If recourse can only be had to S. 421 CrPC for enforcing the same, the very object of S. 357(3) would be frustrated and the relief contemplated therein would be rendered somewhat illusory — The provision for grant of compensation under S. 357(3) CrPC and the recovery thereof makes it necessary for the imposition of a default sentence — While awarding compensation under S.

357(3) CrPC, the court is within its jurisdiction to add a default sentence of imprisonment — Penal Code, 1860, S. 64 (Paras 26 to 28 and 31 to 33). Vijayan v. Sadanandan K., (2009) 6 SCC 652.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Altamas Kabir and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-5-2009]

Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh, (1988) 4 SCC 551: 1988 SCC (Cri) 984; Suganthi Suresh Kumar v. Jugdeeshan, (2002) 2 SCC 420: 2002 SCC (Cri) 344, followed

Rajendran v. Jose, (2002) 1 Crimes 653 (Ker): (2001) 3 KLT 431, impliedly overruled

Dilip S. Dahanukar v. Kotak Mahindra Co. Ltd., (2007) 6 SCC 528: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 209, distinguished and clarified

Ahammedkutty v. Abdullakoya, (2009) 6 SCC 660: (2008) 1 KLT 851, impliedly doubted and not followed

Balraj v. State of U.P., (1994) 4 SCC 29: 1994 SCC (Cri) 823, distinguished

Shantilal v. State of M.P., (2007) 11 SCC 243: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 1; Kuldip Kaur v. Surinder Singh, (1989) 1 SCC 405: 1989 SCC (Cri) 171, impliedly relied on [3815] — S. 357(3) — Imposition of default sentence for default in payment of compensation — Permissibility — Factors to be considered — Held, such sentence can be imposed, purpose whereof is to accommodate interests of victim — In some situations, no purpose is served by keeping a person behind bars, so accused is directed to pay compensation to victim — Hence on default of payment of this compensation, there must be a just recourse — Not imposing a sentence of imprisonment would mean allowing accused to get away without paying the compensation and imposing another fine would be impractical as it would mean imposing a fine upon another fine and therefore would not ensure proper enforcement of order of compensation — However, while passing an order under S. 357(3), it is imperative for courts to look at ability and capacity of accused to pay the amount otherwise very purpose of granting compensation would stand defeated (Paras 26 and 21 to 23) . K.A. Abbas v. Sabu Joseph, (2010) 6 SCC 230.

Suganthi Suresh Kumar v. Jagdeeshan, (2002) 2 SCC 420 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 344; Balraj v. State of U.P., (1994) 4 SCC 29 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 823; Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh, (1988) 4 SCC 551 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 984, followed

Vijayan v. Sadanandan K., (2009) 6 SCC 652 : (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 296; Shantilal v. State of M.P., (2007) 11 SCC 243 : (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 1, relied on

Ahammedkutty v. Abdullakoya, (2009) 6 SCC 660 : (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 302; Radhakrishnan Nair v. Padmanabhan, (2000) 2 KLT 349; Rajendran v. Jose, (2001) 3 KLT 431, overruled

Kuldip Kaur v. Surinder Singh, (1989) 1 SCC 405 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 171, considered

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P. Sathasivam and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-5-2010]

[3816] — Ss. 357(3), 421 and 431 — Imposition of default sentence for default in payment of compensation — Permissibility — Rationale for — Compensation ordered under S. 357(3) is recoverable in same way as if it were fine — Person can be imprisoned for non-payment of fine — Since legislative intent is clearly to ensure that mode of recovery of fine and compensation are on same footing, accused can be sentenced to imprisonment for default in payment of compensation — Penal Code, 1860, S. 64 — Magistrates' Courts Act, 1980, S. 82(3) (UK) — Sentencing Act, 1997, S. 4 (Australia) (Paras 29 to 31). K.A. Abbas v. Sabu Joseph, (2010) 6 SCC 230.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P. Sathasivam and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-5-2010]

[3817] — S. 357(3) — Reformative theory of punishment — Sentence till rising of the court awarded by the High Court for offence under Ss. 325/149 IPC is inadequate — But in the circumstances of the case, keeping in view the modern theory of penology to reform the accused it would not be proper to enhance the sentence and send the 19 accused persons to jail — Hence in addition to sentence of imprisonment already undergone by the accused persons each one of them directed to pay, by way of compensation, a sum of Rs 2000 to the complainant party (Para 4). Gulab Singh v. Yuvraj Singh, 1995 Supp (4) SCC 623: 1996 SCC (Cri) 68.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-7-1994]

[3818] — S. 357(3) — Compensation — Family feud resulting in death — Award of compensation more appropriate than sentence of imprisonment — Award of compensation to the heirs of the victim — Property dispute between father and son leading to death of the son — Appellants convicted under Ss. 299/304 Pt. I IPC — Incident happening about 11 years ago — Appellants in a position to pay compensation — Held, in the circumstances of the case order for compensation instead of sentence of imprisonment would be more appropriate — Sentence reduced to the period already undergone (more than 2 years) — Both the appellants directed to pay by way of compensation a sum of Rs 35,000 each to the widow of the victim and her children — Amount shall be recoverable as a decree passed by the Court (Para 17). Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab, (1995) 6 SCC 593: 1995 SCC (Cri) 1132: AIR 1996 SC 372.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. A.S. Anand and K.S. Paripoornan, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-10-1995]

[3819] — S. 357(3) — Compensation to family of victim — Conviction for abetment to suicide of wife under S. 306 IPC — Fine on offender ordered to be paid to victim's father. State of A.P. v. Kuna Satyanarayana, (1998) 8 SCC 268.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B.N. Kirpal and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-9-1998]

[3820] — S. 357(3) — Compensation to the victims — Conviction under S. 304-A for rash and negligent driving causing death of one person and injuries to other — Appellant truck driver directed to pay Rs 30,000 by way of compensation to the legal heirs of the deceased and Rs 10,000 to the injured. Hardev Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Supp (2) SCC 282: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1234.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: K. Jayachandra Reddy and Yogeshwar Dayal, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-5-1994]

[3821] — S. 357(4) — Exercise of power under, to grant compensation to victims of offence — Opportunity of hearing, held, must be given before exercising the said power

An opportunity of hearing has to be granted before directing payment of compensation under Section 357(4) of the Code. Thus, if the appellate court intends to award compensation, it must grant an opportunity of hearing so that the relevant aspects like the need to award compensation, capacity of the accused to pay and several other relevant factors can be taken note of. (Paras 11 and 12). Mangilal v. State of M.P., (2004) 2 SCC 447: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1085: AIR 2004 SC 1280: (2004) 1 KLT 1038: 2004 Cri LJ 880.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-1-2004]

Swadeshi Cotton Mills v. Union of India, (1981) 1 SCC 664, relied on [3822] — S. 357(4) — Expression "may" — Held, has been used in permissive sense and not obligatory (Para 12). Mangilal v. State of M.P., (2004) 2 SCC 447: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1085: AIR 2004 SC 1280: (2004) 1 KLT 1038: 2004 Cri LJ 880.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-1-2004]

[3823] — Ss. 357(4), (3) and (1) — Power of court to award compensation to victims of offence — Held, is not ancillary to other sentences but is in addition thereto — Said power can be exercised by appellate/revisional court even in absence of imposition of fine

In the instant case, the High Court in appeal had directed each accused (including the appellant) to pay compensation @ Rs 30,000 to the victims of the offence. Fixing a proportion by apportionment it was directed that out of the compensation, 2/3rd was to be paid to the heirs of the deceased while the rest 1/3rds was to be paid to the injured (PW 8). Before the Supreme Court, the appellant raised objection against the said award and contended (i) that the High Court had not kept in view the object underlying the grant of compensation under Section 357 of the Code, and (ii) that this was a case where no fine was imposed by the trial court, but the High Court directed payment of compensation.

Rejecting the said contention but partly allowing the appeal,

Held:

The power of the court to award compensation to victims under Section 357 is not ancillary to other sentences but is in addition thereto. (Para 8)

Sub-section (1) of Section 357 deals with a situation when a court imposes a fine or a sentence (including sentence of death) of which fine also forms a part. It confers a discretion on the court to order as to how the whole or any part of fine recovered is to be applied. If no fine is imposed, sub-section (1) of Section 357 has no application. The basic difference between sub-sections (1) and (3) of Section 357 is that in the former case, the imposition of fine is the basic and essential requirement, while in the latter even the absence thereof empowers the court to direct payment of compensation. Such power is available to be exercised by an appellate court or by the High Court or Court of Session when exercising revisional powers. (Para 7). Mangilal v. State of M.P., (2004) 2 SCC 447: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1085: AIR 2004 SC 1280: (2004) 1 KLT 1038: 2004 Cri LJ 880.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-1-2004]

[3824] — S. 357(5) — Award of compensation in public law proceedings — Object of — Different from compensation in private tort law action — In case of violation of fundamental right by State's instrumentalities or servants, Court can direct the State to pay compensation to the victim or his heir by way of 'monetary amends' and redressal — Principle of sovereign immunity inapplicable in such cases — This remedy is apart from the private law remedy — Writ petition filed by mother alleging death of his son aged 22 years in police custody in violation of Art. 21 and claiming compensation — Custodial death established — Having regard to the age of the deceased and his monthly income ranging between Rs 1200 to 1500, State directed to pay Rs 1,50,000 as compensation to deceased's mother and Rs 10,000 as costs to Supreme Court Legal Aid Committee — This is besides petitioner's right to claim compensation in other proceedings in which case the amount awarded by the Supreme Court would be adjusted — Other liabilities of respondents or any other person for the custodial death to remain unaffected — Motor Vehicles Act, 1988, S. 141(3) — International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Art. 9(5) — Constitution of India — Arts. 32, 226 & 142 and 300

Per Verma and Venkatachala, JJ.

The liability of the State of Orissa in the present case to pay the compensation cannot be doubted.

Enforcement of the constitutional right and grant of redress embraces award of compensation as part of the legal consequences of its contravention. Award of compensation in a proceeding under Art. 32 by the Supreme Court or by the High Court under Art. 226 is a remedy available in public law, based on strict liability for contravention of fundamental rights to which the principle of sovereign immunity does not apply, even though it may be available as a defence in private law in an action based on tort. 'A claim in public law for compensation' for contravention of human rights and fundamental freedoms, the protection of which is guaranteed in the Constitution, is an acknowledged remedy for enforcement and protection of such rights, and such a claim based on strict liability made by resorting to a constitutional remedy provided for the enforcement of a fundamental right is 'distinct from, and in addition to, the remedy in private law for damages for the tort' resulting from the contravention of the fundamental right. The defence of sovereign immunity being inapplicable, and alien to the concept of guarantee of fundamental rights, there can be no question of such a defence being available in the constitutional remedy. It is this principle which justifies award of monetary compensation for contravention of fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution, when that is the only practicable mode of redress available for the contravention made by the State or its servants in the purported exercise of their powers, and enforcement of the fundamental right is claimed by resort to the remedy in public law under the Constitution by recourse to Arts. 32 and 226. This is what was indicated in Rudul Sah and is the basis of the subsequent decisions in which compensation was awarded under Arts. 32 and 226, for contravention of fundamental rights. Certain further observations in Rudul Sah which may tend to minimise the effect of the principle indicated therein, do not really detract from that principle. This is how the decisions of the Supreme Court in Rudul Sah and others in that line have to be understood and Kasturilal distinguished therefrom.

The court is not helpless and the wide powers given to the Supreme Court by Art. 32, which itself is a fundamental right, imposes a constitutional obligation on the Court to forge such new tools, which may be necessary for doing complete justice and enforcing the fundamental rights guaranteed in the Constitution, which enable the award of monetary compensation in appropriate cases, where that is the only mode of redress available. The power available to the Supreme Court under Art. 142 is also an enabling provision in this behalf. The contrary view would not merely render the court powerless and the constitutional guarantee a mirage, but may, in certain situations, be an incentive to extinguish life, if for the extreme contravention the court is powerless to grant any relief against the State, except by punishment of the wrongdoer for the resulting offence, and recovery of damages under private law, by the ordinary process. If the guarantee that deprivation of life and personal liberty cannot be made except in accordance with law, is to be real, the enforcement of the right in case of every contravention must also be possible in the constitutional scheme, the mode of redress being that which is appropriate in the facts of each case. This remedy in public law has to be more readily available when invoked by the have-nots, who are not possessed of the wherewithal for enforcement of their rights in private law, even though its exercise is to be tempered by judicial restraint to avoid circumvention of private law remedies, where more appropriate.

Article 9(5) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966 (which reads: "Anyone who has been the victim of unlawful arrest or detention shall have an enforceable right to compensation.") also indicates that an enforceable right to compensation is not alien to the concept of enforcement of a guaranteed right.

Having regard to the fact based on evidence recorded by the District Judge that the deceased was aged about 22 years and had a monthly income between Rs 1200 to Rs 1500, a total amount of Rs 1,50,000 would be appropriate as compensation, to be awarded to the petitioner in the present case. However, the award of compensation in this proceeding would be taken into account for adjustment, in the event of any other proceeding taken by the petitioner for recovery of compensation on the same ground, so that the amount to this extent is not recovered by the petitioner twice over. Apart from the fact that such an order is just, it is also in consonance with the statutory recognition of this principle of adjustment provided in S. 357(5) CrPC and S. 141(3) of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1988. Accordingly the respondent State is directed to pay the sum of Rs 1,50,000 to the petitioner and a further sum of Rs 10,000 as costs to be paid to the Supreme Court Legal Aid Committee. The mode of payment of Rs 1,50,000 to the petitioner would be, by making a term deposit of that amount in a scheduled bank in the petitioner's name for a period of three years, during which she would receive only the interest payable thereon, the principal amount being payable to her on expiry of the term. The Collector of the District will take the necessary steps in this behalf, and report compliance to the Registrar (Judicial) of the Supreme Court within three months.

The award of this compensation, apart from the direction for adjustment of the amount as indicated, will not affect any other liability of the respondents or any other person flowing from the custodial death of petitioner's son.

Per Anand, J. (concurring)

While granting relief to the heirs of a victim of custodial death for the infraction or invasion of his rights guaranteed under Art. 21 it is not always enough to relegate him to the ordinary remedy of a civil suit to claim damages for the tortious act of the State as that remedy in private law indeed is available to the aggrieved party. The old doctrine of only relegating the aggrieved to the remedies available in civil law limits the role of the courts too much as protector and guarantor of the indefeasible rights of the citizens. The courts have the obligation to satisfy the social aspirations of the citizens because the courts and the law are for the people and expected to respond to their aspirations. The citizen complaining of the infringement of the indefeasible right under Art. 21 cannot be told that for the established violation of the fundamental right to life, he cannot get any relief under the public law by the courts exercising writ jurisdiction. The primary source of the public law proceedings stems from the prerogative writs and the courts have, therefore, to evolve 'new tools' to give relief in public law by moulding it according to the situation with a view to preserve and protect the Rule of Law.

The Supreme Court and the High Courts, being the protectors of the civil liberties of the citizen, have not only the power and jurisdiction but also an obligation to grant relief in exercise of its jurisdiction under Arts. 32 and 226 to the victim or the heir of the victim whose fundamental rights under Art. 21 are established to have been flagrantly infringed by calling upon the State to repair the damage done by its officers to the fundamental rights of the citizen, notwithstanding the right of the citizen to the remedy by way of a civil suit or criminal proceedings. The State, of course has the right to be indemnified by and take such action as may be available to it against the wrongdoer in accordance with law — through appropriate proceedings. Of course, relief in exercise of the power under Art. 32 or 226 would be granted only once it is established that there has been an infringement of the fundamental rights of the citizen and no other form of appropriate redressal by the court in the facts and circumstances of the case, is possible. It is a sound policy to punish the wrongdoer and it is in that spirit that the courts have moulded the relief by granting compensation to the victims in exercise of their writ jurisdiction. In doing so the courts take into account not only the interest of the applicant and the respondent but also the interests of the public as a whole with a view to ensure that public bodies or officials do not act unlawfully and do perform their public duties properly particularly where the fundamental right of a citizen under Art. 21 is concerned. Law is in the process of development and the process necessitates developing separate public law procedures as also public law principles. It may be necessary to identify the situations to which separate proceedings and principles apply and the courts have to act firmly but with certain amount of circumspection and self-restraint, lest proceedings under Art. 32 or 226 are misused as a disguised substitute for civil action in private law.

In the facts of the present case on the findings already recorded, the mode of redress which commends appropriate is to make an order of monetary amends in favour of the petitioner for the custodial death of her son by ordering payment of compensation by way of exemplary damages.

I concur with the view expressed by Brother Verma, J. and the directions given by him in the judgment in all respects. Nilabati Behera v. State of Orissa, (1993) 2 SCC 746: 1993 SCC (Cri) 527: AIR 1993 SC 1960: 1993 Cri LJ 2899: (1993) 76 CLT 98: 1993 ACJ 787.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : J.S. Verma[1], Dr. A.S. Anand[2] and N. Venkatachala, JJ. [Date of decision : 24-3-1993]

Rudul Sah v. State of Bihar, (1983) 4 SCC 141: (1983) 3 SCR 508: 1983 SCC (Cri) 798, explained and applied

[3825] — S. 357(5) — Compensation — Adjustment of, in civil suit — Adjustment of amounts awarded in terms of S. 357 CrPC — Jurisdiction of appellate and revisional courts including High Court, held, can be exercised to award a reasonable compensation — CPC, 1908, S. 9 and Or. 20 R. 6

The appeal being a continuation of the suit and the appellants having in total deposited a sum of Rs 4,00,000 i.e. Rs 2,10,000 in the criminal proceedings and Rs 1,90,000 in the civil proceedings, out of which a sum of Rs 3,09,000 having been withdrawn by the respondent, the High Court was obligated to take the same into consideration. In view of the doctrine of purposive construction, compensation directed by a court to be paid should be a reasonable one. An appeal from a decree, is a continuation of suit. The limitation of power on a civil court should also be borne in mind by the appellate court as to whether any duty was cast upon the civil court to consider the amount of compensation deposited in terms of Section 357 CrPC. Such an order can also be passed by the appellate court or by the High Court or by the Court of Session when exercising its power of revision. It is futile to urge that on the date on which the civil court passed the decree the appellants were not convicted. (Paras 11 to 15)

Actus curiae neminem gravabit (no person shall be prejudiced by an act of court) is a well-known maxim. In any event, the Supreme Court in exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 136 as also under Article 142 of the Constitution of India can direct rectification of a mistake committed by the courts below. Therefore, the impugned judgment should be modified and the matter be remitted to the trial Judge. (Paras 18 and 19). D. Purushotama Reddy v. K. Sateesh, (2008) 8 SCC 505: (2008) 3 KLT 590: (2008) 69 AIC 238 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision : 1-8-2008]

Dilip S. Dahanukar v. Kotak Mahindra Co. Ltd., (2007) 6 SCC 528: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 209; Manish Jalan v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 8 SCC 225; New India Assurance Co. Ltd. v. Nusli Neville Wadia, (2008) 3 SCC 279, relied on

[3826] — Ss. 357(5) and (1)(b) — Adjustment by civil court of compensation awarded under S. 357 — Duty of civil court — Determination in money suit when fine already paid in criminal proceedings for the same cause of action — Civil suit decreed subsequent to conviction and sentence in criminal proceedings — Criminal court's direction to deposit the fine, held, should have been taken into consideration by civil court while passing a decree against the defendant — It was statutorily bound to do so — CPC, 1908, S. 9, Or. 37 R. 1 and Or. 20 — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138

Although, it is beyond any doubt or dispute that for the same cause of action both a civil suit and a complaint petition under Section 138 of NI Act would be maintainable, in terms of Section 357 CrPC, a duty is cast upon the civil courts to take into account the sum paid or recovered as compensation in the criminal proceedings. The judgment of conviction and sentence was passed by the criminal court on 15-12-2005. The suit was decreed by the civil court on 23-1-2006. Deposit of a sum of Rs 2,00,000 by the appellants in favour of the respondent was directed by the criminal court. Such an order should have been taken into consideration by the civil court. (Paras 9 and 11 to 14). D. Purushotama Reddy v. K. Sateesh, (2008) 8 SCC 505: (2008) 3 KLT 590: (2008) 69 AIC 238 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and Cyriac Joseph, JJ. [Date of decision : 1-8-2008]

— S. 358 See Ss. 357 & 358

See also Ss. 357, 358 and 397

See also Ss. 482, 148(3), 342, 359, 357, 358 and 227

[3827] — S. 358 — Legal remedies suggested in matter relating to police atrocities — Report submitted by the District Judge, as directed by the Supreme Court, revealing possibility of assault on petitioner's husband by police officers — Report also stating discrepancies in the contentions of the petitioner — In the circumstances, without deciding the case on merits, Govt. directed to conduct departmental proceedings against the said officers on the basis of the report — Option of initiating criminal action, making claim for damages and other reliefs permissible under the law left open for petitioner's husband — Constitution of India — Arts. 21 and 32. Vinesh Pundir v. State of U.P., (2002) 9 SCC 563.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M. Jagannadha Rao and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision : 20-4-2000]

[3828] — S. 358 — Compensation — For illegal detention in police custody — Where detenus themselves not fair before the Court and filing false affidavit and exaggerating the incident by involving persons who were not present at the scene, held, they would not be entitled to any compensation from State — Constitution of India — Arts. 32 and 21

Since it has been found that the detenus had been illegally detained by Respondents 3 to 5 for two days, the State must be held responsible for the unlawful acts of its officers and it must repair the damage done to the citizens by its officers for violating their indefeasible fundamental right of personal liberty without any authority of law in an absolutely high-handed manner. But the Court would not direct the State Govt. to compensate the detenu and the driver since the driver indulged in falsehood in the Supreme Court and the detenu also exaggerated the incident by stating that two employees of Respondents 6 and 7 were also present with the police party, which version has not been found to be correct by the CBI. Therefore, they both have disentitled themselves from receiving any compensation, as monetary amends for the wrong done by Respondents 3 to 5, in detaining them. (Para 54). Dhananjay Sharma v. State of Haryana, (1995) 3 SCC 757: 1995 SCC (Cri) 608: AIR 1995 SC 1795.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. A.S. Anand[1] and Faizan Uddin[2], JJ. [Date of decision : 2-5-1995]

[3829] — S. 358 — Human rights violation — Police atrocities — Follow-up action against and compensation — Abduction and elimination of seven persons by police party led by DSP by misusing official machinery to wreak private vengeance — Report submitted by Director, CBI in compliance with Supreme Court's order dated 15-9-1994 — Report showing indolent attitude of high-ranking police officers inasmuch as SSP taking no action on the complaint for two months and DIG sitting on it for 8 months and only crime branch charge-sheeting the accused persons but matter at no stage brought to the notice of DGP — Conduct of Punjab Police as a whole deprecated by Supreme Court — Prosecution directed to be completed expeditiously — Disciplinary proceedings directed to be initiated against the erring officials including the SSP and DIG concerned — State as a token of its failure to enforce law and order and to protect its citizens, must bear the consequence by paying Rs 1.50 lakhs to LRs of each of the seven victims within two weeks — Amount can later be recovered from persons found to be guilty — State shall also pay to the petitioner costs quantified at Rs 25,000 — Constitution of India — Arts. 32 and 21

The primary duty of those in uniform is to uphold law and order and protect the citizen. If members of a police force resort to illegal abduction and assassination, if other members of that police force do not record and investigate complaints in this behalf for long periods of time, if those who had been abducted are found to have been unlawfully detained in police stations in the State concerned prior to their probable assassination, the case is not one of errant behaviour by a few members of that police force. It betrays scant respect for the life and liberty of innocent citizens and exposes the willingness of others in uniform to lend a helping hand to one who wreaks private vengeance on mere suspicion. The Punjab Police as a whole merit the Supreme Court's disapprobation, the Crime Branch thereof a word of praise. (Para 9)

The Supreme Court has in recent times come across far too many instances where the police have acted not to uphold the law and protect the citizen but in aid of a private cause and to oppress the citizen. It is a trend that bodes ill for the country and it must be promptly checked. The DGP, Punjab is expected to take a serious view of such cases. The Home Department of the Central Govt. cannot also afford to appear to be a helpless spectator. (Para 10)

When the police force of a State acts as the Punjab Police has in this case, the State whose arm that force is must bear the consequences. It must do so in token of its failure to enforce law and order and protect its citizens and to compensate in some measure those who have suffered by reason of such failure. The State of Punjab is directed to pay to the legal representatives of each of the said seven persons an amount of Rs 1.50 lakhs within 2 weeks. Later, when the guilty are identified, the State should endeavour to recover the said amount which is the taxpayers' money. (Para 11)

The prosecution of those who have been charge-sheeted in connection with the abduction and disappearance of the said seven persons should be expeditiously conducted under the supervision of the Crime Branch of the Punjab Police. The court trying the accused is cautioned that it should decide the case on the evidence that may be laid before it without being unduly influenced by what has been said in this Order. (Para 12)

Disciplinary inquiries must be started against the accused persons as also the SSP and DIG concerned. Others responsible for delaying the registration of the complaint and inquiry thereon must also be identified and proceeded against. (Para 13)

The State of Punjab shall pay to the petitioner the costs of the writ petition, quantified at Rs 25,000. (Para 14). Inder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1995) 3 SCC 702: 1995 SCC (L&S) 857: (1995) 30 ATC 122: 1995 SCC (Cri) 586: AIR 1995 SC 1949: 1995 Cri LJ 3235.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : A.M. Ahmadi, C.J. and Dr. A.S. Anand and S.P. Bharucha, JJ. [Date of decision : 10-5-1995]

— S. 359 See also Ss. 482, 148(3), 342, 359, 357, 358 and 227

[3830] — S. 359 — Imposition of costs by High Court without indicating any reason therefor — Sustainability — FIR lodged by Respondent 2 alleging that Respondent 1 along with his mother and sister had abducted Respondent 2's daughter — In the writ petition filed by Respondent 1 seeking writ in the nature of certiorari for quashing the said FIR, High Court granting him relief — While doing so it also imposing costs of Rs 50,000 against Respondent 2 and State — However, as far as Respondent 2 was concerned it was further observed that imposing costs on him would create further rift in families and if he gives an undertaking that he would reconcile to the situation he would not be liable — Held, impugned order of the High Court so far as it relates to the imposition of cost is founded on no basis — No finding recorded that the police officials were remiss in any way and/or had committed any lapse during investigation — In the absence of any reason having been indicated by the High Court as to why the Court felt the necessity for imposing cost, the direction for payment of cost cannot be sustained and hence set aside — Further held, unless any lapse on the part of any authority is found and opportunity is granted to the alleged erring official, cost should not be imposed — Whenever it is felt that cost is to be imposed, the reason for such a conclusion has to be recorded — Constitution of India — Art. 226 (Paras 3, 6, 8 and 9). State of U.P. v. Nitin Agnihotri, (2008) 8 SCC 31: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 412: 2008 Cri LJ 3907: (2008) 5 All LJ 785: (2008) 3 KLT 478.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. Arijit Pasayat and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision : 21-7-2008]

— S. 360 See also S. 380 (at p. 1178) and Ss. 562, 563 & 564 (at p. 1309), Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 in Vol. 2

See also CRIMINAL LAW — PRISONS, PRISONERS AND PROBATION OF OFFENDERS

See also CRIMINAL TRIAL — 'Age' in Vol. 3

— S. 360 See Ss. 235(2), 248(2), 255(2) and 360

See also Ss. 235(2), 248(2), 325, 360 and 361

See also Ss. 235(2) and 360

See also Ss. 354(3), 360 and 361

See also Ss. 354(3) and 361 & 360

See also Ss. 362 and 360

See also Ss. 374 and 360

See also Ss. 386, 378 and 360

[3831] — Ss. 360 and 361 — Applicability of provisions of the 1958 Act vis-à-vis Ss. 360 & 361 CrPC — Held, where provisions of the 1958 Act apply resort to S. 360 CrPC not to be made — Enforcement of the 1958 Act in some particular area excludes the applicability of the provisions of Ss. 360 & 361 CrPC in that area — Distinguishing provisions of S. 360 CrPC from those of the 1958 Act, held, the two statutes (i.e. the 1958 Act and CrPC) with such significant differences could not be intended to coexist at the same time in the same area — Such coexistence would lead to anomalous results — In present case, matter remitted to High Court to consider whether benefits under the 1958 Act or S. 360 CrPC could be extended to appellant — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 8(1) — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, Ss. 380 and 562 to 564 — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, Ss. 3 & 4

Where the provisions of the Probation of Offenders Act (for short the "PO Act") are applicable the employment of Section 360 CrPC is not to be made. In cases of such application, it would be an illegality resulting in highly undesirable consequences, which the legislature, who gave birth to the PO Act and the Code of Criminal Procedure, wanted to obviate. The provisions of the PO Act have a paramountcy of their own in the respective areas where they are applicable. (Para 11)

In comparison to Section 360 CrPC, the scope of Section 4 of the PO Act is much wider. It applies to any person found guilty of having committed an offence not punishable with death or imprisonment for life. Further, Section 360 CrPC does not provide for any role for Probation Officers in assisting the courts in relation to supervision and other matters while the PO Act does make such a provision. That apart, while Section 12 of the PO Act states that the person found guilty of an offence and dealt with under Section 3 or 4 of the said Act shall not suffer disqualification, if any, attached to conviction of an offence under any law, the Code does not contain any such parallel provision. Two statutes with such significant differences could not be intended to co-exist at the same time in the same area. Such co-existence would lead to anomalous results. The intention to retain the provisions of Section 360 CrPC and the provisions of the PO Act as applicable at the same time in a given area, cannot be gathered from the provisions of Section 360 or any other provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Therefore, by virtue of Section 8(1) of the General Clauses Act, where the provisions of the Act have been brought into force, the provisions of Section 360 CrPC are wholly inapplicable. Enforcement of the PO Act in some particular area excludes the applicability of the provisions of Sections 360 and 361 CrPC in that area. (Paras 12 and 13)

In the present case, the matter is remitted to the High Court to consider whether the benefits under the PO Act or Section 360 CrPC can be extended to the appellant. (Para 15). Gulzar v. State of M.P., (2007) 1 SCC 619: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 395: (2007) 50 AIC 123 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision : 4-1-2007]

[3832] — Ss. 360 and 361 — Applicability of provisions of the 1958 Act vis-à-vis Ss. 360 & 361 CrPC — Held, where provisions of the 1958 Act apply resort to S. 360 CrPC not to be made — Enforcement of the 1958 Act in some particular area excludes the applicability of the provisions of Ss. 360 & 361 CrPC in that area — Distinguishing provisions of S. 360 CrPC from those of the 1958 Act, held, the two statutes (i.e. the 1958 Act and CrPC) with such significant differences could not be intended to coexist at the same time in the same area — Such coexistence would lead to anomalous results — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 8(1) — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, Ss. 380 and 562 to 564 — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4

Where the provisions of the Probation Act are applicable the employment of Section 360 CrPC is not to be made. In cases of such application, it would be an illegality resulting in highly undesirable consequences, which the legislature, that gave birth to the Probation Act and the Code, wanted to obviate. The provisions of the Probation Act have a paramountcy of their own in the respective areas where they are applicable. (Para 6)

In comparison to Section 360 CrPC, the scope of Section 4 of the Probation Act is much wider. It applies to any person found guilty of having committed an offence not punishable with death or imprisonment for life. Further, Section 360 does not provide for any role for the probation officers in assisting the courts in relation to supervision and other matters while the Probation Act does make such a provision. That apart, while Section 12 of the Probation Act states that the person found guilty of an offence and dealt with under Section 3 or 4 of the said Act shall not suffer disqualification, if any, attached to conviction of an offence under any law, the Code does not contain any such parallel provision. Two statutes with such significant differences could not be intended to coexist at the same time in the same area. Such coexistence would lead to anomalous results. The intention to retain the provisions of Section 360 CrPC and the provisions of the Probation Act as applicable at the same time in a given area cannot be gathered from the provisions of Section 360 or any other provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Therefore, by virtue of Section 8(1) of the General Clauses Act, where the provisions of the Act have been brought into force, the provisions of Section 360 CrPC are wholly inapplicable. Enforcement of the Probation Act in some particular area excludes the applicability of the provisions of Sections 360 and 361 CrPC in that area. (Paras 7 and 8). Daljit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 6 SCC 159: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 20.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision : 27-7-2006]

[3833] — Ss. 360 and 361 — Scope and applicability of provisions of the 1958 Act vis-à-vis provisions of Ss. 360 & 361 CrPC — Held, where provisions of the 1958 Act apply resort to S. 360 CrPC is not required — Enforcement of the 1958 Act in some particular area excludes the applicability of the provisions of Ss. 360 & 361 CrPC in that area — Distinguishing the provisions of S. 360 CrPC from those of the 1958 Act, held, the two statutes (i.e. 1958 Act and CrPC) with such significant differences could not be intended to coexist at the same time in the same area — Such coexistence would lead to anomalous results — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, Ss. 380 and 562 to 564 — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 8(1) — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4

Where the provisions of the Probation Act are applicable the employment of Section 360 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not to be made. In cases of such application, it would be an illegality resulting in highly undesirable consequences, which the legislature, that gave birth to the Probation Act and the Code wanted to obviate. The provisions of the Probation Act have a paramountcy of their own in the respective areas where they are applicable. (Para 6)

In comparison to Section 360 CrPC, the scope of Section 4 of the Probation Act is much wider. It applies to any person found guilty of having committed an offence not punishable with death or imprisonment for life. Further, Section 360 does not provide for any role for probation officers in assisting the courts in relation to supervision and other matters while the Probation Act does make such a provision. That apart, while Section 12 of the Probation Act states that the person found guilty of an offence and dealt with under Section 3 or 4 of the said Act shall not suffer disqualification, if any, attached to conviction of an offence under any law, the Code does not contain parallel provision. Two statutes with such significant differences could not be intended to coexist at the same time in the same area. Such coexistence would lead to anomalous results. The intention to retain the provisions of Section 360 CrPC and the provisions of the Probation Act as applicable at the same time in a given area cannot be gathered from the provisions of Section 360 or any other provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Therefore, by virtue of Section 8(1) of the General Clauses Act, where the provisions of the Probation Act have been brought into force, the provisions of Section 360 CrPC are wholly inapplicable. Enforcement of the Probation Act in some particular area excludes the applicability of the provisions of Sections 360 and 361 CrPC in that area. (Paras 7 and 8). Chhanni v. State of U.P., (2006) 5 SCC 396: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 466.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision : 6-7-2006]

[3834] — S. 360 — Offender released on probation to meet ends of justice — Factors considered — Appellant (offender) had already been dismissed from service on account of his conviction under Ss. 279 and 304-A IPC for causing accident resulting in a death and injuries to others — Litigation pending for 20 years — Offender having a good career except for the said conviction — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4

The ends of justice would be met if the appellant is released on probation under Section 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 on conditions to be imposed by the trial court. The litigation had been going on for the last 20 years and had been fought tenaciously through various courts. The appellant who had had a good career throughout but for this one aberration had since been dismissed from service on account of his conviction. (Para 12). Paul George v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2008) 4 SCC 185: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 768: (2008) 65 AIC 199 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision : 14-3-2008]

[3835] — S. 360 — Release of offender on probation — Grounds — Offence under S. 323 IPC — Injuries caused to victims simple in nature — Petitioner, a teacher who might lose his job due to conviction — No clear evidence that apart from being a member of the mob, the petitioner specifically assaulted anyone — Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, held, petitioner should be given benefit under the 1958 Act and be released on probation assuring good conduct for a period of six months — However, direction made to petitioner to pay a sum of Rs 500 each to the four victims — Penal Code, 1860, S. 323 — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4 (Para 6). Jamal Haq v. State of Tripura, (2006) 9 SCC 757.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : B.P. Singh and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision : 9-1-2006]

[3836] — S. 360 — Letting off of one of accused only on probation — Held, improper — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4 — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 33 (Paras 24 and 7). Sarju v. State of U.P., (2009) 13 SCC 698: 2009 Cri LJ 4123: (2009) 81 AIC 90 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S.B. Sinha and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-8-2009]

[3837] — S. 360 — Benefit of — Relevant considerations — Conviction of appellants (Accused 1 to 4) under Ss. 324/34 IPC, and under Ss. 504/34 IPC — Accused seeking benefit of S. 4 of the Act and S. 360 CrPC — Refusal by Magistrate, on the ground of enmity between the families of accused and complainant, held, improper — Benefit of S. 4 given by the Supreme Court to Accused 3 and 4 who were women, so far as Accused 1 and 2 were concerned, Magistrate directed to secure report of Probation Officer and then pass an appropriate order taking note of S. 4 of the Act — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 324, 504 r/w S. 34 — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4 (Para 5). Halappa v. State of Karnataka, (2009) 9 SCC 366: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1068.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: R.V. Raveendran and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 13-8-2009]

[3838] — S. 360 — Applicability — Culpable homicide — Release on probation — Factors to be considered — On facts, deceased, an alcohol addict, picked up a quarrel assaulting A-1 (appellant-accused) and tried to pull her sari, in presence of A-2 (appellant-accused) and A-3 — Because of this conduct of deceased, A-1 dealt a blow with an iron rod to head of deceased, resulting in his death — Accused persons, thereafter, stealthily buried his body in the backyard of the house — Trial court convicted A-1 under Ss. 304 Pt. II and 201 r/w S. 34 IPC with RI for four years and one year respectively and A-2 under S. 201 r/w S. 34 IPC with imprisonment for one year while other co-accused was convicted by Juvenile Court — Appeal against conviction dismissed by High Court — Sustainability — Held, evidence of PW 1 to whom A-1 had made extra-judicial confession, as analysed by courts below, was cogent and credible — However, effect, relevance and applicability of S. 360 CrPC, not considered by courts below — Therefore, while upholding conviction, held, matter remitted to trial court for limited purpose of deciding whether benefit under S. 360 could be extended to the appellants — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304 Pt. II, 300 Exceptions 1 and 4, 201 & 34 and S. 354 — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, Ss. 4 and 5 (Paras 1, 3, 6, 7, 9 and 11). Eliamma v. State of Karnataka, (2009) 11 SCC 42: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1227.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, Dr. M.K. Sharma and H.L. Dattu, JJ. [Date of decision: 11-2-2009]

Chandreshwar Sharma v. State of Bihar, (2000) 9 SCC 245: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1500, relied on

[3839] — Ss. 360 and 361 — Release on probation — Benefit of — Factors to be considered — Submission that it was appellant's first offence, he had served part of the sentence of one year's RI imposed on him, and long period of more than twenty-one years had elapsed since date of occurrence, hence, benefit of probation should be extended to him — Held, in the instant case, there were grave injuries, and the High Court had reduced the sentence from three years' to one year's RI — Hence, following Manjappa case, (2007) 6

SCC 231, submission rejected — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, Ss. 3 and 4 (Paras 25 to 27). Karamjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 7 SCC 178: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 330.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. M.K. Sharma and Dr. B.S. Chauhan, JJ. [Date of decision: 6-7-2009]

Manjappa v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 6 SCC 231: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 76, followed

[3840] — S. 360 — Release of offender on probation of good conduct — Applicability of the 1958 Act or S. 360 CrPC not considered by High Court — Effect — Hence, matter remitted to High Court for consideration thereof — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, Ss. 380 and 562 to 564 — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4 (Para 9). Daljit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 6 SCC 159: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 20.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision : 27-7-2006]

[3841] — Ss. 360 and 361 — Mandatory duty is cast on the court to record in its judgment specific reasons for not granting benefit of S. 360 to an accused where it could have dealt with the accused thereunder — Accused-appellant convicted under S. 379 IPC having found to be in possession of 3.5 kg of non-ferrous metal — No reasons recorded by courts below for not dealing with the accused under S. 360 — Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, held, there was no reason for not applying S. 360 — Hence while maintaining conviction, by applying S. 360 appellant directed to be released on probation of good conduct instead of sentencing him, and he should enter into a bond with one surety to appear and receive the sentence when called upon during the period of one year for the purpose in question (Para 3). Chandreshwar Sharma v. State of Bihar, (2000) 9 SCC 245: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1500.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision : 7-1-2000]

[3842] — S. 360 — Trial Court must gather relevant materials regarding the social background and personal factors of the offender for the purpose of sentencing — In absence of any such materials, considering the facts and circumstances of the case as well as report and recommendations of the Probation Officer, held, the accused-appellant must be released under S. 4(1) of Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 on his entering into a bond — Further directions given

The trial Court should collect materials necessary to help award a just punishment in the circumstances. The social milieu and the personal circumstances of the offender are very relevant in this respect. In the present case, though there is absence of such materials, it appears that the offender is a young person and his antecedents have no blemish. His life is not unsettled or restless and the report indicates that he is an agriculturist, pursuing a peaceful vocation. His parents are alive and he has a wife and children to maintain. These are stabilising factors in life. A long period of litigation and the little period of imprisonment suffered, will surely serve as a deterrent. Although the accused-appellant had used a firearm and the offence was grave, nevertheless, the report of the Probation Officer states that the appellant is not given to any bad habits or stresses of poverty. A land dispute led to the crime and that does not survive any longer. The Probation Officer recommends that an opportunity be given to the appellant to improve himself. Therefore, in this case the appellant may be given the benefit of S. 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act on his entering a bond. Ved Prakash v. State of Haryana, (1981) 1 SCC 447: 1981 SCC (Cri) 182: AIR 1981 SC 643: 1981 Cri LJ 161.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : V.R. Krishna Iyer and E.S. Venkataramiah, JJ. [Date of decision : 12-11-1980]

[3843] — S. 360 — Applicability — Held, S. 360(1) itself provides that if for any offence life sentence is provided for, S. 360 would have no application — On facts, respondents convicted under Ss. 326/149, 325/149, 148 and 323/149 IPC and sentenced accordingly with imprisonment, fine and default stipulation — In appeal, sentence under Ss. 326/149 was reduced, but all other sentences and fine imposed by trial court was upheld — High Court modified judgment of courts below and directed release of accused persons on probation under S. 360 CrPC but enhanced the amount of fine — Held, as conviction herein involves punishment under S. 326 IPC which carries life imprisonment, therefore, S. 360 CrPC has no application to the facts of the instant case — High Court lost sight of the correct position in law — Hence, matter remitted to High Court to consider about the non-applicability of S. 360 CrPC both on the ground that the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 has application and S. 326 IPC carries life imprisonment — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, Ss. 3 and 4 (Paras 9, 3, 5, 11 and 12). Ramesh Dass v. Raghu Nath, (2008) 4 SCC 588: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 470: AIR 2008 SC 1298: (2008) 64 AIC 238 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 1945: (2008) 3 KLT 250.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision : 14-2-2008]

Chhanni v. State of U.P., (2006) 5 SCC 396: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 466; Daljit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 6 SCC 159: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 20; Jagdev Singh v. State of Punjab, (1974) 3 SCC 412: 1973 SCC (Cri) 977, relied on

[3844] — Ss. 360 and 361 — Release of offender on probation of good conduct — Considerations for — Nature of the offence and character of the offender — Character — Meaning of — Accused managing to get entry into legal profession by representing that he was a qualified legal practitioner having enrolled himself with the State Bar Council — Accused practising law for a period of eight years and also holding post of Secretary of Bar Association — Held, in the circumstances of the case, the accused must be dealt with deterrently and the courts below not justified in giving him benefit of S. 4 — Fact that the accused expressed repentance over his conduct or that later he obtained a law degree and got himself enrolled as an advocate is of no consequence — Accused awarded six months' RI under each count (Ss. 419 and 420 IPC) and a fine of Rs 5000 each (total Rs 10,000) to be added to fund of the Legal Service Board — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 419 and 420 — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4

The respondent approached the Nilgiris Bar Association in the year 1978 for admitting him as a member therein by representing that he was a qualified legal practitioner having enrolled himself with the State Bar Council. Without suspecting the bona fides of the application he was admitted to the membership of the Bar Association. He started his practice at the new station and built up a good clientele and involved himself in all the activities of the Association. He contested for the post of Secretary and won it. In this way, he continued till 1985. But by then some members of the Bar who developed suspicion of his credentials made secret inquiries and discovered that he was imposturing as an advocate and his credentials were bogus. A complaint was lodged with the police who, after investigation, charge-sheeted the accused for offences under Sections 419 and 420 IPC. He pleaded guilty and prayed for mercy. The trial court released him under Section 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act. The High Court declined to interfere but made an endeavour to console the Bar by directing the delinquent person to donate a sum of Rs 15,000 to the Association for buying books to their library. Allowing the appeal by special leave filed by the Bar Council

Held :

Before the relief envisaged in Section 4(1) of the Probation of Offenders Act is granted court must take into account the circumstances of the case, among which "the nature of the offence and the character of the offender" must have overriding considerations. After bestowing judicial consideration on those factors, the court must form an opinion as to whether it would be appropriate in that case to release the particular accused therein as envisaged in the sub-section. The benefits mentioned in Sections 3 and 4 are subject to the limitations laid down in those provisions and the word 'may' in Section 4 of the Act is not to be understood as 'must.'

When considering the nature of the offence the court must have a realistic view of the gravity of the offence, the impact which the offence could have had on the victims and whether considerations of deterrence can be overlooked etc. No fixed yardstick can be laid down to measure the nature of the offence for affording or denying the reliefs envisaged in Section 4 of the Act. However, as the court is enjoined to take into consideration the character of the offender it is well to remember that character is not the abstract opinion in which the offender is held by others. The word "character" is not defined in the Act. Hence, it must be given the ordinary meaning.

Character of the offender in this case reflects in the modality in which he was inveigling in a noble profession duping everybody concerned. In such a view of the matter the two courts could not have formed an opinion in favour of the character of the respondent. It is apposite to observe here that the learned Single Judge did not mention anything about the character of the respondent qua the accusations found against him.

While adverting to the nature of offence the court must bear in mind the necessity to weed out impostors in the professions which require special learning and training, particularly at a time when such impostors are proliferating in the society. Any leniency shown to such wiles would certainly tend to sprout up weeds at menacing scales. The case of the respondent is not one of single lapse or even multiple delinquencies confined to a few days. The long period of 8 years during which the mountebank had successfully indulged in interloping as a qualified and learned counsel would have considerably eroded public confidence in the probity of the legal profession particularly in that area and besmirched the reputation of that Bar as the public might be looking upon every other member of the profession with suspectful eyes. The trial Magistrate and the learned Single Judge, who found a repenting mind in the respondent, have failed to notice that repentance had dawned on him, even if that also was not a pretension, only when he reached a cul-de-sac. When he was masquerading himself everyday in sartorial costumes prescribed only for accredited members of the legal profession it did not occur to him even once during the long period of eight years to think of repentance. On the contrary, he was flourishing at large and had even become the Secretary of the Bar Association. If the vigilant Bar had not discovered the trickery, perhaps he would still have persisted in his art of cheating. Therefore, the crimes committed by him should have been dealt with deterrently and the ameliorative reliefs envisaged in Section 4 of the Act should have been kept at bay. Nilgiris Bar Assn. v. T.K. Mahalingam, (1998) 1 SCC 550: 1998 SCC (Cri) 450: AIR 1998 SC 398: 1998 Cri LJ 398.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision : 8-12-1997]

Ramji Missar v. State of Bihar, AIR 1963 SC 1088: (1963) 2 Cri LJ 173; Rattan Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1965 SC 444: (1964) 7 SCR 676; Ishar Das v. State of Punjab, (1973) 2 SCC 65: 1973 SCC (Cri) 708; Ram Parkash v. State of H.P., (1972) 4 SCC 46: 1973 SCC (Cri) 119, relied on

[3845] — S. 360 — Date of Birth — Entry in school register — Supported by testimony of Head Master who admitted the student and probability of the case — At the age of little over six years, as suggested by the accused, he could not possibly have been admitted to sixth standard — High Court therefore erred in upsetting the trial Court's finding — Children Act, 1960, Ss. 21 and 2(e) — Juvenile Justice Act, 1986, Ss. 21 and 2(h) — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, Ss. 4 and 6. Rajan Sinha v. State of Bihar, 1991 Supp (2) SCC 145: 1991 SCC (Cri) 1015: AIR 1991 SC 1377: 1991 Cri LJ 1369: (1991) 2 BLJR 797.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : A.M. Ahmadi, V. Ramaswami and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision : 12-3-1991]

[3846] — S. 360 — Long passage of time and sentence imposed — Appellants 2 and 3 convicted under S. 323 IPC and sentenced to RI for one year — However, considering the long passage of time and period of sentence imposed, benefit of S. 360 CrPC granted to them on entering the stipulated bond — Penal Code, 1860, S. 323 (Para 7). Nasiruddin Khan v. State of Bihar, (2008) 12 SCC 129.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision : 29-7-2008]

[3847] — S. 360 — Age of the person convicted — Computation of, for the purpose of applicability of S. 20-AA, PFA Act — Relevant date for the said purpose, held, is the date of commission of the offence and not the date of conviction — Hence, conviction maintained but appellant-accused directed to be released on probation to maintain good behaviour — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 — Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, Ss. 20-AA, 16(1)(4) and 7 (Paras 2 and 3). Rajbir v. State of Haryana, (1999) 9 SCC 200: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1142: AIR 2000 SC 3472.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik, M.B. Shah and R.C. Lahoti, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-2-1999]

[3848] — S. 360 — Quantum of sentence under Ss. 354 and 509 — Release on probation — Propriety — Senior police officer (DGP in the present case) found guilty under Ss. 354 and 509 for gently slapping on the posterior of a lady in the presence of guests at a dinner party — Sessions Court enhancing the sentence of fine to Rs 50,000 but altering the sentence of imprisonment and directing the accused instead to be released on probation — High Court enhancing the fine to Rs 2,00,000 — Incident about 17 long years old — Accused completing the period of probation without violating any terms of the bond — In such circumstances, the appeal of the prosecutrix seeking enhancement of the punishment rejected — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 354 and 509

As regards the appeal filed by the complainant, it is relevant that the incident happened in 1988. Despite the accused holding a high position in the State police, the various courts found him guilty of the offence punishable under Sections 354 and 509 IPC and that by itself is setting a model for others and would enhance the faith in the judicial system. The accused has completed the period of probation. There was no occasion for any complaint or violation of any of the terms of the bond. At this juncture, it would not be just and proper to resort to any other punishment. (Para 6). Kanwar Pal Singh Gill v. State, (2005) 6 SCC 161: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1420: AIR 2005 SC 3104: 2005 Cri LJ 3443.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision : 27-7-2005]

[3849] — S. 360 — Sentence — Release on probation — Attempt to commit rape — Accused aged less than 21 years — Prosecutrix found to be above 16 years of age — Offence not attracting imprisonment for life but only imprisonment up to 10 years — Held, in the circumstances, trial court justified in extending benefit of probation to the accused — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 376/511. State of Haryana v. Prem Chand, (1997) 7 SCC 756: 1997 SCC (Cri) 1176.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.M. Punchhi and S.B. Majmudar, JJ. [Date of decision : 7-5-1997]

[3850] — S. 360 — Forgery of surety bonds — Advocate's clerk forging endorsements regarding identification and attestation of sureties as well as signature of another advocate on surety bonds and obtaining release of the accused on that basis — Trial court convicting him under Ss. 465 and 471 and sentencing him for 1 years' imprisonment — High Court maintaining the conviction and sentence though taking the view that the offence in fact covered by S. 468 instead of S. 465 — Held, High court justified in maintaining the conviction — Offence being serious one release on probation of good conduct under S. 360 Criminal Procedure Code on ground of young age and no previous conviction not warranted — But having regard to circumstances of the case, sentence reduced to nine months' imprisonment already undergone — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 468, 465, 471. Sharvan Kumar v. State of U.P., (1985) 3 SCC 658: 1985 SCC (Cri) 437: AIR 1985 SC 1663.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : R.S. Pathak and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision : 29-7-1985]

[3851] — S. 360 — Sentence — Accused- appellant was aged 13 years on the date of the incident — Contention raised before Supreme Court that although the appellant was aged below 18 years and was a child for the purpose of the Bihar Children Act, 1970 on the date of the occurrence, his trial having been conducted along with that of the other accused who were not children was not in accordance with law — However, this contention had not been raised either before the trial court or before the High Court — In such circumstances, while sustaining the conviction of the appellant under all the charges, held, the sentence awarded to him needed to be set aside — Juvenile Justice Act, 1986, S. 2(h) — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 r/w S. 149 (Para 6). Umesh Singh v. State of Bihar, (2000) 6 SCC 89: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1026: AIR 2000 SC 2111: 2000 Cri LJ 3167.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Rajendra Babu and Y.K. Sabharwal, JJ. [Date of decision : 10-5-2000]

Bhola Bhagat v. State of Bihar, (1997) 8 SCC 720: 1998 SCC (Cri) 125; Gopinath Ghosh v. State of W.B., 1984 Supp SCC 228: 1984 SCC (Cri) 478; Bhoop Ram v. State of U.P., (1989) 3 SCC 1: 1989 SCC (Cri) 486; Pradeep Kumar v. State of U.P., 1995 Supp (4) SCC 419: 1995 SCC (Cri) 395, relied on [3852] — S. 360 — Probation — Refusal to grant probation to the person found guilty of rape — Held, proper — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4 — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 375 and 376 (Para 7). State of M.P. v. Babulal, (2008) 1 SCC 234: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 188: AIR 2008 SC 582: 2008 Cri LJ 714: (2008) 1 KLJ 551 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : C.K. Thakker and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision : 3-12-2007]

Bharwada Bhoginbhai Hirjibhai v. State of Gujarat, (1983) 3 SCC 217: 1983 SCC (Cri) 728; State of Rajasthan v. Narayan, (1992) 3 SCC 615: 1992 SCC (Cri) 781, relied on [3853] — S. 360 — Sentencing — Circumstances warranting reduction of sentence — Appellant convicted under NDPS Act and was not entitled to the benefit under the Probation of Offenders Act — His age at the time of framing the charge was 21 years — Taking these factors into consideration, sentence reduced from two years to one year RI — However, fine of Rs 3000 imposed by trial court sustained — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 33 and 20(b)(i) — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 (Paras 3 and 4). Vajja Srinivasu v. State of A.P., (2002) 9 SCC 620.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision : 4-9-2000]

[3854] — S. 360 — Offence under Ss. 323 and 506 read with Ss. 34 and 452 IPC — Appellants directed to be released on probation — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4. Jagat Pal Singh v. State of Haryana, 1999 SCC (Cri) 1313: AIR 2000 SC 3622 (1).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision : 26-3-1999]

[3855] — S. 360 — Accused below 21 years when the offence punishable with fine or imprisonment for a maximum term of seven years was committed — Held, S. 360, Criminal Procedure Code, is applicable and accused entitled to be released on probation after executing the bond — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958. Surendra Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, (1979) 4 SCC 718: 1980 SCC (Cri) 158: AIR 1979 SC 1048: 1979 Cri LJ 907.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A.D. Koshal, JJ. [Date of decision : 7-2-1979]

[3856] — S. 360 — Conviction under PC Act — Release of appellant on probation directed by High Court invoking S. 360 CrPC — Propriety — Held, provisions of Probation of Offenders Act and S. 360 CrPC are not applicable to conviction under the Prevention of Corruption Act — Hence, High Court's order set aside — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 18 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 7 (Para 4). State of T.N. v. Kaliaperumal, (2005) 12 SCC 473.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : H.K. Sema and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision : 8-9-2005]

State v. Ratan Lal Arora, (2004) 4 SCC 590: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1353, followed

[3857] — S. 360 — Inapplicability of provisions of, in case of conviction under Ss. 7 and 13(2), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — Applicability of provisions of the Probation of Offenders

Act and S. 360 CrPC — Reference in S. 19 and S. 18, Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 to S. 562 CrPC, 1898 and S. 5(2), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 respectively — Must be read such as to refer to the corresponding sections in the respective new Acts in view of S. 8, General Clauses Act, 1897 — Hence, held, benefit under provisions of the Probation of Offenders Act and S. 360 inapplicable to a conviction under S. 13(2), Prevention of Corruption Act — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 8 — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, S. 562 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13(2)

The respondent-accused was an employee of the Delhi Vidyut Board. On 20-1-1995, he allegedly committed offences punishable under Sections 7 and 13(2) read with Section 13(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 (for short "the Act"). The trial court found him guilty and sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 20 months and a fine of Rs 2000 with default stipulation for offence under Section 7 and 40 months' RI and a fine of Rs 2000 with default stipulation for the offence punishable under Section 13(2) of the Act. The Delhi High Court while upholding the conviction and noting that the minimum sentence under the Act was one year, extended the benefit of Section 360 CrPC, 1973 on the ground that he had remained in custody for about 22 days. It further held that the bar to the applicability of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 (in short "the Probation Act") was not operative in respect of offences under the Act though there was a prohibition under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 (in short "the old Act"). The Probation Act had been, by a notification of the Government of India dated 23-12-1961 issued under Section 1(3) thereof, brought into force in the State of Delhi w.e.f. 29-12-1960. Taking into account: (a) that the demand and acceptance was of a paltry sum of Rs 1500, (b) that the respondent had retired from service during trial itself, (c) that he had turned 64 years of age, and (d) that his family circumstances were unhappy and he had remained in custody for 22 days, the High Court directed the respondent-accused to be released on probation of good conduct instead of suffering sentence. The State then filed the instant appeal by special leave.

The appellant State contended, inter alia, that where the statute prescribed a minimum sentence the court could not reduce the same any further, and by operation of Section 8 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, the bar contained in the old Act applied to the new Act also. On the other hand, the accused-respondent supported the High Court's judgment.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

In view of the provisions of Section 8 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, the references to Section 562 CrPC, 1898 and Section 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 in Sections 19 and 18 of the Probation Act respectively have to be inevitably read as references to their corresponding provisions in CrPC, 1973 and the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. Consequently, for the conviction under Section 13(2) of the Act the principles enunciated under the Probation Act cannot be extended at all in view of the mandate contained in Section 18 of the said Act. So far as Section 360 of the Code is concerned, on and from the date of extension and enforcement of the provisions of the Probation Act to Delhi, powers under Section 562 CrPC, 1898 and after its repeal and replacement powers under Section 360 CrPC, 1973, cannot be invoked or applied at all, as has been done in the present case. (Para 11). State v. Ratan Lal Arora, (2004) 4 SCC 590: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1353: AIR 2004 SC 2364: (2004) 111 DLT 250: 2004 Cri LJ 2105.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision : 26-4-2004]

[3858] — S. 360 — Applicability — Minimum sentence prescribed under Ss. 7 and 13(2), PC Act — Held, cannot be reduced by granting the benefit of probation under S. 360 CrPC, 1973 — However, in the peculiar circumstances of the case which had been taken into account by High Court for granting the benefit of S. 360 CrPC, sentence of imprisonment reduced to the statutory minimum but the levy of fine left undisturbed — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 7, 13(2) and 28

Moreover, in view of the minimum sentence prescribed in Sections 7 and 13 of the Act and the provisions of Section 28 thereof and the fact that unlike the provisions contained in Section 5(2) proviso of the old Act, the Act did not carry any such power to enable the court to show any leniency below the minimum sentence stipulated, it is held that the High Court committed a grave error of law in extending the benefit of probation even under CrPC, 1973. (Para 12)

Though the reasons assigned by the High Court to extend the benefits of probation may not be relevant, proper or special reasons for going below the minimum sentence prescribed — which in any event is wholly impermissible, they are being taken into account herein to confine the sentence of imprisonment to the minimum of six months under Section 7 and minimum of one year under Section 13(2) of the Act, both the sentences to run concurrently. However, the levy of fine is confirmed. (Para 12). State v. Ratan Lal Arora, (2004) 4 SCC 590: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1353: AIR 2004 SC 2364: (2004) 111 DLT 250: 2004 Cri LJ 2105.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision : 26-4-2004]

New Central Jute Mills Co. Ltd. v. CCE, (1970) 2 SCC 820; State of Bihar v. S.K. Roy, AIR 1966 SC 1995: 1966 Cri LJ 1538; Supdt., Central Excise v. Bahubali, (1979) 2 SCC 279: 1979 SCC (Cri) 447, followed

[3859] — S. 360 — Grant of probation for offence(s) committed under S. 13, Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 — Impermissibility — Grant of probation for offence(s) committed under — Impermissibility — Applicability of Ss. 18 and 19, Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 (Probation Act) — Held, references to S. 562 CrPC, 1898 in S. 19, and to S. 5(2), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 in S. 18, Probation Act have to be read as references to their corresponding provisions in CrPC, 1973 and Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 (the Act) — Hence for conviction under S. 13(2), principles enunciated under Probation Act cannot be extended at all in view of mandate of S. 18, Probation Act — So also powers under S. 360 CrPC could not be invoked or applied at all — Hence benefit of probation afforded to respondent by High Court, set aside — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, Ss. 18 and 19 — General Clauses Act, 1897, S. 8 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13

Section 18 of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 ("the Probation Act") stipulated that it was inapplicable to offences punishable under Section 5(2) of Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 ("the old Act"). Specific reference was made in the said Section 18 to Section 5(2) of the old Act which corresponds to Section 13 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 ("the Act"). But no change was made in the Probation Act after the Act was enacted and brought into force in 1988. Much stress was laid on the non-amendment of the Probation Act which referred to the old Act and not the present Act. The argument overlooks the principles underlying Section 8 of the General Clauses Act, 1897. When an Act is repealed and re-enacted unless a different intention is expressed by the legislature, the reference to the repealed Act would be considered as reference to the provisions so re-enacted. (Paras 9 and 4)

The references to Section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 ("the old Code") in Section 19 of the Probation Act and to Section 5(2) of the old Act in Section 18 of the Probation Act, respectively have to be inevitably read as references to their corresponding provisions in the newly enacted Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 and the re-enacted Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. Section 13(2) of the re-enacted Act is the corresponding provision to Section 5(2) of the old Act. Consequently, for the conviction under Section 13(2) of the Act of 1988 the principles enunciated under the Probation Act cannot be extended at all in view of the mandate contained in Section 18 of the said Act. So far as Section 360 CrPC, 1973 is concerned, on and from the date of extension and enforcement of the provisions of the Probation Act to Madras, powers under Section 562 of the Old Code and after its repeal and replacement powers under Section 360 CrPC, 1973, cannot be invoked or applied at all, as has been done in the case on hand. (Paras 12 and 10)

Consequently, the Single Judge in the High Court committed a grave error in law in extending the benefit of probation even under Section 360 CrPC, 1973. (Para 14). State v. A. Parthiban, (2006) 11 SCC 473: 2006 Cri LJ 4772.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Arijit Pasayat and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision : 9-10-2006]

Supdt., Central Excise v. Bahubali, (1979) 2 SCC 279: 1979 SCC (Cri) 447; State v. Ratan Lal Arora, (2004) 4 SCC 590: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1353; New Central Jute Mills Co. Ltd. v. CCE, (1970) 2 SCC 820; State of Bihar v. S.K. Roy, AIR 1966 SC 1995: 1966 Cri LJ 1538, followed

Ishar Das v. State of Punjab, (1973) 2 SCC 65: 1973 SCC (Cri) 708; Som Nath Puri v. State of Rajasthan, (1972) 1 SCC 630: 1972 SCC (Cri) 359, relied on [3860] — S. 360 — Juvenile delinquents — Appropriate sentence when convicted for rape — Background, social circumstances, etc. must be considered — Putting the child under parental control rather than in an approved school considered. Satto v. State of U.P., (1979) 2 SCC 628: 1979 SCC (Cri) 534: AIR 1979 SC 1519: 1979 Cri LJ 943: (1979) 16 ACC 264: 1979 ALJ 904.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : V.R. Krishna Iyer[1] and R.S. Pathak[2], JJ. [Date of decision : 26-4-1979]

[3861] — S. 360 — Offence of forgery of surety bonds under Ss. 468, 465 and 471 IPC, being of serious nature, release of accused on probation of good conduct under S. 360 on ground of young age and no previous conviction unwarranted. Sharvan Kumar v. State of U.P., (1985) 3 SCC 658: 1985 SCC (Cri) 437: AIR 1985 SC 1663.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : R.S. Pathak and A.N. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision : 29-7-1985]

[3862] — S. 360 — Offence under S. 304 Pt. II IPC — Appellant inflicting an incised injury on a vital part of the head with an axe which proved fatal — Held, appellant not entitled to benefit of S. 360. Prabhu v. State of Rajasthan, 1994 Supp (3) SCC 320: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1715.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : K. Jayachandra Reddy, S. Mohan and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision : 17-11-1993]

[3863] — S. 360 — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 — S. 4 — Offence under S. 304 Pt. II IPC — Release of offender on probation not barred — High Court releasing the offender on probation after considering relevant material — Even after long lapse of time accused not violating terms and conditions of probation — No interference by Supreme Court with order of the High Court called for. State of Karnataka v. Muddappa, (1999) 5 SCC 732: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1046.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision : 20-4-1999]

[3864] — S. 360 — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 — Ss. 3 and 4 — Trial court acquitting the appellant but High Court convicting him under S. 397 read with S. 109, Penal Code and imposing fine of Rs 500 for theft of a quantity of coal valued at Rs 8 from railway goods wagon — Appellant taken back in service after High Court's judgment and still continuing in service — On facts and circumstances held, appellant entitled to the benefit of S. 360, Criminal Procedure Code or Ss. 3 and 4 of the 1958 Act. Keshav Sitaram Sali v. State of Maharashtra, (1983) 1 SCC 390: 1983 SCC (Cri) 210: AIR 1983 SC 291: 1983 Cri LJ 436.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : E.S. Venkataramiah and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision : 6-1-1983]

[3865] — S. 360 — Probation, release on — Allegation of entering into criminal conspiracy to obtain Small-Scale Industries Registration Certificate, Essentiality Certificate and import licences on false representations — Occurrence relating to period between 1967 and 1969 — Trial court acquitting the accused while High Court reversing the acquittal convicting him — Supreme Court granting bail in 1980 — Several achievements in industrial field made by appellant since then — In the circumstances, held, it would be expedient to release the accused- appellant on probation — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 120-B, 420 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, Ss. 5(1)(b) and 5(2). N.M. Parthasarathy v. State by S.P.E., (1992) 2 SCC 198: 1992 SCC (Cri) 367: AIR 1992 SC 988: 1992 Cri LJ 1284.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Kuldip Singh and R.M. Sahai, JJ. [Date of decision : 21-1-1992]

[3866] — S. 360 — Release on probation of good conduct or after admonition — Applicability — Appellants being first-time offenders, convicted under S. 7, Essential Commodities Act, 1955 and sentenced to RI for three years and fine of Rs 10,000 — High Court upholding conviction and sentence of fine, but reducing sentence of imprisonment to three months — Held, in facts and circumstances of the case, appellants should have been dealt with under provisions of S. 360 — Conviction and sentence of fine upheld, but sentence of imprisonment set aside and trial court directed to deal with appellants under S. 360 — Essential Commodities Act, 1955, S. 7 . Harivallabha v. State of M.P., (2005) 10 SCC 330: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1518.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : B.N. Agrawal and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision : 27-10-2004]

Distinguished in Harendra Nath Chakraborty v. State of W.B., (2009) 2 SCC 758

[3867] — S. 360 — Order under, for release of first offenders — Accused, having no intention to commit murder, acquitted from charge under S. 307/149 IPC — But while maintaining conviction under Ss. 325/149, 323/149 and 148 IPC, accused released by High Court's order under S. 360 having regard to the facts that the occurrence was the outcome of a sudden flare-up and there was no previous history of enmity between the parties — Held on facts, High Court's order under S. 360 justified — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4

Many offenders are not dangerous criminals but are weak characters or who have surrendered to temptation or provocation. In placing such type of offenders on probation, the court encourages their own sense of responsibility for their future and protects them from the stigma and possible contamination of prison. In this case, there being no previous history of enmity between the parties, the occurrence having taken place as a result of a sudden flare-up and the accused having no intention to commit murder, the extension of benefit of the beneficial legislation applicable to first offenders cannot be said to be inappropriate. Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh, (1988) 4 SCC 551: 1988 SCC (Cri) 984: AIR 1988 SC 2127.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.L. Oza and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision : 25-8-1988]

[3868] — Ss. 360 and 235(2) — Offences punishable under NDPS Act and S. 120-B IPC — Sentence — Reduction — Relevant factor — First offence — Accused-appellant convicted of the offences in question for the first time — Hence, sentence reduced from 14 years to 10 years — Direction to pay fine maintained — Penal Code, 1860, S. 120-B — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic

Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 18, 22, 23, 25 and 28 to 30 (Para 4). Balwinder Singh v. CCE, (2005) 4 SCC 146: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1092: AIR 2005 SC 2917: (2005) 181 ELT 203.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.G. Balakrishnan and B.N. Srikrishna, JJ. [Date of decision : 22-2-2005]

[3869] — Ss. 360 and 235(2) — Sentence to first offenders — Family background and history, past social behaviour and present situation of the offender must be considered — On facts appellant deserved to be released on probation — Specifically he must abjure alcohol . Dilbag Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 2 SCC 103: 1979 SCC (Cri) 376: AIR 1979 SC 680: 1979 GLR (SC) 390: 1979 Cri LJ 636: 1979 MLJ (Cri) 534: 16 ACC 104 (II).

Bench Strength 3. Coram : V.R. Krishna Iyer, D.A. Desai and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision : 25-1-1979]

[3870] — Ss. 360 and 361 — Release on probation — Held, in view of peremptory nature of S. 361, lower courts ought to have considered whether appellants, who were convicted under S. 323 (voluntarily causing hurt) and S. 325 (voluntarily causing grievous hurt) r/w Ss. 148/149 IPC, deserved release on probation under S. 360 — Offence in this case took place 11 years ago and the appellants did not indulge in misbehaviour or mischief while they remained in jail — Held, this was a fit case for invoking S. 360 — Appellants therefore released on probation subject to furnishing of bond with surety for good behaviour and keeping peace (Paras 4 and 5). Om Prakash v. State of Haryana, (2001) 10 SCC 477.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision : 29-11-1999]

[3871] — S. 360 — Conviction under S. 323, IPC — On the peculiar facts and circumstances accused-appellants released on probation under S. 360(1) on surety bonds. Om Prakash v. State of M.P., (1982) 3 SCC 224: 1982 SCC (Cri) 702: AIR 1982 SC 783(2): 1982 Cri LJ 628(2).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P.N. Bhagwati and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision : 10-4-1981]

— S. 361 See Ss. 235(2), 248(2), 325, 360 and 361

See also Ss. 354, 355, 361, 264, 412 and 384(3)

See also Ss. 354(3), 360 and 361

See also Ss. 354(3) and 361 & 360

See also Ss. 360 and 361

— S. 362 See also S. 369, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1173 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 362 See Ss. 204 & 203, 202, 200, 239 and 362 & 482

See also Ss. 452 and 362

See also Ss. 482, 190(1)(b), 204, 173, 169 and 362

See also Ss. 482 and 362

[3872] — S. 362 — Power under — Exercise of — Scope and limitations — Correction of clerical or arithmetic mistakes or omissions in judgments or decrees — Held, exercise of said power contemplates the correction of mistakes by the court of its ministerial actions and does not contemplate passing of effective judicial orders after the judgment, decree or order — Omission sought to be corrected which goes to the merits of the case is beyond the scope of S. 152 — Thus the said section cannot be pressed into service to correct an omission which is intentional, however erroneous that may be — An unintentional mistake of the court which may prejudice the cause of any party must and alone could be rectified — Powers under S. 152 distinguished from power of review — Meaning of "arithmetical mistake", "clerical mistake" and "error arising out of or occurring from accidental slip or omission", taken note of — On facts, held, the first appellate court was not justified in exercising power under S. 152 and the High Court was equally in error by putting its seal of approval thereon — CPC, 1908, S. 152

The respondent as a plaintiff filed a declaratory suit challenging his removal from service. After considering the evidence on record the suit was dismissed. An appeal was preferred before the Additional District Judge who held that the dismissal was bad. While granting the relief to the respondent employee, the first appellate court also made the following order:

"It is made clear that it is up to the Department to grant him or not to grant him increments for the past service rendered by him. It will be again for the Department to decide whether he is or he is not fit to be promoted after taking his past service into account."

The respondent filed an application under Section 152 CPC claiming that the aforequoted directions were not in order and deserve to be deleted. By an order dated 3-2-1988 the learned Additional District Judge deleted the aforequoted portion on the ground that if the said portion remains, it would have the effect of neutralizing the relief granted to the plaintiff-appellant before it.

Allowing the appeal filed against the decision of the High Court whereby the order dated 3-2-1988 passed by the first appellate court was approved,

Held :

Section 152 provides for correction of clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgments, decrees or orders or errors arising therein from any accidental slip or omission. The exercise of this power contemplates the correction of mistakes by the court of its ministerial actions and does not contemplate passing of effective judicial orders after the judgment, decree or order. (Para 12)

The settled position of law is that after the passing of the judgment, decree or order, the same becomes final subject to any further avenues of remedies provided in respect of the same and the very court or the tribunal cannot and, on mere change of view, is not entitled to vary the terms of the judgments, decrees and orders earlier passed except by means of review, if statutorily provided specifically therefor and subject to the conditions or limitations provided therein. The powers under Section 152 of the Code are neither to be equated with the power of review nor can be said to be akin to review or even said to clothe the court concerned under the guise of invoking after the result of the judgment earlier rendered, in its entirety or any portion or part of it. (Para 12)

The corrections contemplated are of correcting only accidental omissions or mistakes and not all omissions and mistakes which might have been committed by the court while passing the judgment, decree or order. The omission sought to be corrected which goes to the merits of the case is beyond the scope of Section 152 as if it is looking into it for the first time, for which the proper remedy for the aggrieved party, if at all, is to file an appeal or revision before the higher forum or review application before the very forum, subject to the limitations in respect of such review. It implies that the section cannot be pressed into service to correct an omission which is intentional, however erroneous that may be. (Para 12)

The courts below have been liberally construing and applying the provisions of Sections 151 and 152 of the Code even after passing of effective orders in the lis pending before them. No court can, under the cover of the aforesaid sections, modify, alter or add to the terms of its original judgment, decree or order. (Para 12)

The basis of the provision under Section 152 of the Code is founded on the maxim "actus curiae neminem gravabit" i.e. an act of court shall prejudice no man. An unintentional mistake of the court which may prejudice the cause of any party must and alone could be rectified. (Para 13). State of Punjab v. Darshan Singh, (2004) 1 SCC 328: AIR 2003 SC 4179: (2003) 99 FLR 1171: (2004) 2 MPLJ 302: (2004) 1 SLR 39: (2004) 2 CHN 102.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision : 29-10-2003]

Master Construction Co. (P) Ltd. v. State of Orissa, AIR 1966 SC 1047: (1966) 17 STC 360; Dwaraka Das v. State of M.P., (1999) 3 SCC 500; Jayalakshmi Coelho v. Oswald Joseph Coelho, (2001) 4 SCC 181; Freeman v. Tranah, 12 CB 406: 138 ER 964, relied on

[3873] — S. 362 — Scope of review power under — Expression "clerical or arithmetical error" — Meaning of — "Save as otherwise provided by this Code..." does not include S. 482 — Hence, inherent jurisdiction under S. 482 cannot be invoked to override bar of Review under S. 362

A clerical or arithmetical error is an error occasioned by an accidental slip or omission of the court. It represents that which the court never intended to say. It is an error apparent on the face of the record and does not depend for its discovery on argument or disputation. An arithmetical error is a mistake of calculation, and a clerical error is a mistake in writing or typing.

Expression "Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any other law, for the time being in force" in S. 362 refers to those provisions only where the court has been expressly authorised by the Code or other law to alter or review its judgment. The inherent power of the court under S. 482 cannot be exercised for doing that which is specifically prohibited by the Code such as under S. 362.

In the present case an application was filed under S. 482 asking the High Court for further adjudication in the matter covered by its earlier order. Such an application cannot be entertained in view of S. 362. Sooraj Devi v. Pyare Lal, (1981) 1 SCC 500: 1981 SCC (Cri) 188: AIR 1981 SC 736: (1981) 2 SCR 485: 1981 Cri LJ 296: 1981 MLJ (Cri) 392.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : R.S. Sarkaria and R.S. Pathak, JJ. [Date of decision : 8-1-1981]

[3874] — Ss. 362 and 127(2) — Nature and scope — Alteration or modification of judgment — Power for, if exists — Held, S. 362 makes it clear that a court cannot alter or review its judgment or final order after it is signed except to correct clerical or arithmetical error — As a general rule, held, as soon as a judgment is pronounced or order is made by a court, it becomes functus officio and has no power to review, override, alter or interfere with it — S. 362 starts with the words "save as otherwise provided by this Code", thus, held, if CrPC provides for alteration, such power can be exercised, for instance, S. 127(2) — But in absence of express power, held, alteration or modification of judgment or order is not permissible (Paras 31 and 32). Sunita Jain v. Pawan Kumar Jain, (2008) 2 SCC 705: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 537: (2008) 64 AIC 212 (SC): (2008) 2 KLJ 304.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision : 25-1-2008]

Hari Singh Mann v. Harbhajan Singh Bajwa, (2001) 1 SCC 169: 2001 SCC (Cri) 113, relied on [3875] — Ss. 362 and 311 — Bar under S. 362 — Held, the court cannot review or alter its earlier order which became final — Prayer of 1st respondent to examine one P rejected by the trial court on 6-11-1997and the said order attained finality as no appeal or revision was filed against that order — Since High Court was not aware of the said order, it passed order dated 19-10-2000 in criminal revision filed by the 1st respondent whereby the trial court was directed to permit the 1st respondent to lead additional evidence of P or her guardian — Further, no objection as to the maintainability of the revision on the ground of limitation was raised by the appellants during the hearing of the revision — Appellants failed to point out to High Court the various orders which were within their knowledge at the time order dated 19-10-2000 was passed — Appellants moving application before the High Court for recalling the order dated 19-10-2000 — Held, the High Court was justified in holding that S. 362 was a bar to the Court to review or alter its earlier order dated 19-10-2000 which was a final order (Paras 18, 19, 24 and 25). Hindustan Construction Co. Ltd. v. Gopal Krishna Sengupta, (2003) 11 SCC 210: 2004 SCC (Cri) 81: AIR 2003 SC 3536.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.N. Variava and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision : 9-4-2003]

[3876] — Ss. 362 and 482 — Bar under S. 362 — Exercise of jurisdiction under S. 482, when warranted — In view of specific bar created under S. 362 in regard to exercise of jurisdiction of High Court to review its own order, held, ordinarily exercise of jurisdiction under S. 482 would be unwarranted — Only in some rare cases, High Court may do so where a judgment has been obtained from it by practising fraud — Herein, such a case has not been made out (Para 15). R. Rajeshwari v. H.N. Jagadish, (2008) 4 SCC 82: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 186: (2008) 5 Mah LJ 404: (2008) 3 Guj LR 2286: (2008) 64 AIC 29 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and V.S. Sirpurkar, JJ. [Date of decision : 5-3-2008]

[3877] — Ss. 362 and 482 — Even if High Court refuses to recall its order passed in exercise of power under S. 482 CrPC on ground of bar contained in S. 362 of the Code, held, that would not prevent the Supreme Court from considering the legality of the order in appeal under Art. 136 — Constitution of India — Art. 136

A young bride committed suicide in her nuptial home within seven months of her marriage. An inquiry under Section 174(3) CrPC was held. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate conducted the inquiry and submitted a report holding that it was conclusively proved that due to mental restlessness she had committed suicide and no one is responsible and hence it was informed that her death was not due to dowry harassment. However, the police continued with the investigation and submitted a challan against the deceased's husband and his mother for the offence under Sections 304-B and 498-A IPC. The deceased's father, the first respondent, was not satisfied with the challan as the deceased's husband's sister, the appellant, and her father were not arraigned as accused. Hence he moved the High Court under Section 482 CrPC. A Single Judge of the High Court disposed of the petition under Section 482 directing that the papers be placed before the Public Prosecutor "as it is without any further investigation and he shall render an impartial opinion on the matter and thereafter an amended charge-sheet shall be filed in the concerned court". The appellant's father filed a petition before the Single Judge for recalling it on the main ground that neither he nor his daughter (appellant) was heard nor were they made parties in the proceedings. But the Single Judge dismissed the petition on the main premise that Section 362 CrPC contains a bar against recalling any order passed under the Code. Hence the appellant filed the present appeal to challenge both the orders. Allowing the appeals,

Held :

Though no endeavour was made before the Supreme Court to canvass against the correctness of the view adopted by the Single Judge that the order could not be recalled by him due to the bar contained in Section 362 of the Code, but even assuming it to be so, that does not bar the Supreme Court in considering the legality of that order in the present appeal. (Para 6). R. Sarala v. T.S. Velu, (2000) 4 SCC 459: 2000 SCC (Cri) 823: AIR 2000 SC 1731: 2000 Cri LJ 2453.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision : 13-4-2000]

[3878] — Ss. 362 and 482 — Interlocutory order — Modification of — Matter not finally disposed of — Correction of apparent error — Permissibility of — Inherent power in High Court — Held, on facts, order passed on a wrong, illegal premise —

S. 362 only operative in a situation where a final order has been passed — Also, S. 482 confers inherent power in High Court unlike lower court — Therefore, held, there is no reason as to why High Court cannot modify its own interlocutory order when the matter is yet to be finally disposed of — Hence, there is no impediment to correct an apparent error (Paras 9 and 10). State of Punjab v. Deepak Mattu, (2007) 11 SCC 319: (2007) 59 AIC 220 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision : 18-9-2007]

[3879] — S. 362 — No alteration in judgment after signature — Scope — Not affected by provisions of Ss. 424, 430 and 561-A CrPC, 1898 — High Court with its original as well as appellate criminal jurisdiction also comes within the purview of the general prohibition in S. 369 — Hence, High Court has no power to alter or review its own judgment — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, S. 369

Section 369 is general in its application. The words 'no court' would include all courts and apply in respect of all judgments. Though the section appears in Chap. 26, its application is not limited to trial courts alone. The reference to the High Court in the section would indicate that the High Court is also covered by the provisions of the section subject to the exception provided for. The application of the section cannot be restricted to judgments delivered by the High Court only in criminal trials. The criminal jurisdiction as conferred by the Letters Patent on the High Court covers not only the original criminal jurisdiction but also appellate powers. State of Orissa v. Ram Chander Agarwala, (1979) 2 SCC 305: 1979 SCC (Cri) 462: AIR 1979 SC 87: 1979 Cri LJ 33.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Jaswant Singh and P.S. Kailasam, JJ. [Date of decision : 5-10-1978]

[3880] — S. 362 — Clerical mistake — What is — High Court after giving specific and express finding in its judgment that the accused intended to kill the deceased and therefore, committed offence under S. 302, IPC and confirming in the operative part of its judgment, conviction under S. 302 and sentence of life imprisonment, held, clearly contravened S. 362, CrPC in subsequently altering the operative part in purported exercise of power to correct clerical mistake by convicting the accused under S. 304, Part I and sentencing him to 7 years' RI . Naresh v. State of U.P., (1981) 3 SCC 74: 1981 SCC (Cri) 631: AIR 1981 SC 1385: 1981 Cri LJ 1044: 1981 ALJ 674.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : O. Chinnappa Reddy, A.P. Sen and Baharul Islam, JJ. [Date of decision : 24-4-1981]

[3881] — Ss. 362 and 482 — Review — High Court has no jurisdiction to alter or review its own judgment or order except to the extent of correcting any clerical or arithmetical error — Practice of filing criminal miscellaneous petition after disposal of the main case and issuance of fresh directions in such petition is unwarranted and amounts to abuse of process of the court — Once a matter is finally disposed of, held, the Court, in the absence of a specific statutory provision, becomes functus officio in respect of that matter

Respondent 1, a practising advocate, filed a petition under Section 482 CrPC in the High Court praying to call for the records of the case for perusal, to direct Respondent 6 SHO and Respondent 3 SSP to register a case on the basis of a complaint against the appellant lodged by the petitioner (Respondent 1); and to direct Respondent 2 DGP to transfer Respondents 4, 5 and an Inspector for the purpose of free, fair and impartial investigation/inquiry. A Single Judge of the High Court disposed of the petition on 7-1-1999 with the direction to the SSP to look into the allegations of the petitioner and if some cognizable offence was found to have been committed, to order for the registration of the case but if the allegations were found to be false, to prosecute the petitioner under Section 182 IPC. Thereafter, Respondent 1 again filed a miscellaneous petition which the same Single Judge disposed of without notice to the present appellant or any other respondent in that petition. In view of the submission of the petitioner (Respondent 1) that since pursuant to his criminal complaint before JMTC cognizance of the offence had been taken, he did not want to prosecute his allegations with the SSP, the Single Judge directed that the SSP need not comply with the directions dated 7-1-1999. The appellant also filed a criminal miscellaneous petition with prayer for quashing the court order dated 30-4-1999 on the ground of it being illegal, against the well-established principles of law and being a review of order dated 7-1-1999 not permissible under the criminal law. The said application was dismissed by the Single Judge on 21-7-1999. The present appeals have been filed with prayer for quashing the orders passed by the Single Judge on 30-4-1999 and 21-7-1999 mainly on the ground of the orders being without jurisdiction. Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The impugned orders were passed completely ignoring the basic principles of criminal law. The petition filed under Section 482 of the Code had been finally disposed of by the High Court on 7-1-1999. Thereafter, there was no lis pending in the High Court wherein the respondents could have filed any miscellaneous petition. Directions in the case filed by the respondents were issued apparently without notice to any of the respondents in the petition. Merely because Respondent 1 was an Advocate did not justify the issuance of directions at his request without notice of the other side. The impugned orders dated 30-4-1999 and 21-7-1999 could not have been passed by the High Court under its inherent power under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The impugned orders of the High Court dated 30-4-1999 and 21-7-1999 which are not referable to any statutory provisions, having been passed apparently in a review petition in a criminal case are without jurisdiction and liable to be quashed. (Paras 8, 10 and 11)

The practice of filing miscellaneous petitions after the disposal of the main case and issuance of fresh directions in such miscellaneous petitions by the High Court are unwarranted, not referable to any statutory provision and in substance an abuse of the process of the court. (Para 8)

There is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure authorising the High Court to review its judgment passed either in exercise of its appellate or revisional or original criminal jurisdiction. Such a power cannot be exercised with the aid or under the cloak of Section 482 of the Code. Section 362 CrPC has extended the bar of review not only to the judgment but also to the final orders other than the judgment. Section 362 is based on an acknowledged principle of law that once a matter is finally disposed of by a court, the said court in the absence of a specific statutory provision becomes functus officio and disentitled to entertain a fresh prayer for the same relief unless the former order of final disposal is set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction in a manner prescribed by law. The court becomes functus officio the moment the official order disposing of a case is signed. Such an order cannot be altered except to the extent of correcting a clerical or an arithmetical error. (Paras 9 and 10). Hari Singh Mann v. Harbhajan Singh Bajwa, (2001) 1 SCC 169: 2001 SCC (Cri) 113: AIR 2001 SC 43: 2001 Cri LJ 128: (2001) 1 Mah LJ 465.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision : 1-11-2000]

Talab Haji Hussain v. Madhukar Purshottam Mondkar, AIR 1958 SC 376: 1958 Cri LJ 701: 1958 SCR 1226, distinguished

State of Orissa v. Ram Chander Agarwala, (1979) 2 SCC 305: 1979 SCC (Cri) 462: AIR 1979 SC 87, relied on

[3882] — Ss. 362 and 482 — Review — Scope — Held, High Court cannot review its own judgment except to correct a clerical or arithmetical error — By way of clarification it cannot reverse its own judgment and order

The respondent filed a revision petition under Section 482 CrPC before the High Court for quashing criminal proceedings initiated against him. A Single Judge of the High Court dismissed the petition on the grounds that there was proper sanction to prosecute the respondent and a prima facie case was made out against him. Subsequently, a miscellaneous petition was filed in the said criminal case by the respondent for clarification of the above order. This petition was finally allowed by the impugned order by the same learned Judge holding that there was no proper sanction from the competent authority and, therefore, no cognizance could have been taken against him. Question before the Supreme Court was whether the subsequent order of the Single Judge clarifying the earlier order holding that no cognizance against the respondent could have been taken for want of proper sanction is valid or not. Allowing the appeal,

Held :

By the impugned subsequent order, it cannot be said that the High Court only corrected any clerical or arithmetical error. In fact the impugned order is an order of review, as the earlier order was reversed, which could not have been done. (Para 6)

The Code of Criminal Procedure does not authorise the High Court to review its judgment or order passed either in exercise of its appellate, revisional or original jurisdiction. Section 362 of the Code prohibits the court after it has signed its judgment or final order disposing of a case from altering or reviewing the said judgment or order except to correct a clerical or arithmetical error. This prohibition is complete and no criminal court can review its own judgment or order after it is signed. (Para 6). State of Kerala v. M.M. Manikantan Nair, (2001) 4 SCC 752: 2001 SCC (Cri) 808: AIR 2001 SC 2145: 2001 Cri LJ 2346.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : K.T. Thomas, R.P. Sethi and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision : 25-4-2001]

Hari Singh Mann v. Harbhajan Singh Bajwa, (2001) 1 SCC 169: 2001 SCC (Cri) 113, relied on

[3883] — S. 362 — Nature of power — Criminal courts — No power of review of an order by criminal court exists under CrPC — Held, it is settled law that power of review is not an inherent power and must be conferred on a court by a specific or express provision to that effect — No power of review has been conferred by Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 on a criminal court and therefore it cannot review an order passed or judgment pronounced — CPC, 1908, Ss. 114, 115, 151 and Or. 47 — Constitution of India, Art. 137 (Para 33). Sunita Jain v. Pawan Kumar Jain, (2008) 2 SCC

705: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 537: (2008) 64 AIC 212 (SC): (2008) 2 KLJ 304.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : C.K. Thakker and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision : 25-1-2008]

Patel Narshi Thakershi v. Pradyumansinghji Arjunsinghji, (1971) 3 SCC 844, relied on [3884] — S. 362 — Review — Power of High Court — High Court has no power to recall or review its own order (Para 5). R. Annapurna v. Ramadugu Anantha Krishna Sastry, (2002) 10 SCC 401.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision : 9-8-2000]

[3885] — S. 362 — Review of own judgment by court not permissible — CJM in his first order recording that despite notice having been sent to informant, no one appeared on his behalf and prosecution having submitted final report mentioning "truth undetected" and the case having been pending since 1998, the final report had to be accepted and accordingly dismissing the complaint — But by a subsequent order of the same date, the same CJM in the same case taking cognizance of offence punishable under Ss. 302/201/34 IPC — No reason noticeable therefor in the subsequent order — Held, this amounted to review by CJM of his earlier order which is impermissible under S. 362 — Hence subsequent order taking cognizance was bad in law and liable to be quashed (Paras 6 and 7). Surendra Singh v. State of Bihar, (2005) 12 SCC 361.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : N. Santosh Hegde and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision : 25-1-2005]

[3886] — Ss. 362 and 320 — Once judgment pronounced, High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain application for grant of permission to compound the offence. Tanveer Aquil v. State of M.P., 1990 Supp SCC 63: 1990 SCC (Cri) 618.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K. Jagannatha Shetty and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision : 1-2-1989]

[3887] — Ss. 362 and 360 — Modification of judgment — Permissibility — Prayer to modify the judgment after conviction by directing the appellant to be released on probation under S. 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act, 1958 or in the alternative under S. 360 CrPC — Rejection of, by High Court, held, was justified in the absence of any provision for modification of the judgment — But considering the peculiar circumstances, High Court directed to consider appellant's application under the Probation Act or S. 360 CrPC, as the case may be — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 4 (Para 9). Chhanni v. State of U.P., (2006) 5 SCC 396: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 466.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision : 6-7-2006]

[3888] — Ss. 362 and 439 — Bail order — Corrections made in subsequent to the release of the accused on bail without hearing him — Propriety of — Accused granted bail due to the erroneous recording by the court on the order-sheet to the effect that the accused had been released on bail — Trial Judge ordered to take the accused into custody — Held, rectification of the mistake by the court without providing any opportunity of hearing to the accused was not just and proper. Rajendra Prasad Arya v. State of Bihar, (2000) 9 SCC 514: 2001 SCC (Cri) 639: AIR 2000 SC 3536.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision : 28-2-2000]

[3889] — S. 363 — Entitlement to legal aid — Held, if the court is required to render some assistance or service free of cost, it should be specifically provided for in law — Constitution of India — Arts. 21 & 39-A (Para 10.3). State of Gujarat v. Shaileshbhai Mansukhlal Shah, (2007) 7 SCC 71: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 313: (2007) 4 KLT 579.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : R.V. Raveendran and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision : 30-5-2007]

[3890] — Ss. 363(5) and 207 — Nature and scope — Held, neither contains any non-obstante clause, nor affects the inherent power of holding proceedings in camera, nor takes away accused's right to get copies under S. 548, CrPC, 1898 or copies of statements recorded by magistrate or statement of witnesses recorded by police or documents obtained by police during investigation envisaged under Criminal Rr. 308 and 310 framed under Criminal Procedure Code — Accused's lawyer also entitled to take notes of such statements in extenso and cannot be compelled to show his register containing the notes by virtue of privilege under S. 126, Evidence Act, 1872 — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, Ss. 548, 251-A — Official Secrets Act, 1923, S. 14

The words 'in addition and without prejudice to any powers' in S. 14 cannot be construed to be a non-obstante clause at all so as to override other provisions of the Act or those of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 14 is merely an enabling and not a barring provision. It reserves the inherent powers of the court to exclude the public from the proceedings if the court is of the opinion that it is just and expedient to do so.

The words 'publication of any evidence' in S. 14 merely highlight the ground for holding the proceedings in camera because if public are allowed to be present during the hearing the evidence which is recorded in their presence it will amount to publication and it is in that sense alone that the word 'publication' has been used in S. 14. By using the word 'publication' S. 14 does not deprive an accused of getting any copies of the statement of witnesses or of the judgment under S. 548, CrPC, 1898 or Criminal Rr. 308 and 310 framed by the Calcutta High Court. If an interpretation of S. 14 which would deprive the accused of access to the statements recorded by the police or the statements of witnesses recorded at the inquiry or the trial be accepted, then the provisions of S. 14 will have to be struck down as being violative of Art. 21. So far as the arguments and the discussion of the evidence inside the court is concerned, so long as the proceedings are in camera the danger of publication is completely excluded.

There was absolutely no impropriety on the part of the magistrate in not taking action against the defence lawyer for his refusal to show his register because the lawyer had rightly claimed privilege under S. 126 of the Evidence Act. On a parity of reasoning, there is also no impropriety in the conduct of the lawyer in refusing to show the statement of witnesses recorded by the court in extenso in order to prepare himself for an effective cross-examination of the witnesses. Supdt. & Remembrancer of Legal Affairs v. Satyen Bhowmick, (1981) 2 SCC 109: 1981 SCC (Cri) 342: AIR 1981 SC 917: (1981) 2 SCR 661: 1981 Cri LJ 341.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision : 15-1-1981]

— S. 366 See also S. 374, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1174 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 366 See S. 354(3), above

See also Ss. 354(3), 366 and 368

See also Ss. 354(3), 366 and 433-A

See also Ss. 374 and 366

See also Ss. 374 & 386 and 366

See also Ss. 386, 374(2) and 366

See also Ss. 433, 433-A, 434, 413, 414, 418, 366, 368 and 371

[3891] — S. 366 — Reference of death sentence under — Rejection of — High Court should give reasons for differing from the view of trial court instead of mechanically rejecting the reference (Para 13). Ramji Rai v. State of Bihar, (1999) 8 SCC 389: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1446: AIR 1999 SC 3857.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision : 13-10-1999]

[3892] — S. 366 — Reference under — Duty of High Court to reappreciate the evidence and come to an independent finding — High Court making only a general reference to the evidence of the eyewitness and observing that all witnesses examined by the prosecution inspire full confidence — Held, improper — Case not remanded — Supreme Court reappreciating evidence in the interest of justice to prevent further delay

As the High Court was dealing with not only the appeal filed by the appellants but also a reference under S. 374 for confirming the death sentence, it was essential for the High Court to have reappraised the evidence adduced in the case and come to an independent conclusion as to whether the guilt of the accused had been proved or not.

Ordinarily in a criminal appeal against conviction the appellate court can dismiss the appeal if the Court is of the opinion that there is no sufficient ground for interference after examining the various grounds urged before it for challenging the correctness of the decision of the trial court. It is not necessary for the appellate court to examine the entire record for the purpose of arriving at an independent conclusion. The position, however, is different where in addition to an appeal filed by an accused who is sentenced to death, the High Court has to dispose of the reference for confirmation of the death sentence under S. 374. While dealing with a reference the High Court should consider the proceedings in all their aspects and come to an independent conclusion on the material on record apart from the view expressed by the Sessions Judge. In so doing the High Court will be assisted by the opinion expressed by the Sessions Judge, but under the provisions of the law above-mentioned it is for the High Court to come to an independent conclusion of its own. Charan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1975) 3 SCC 39: 1974 SCC (Cri) 735: AIR 1975 SC 246: (1975) 1 SCR 561: 1974 Cri LJ 1253.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : H.R. Khanna and Y.V. Chandrachud, JJ. [Date of decision : 26-7-1974]

[3893] — Ss. 366, 368, 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction and reference relating to death sentence — Proper mode of disposal of — In an appeal against conviction and reference relating to death sentence, High Court setting aside conviction and sentence in a casual and summary manner — High Court neither analysing the evidence nor referring to any finding recorded by the trial court as to in what way the evidence was not acceptable — Acquittal of co-accused not sufficient to discard the prosecution version in its totality — Statement by High Court that there was no corroboration of "investigation", unclear — Held, that was not the way an appeal or reference for confirmation of death sentence is to be dealt with — While setting aside order of conviction the least that was required to be done was analysis of the evidence to show as to how the conclusions of the trial court as regards acceptability of the evidence of any witness were erroneous — That not being done impugned judgment set aside and matter remitted to High Court for fresh consideration — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34 (Paras 2 and 4). State of U.P. v. Govind Das, (2007) 10 SCC 795: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 699: 2007 Cri LJ 4289: (2007) 57 AIC 99 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision : 10-8-2007]

[3894] — Ss. 366, 368, 374 and 386 — Confirmation of death sentence — Court must deal with the matter carefully and examine all relevant and material circumstances before upholding the conviction and confirming the sentence of death. Arjun Marik v. State of Bihar, 1994 Supp (2) SCC 372: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1551.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision : 2-3-1994]

[3895] — Ss. 366, 368 and 386 — Duty of High Court in death reference — Held, High Court has to satisfy itself whether a case beyond reasonable doubt attracting death penalty has been made out — In doing so High Court has to reappraise and reassess the entire facts and law so as to come to its independent conclusion but cannot totally overlook the conclusion of the Sessions Judge either — Therefore, it should consider the merits of the case itself and examine the entire evidence on record afresh — On facts, held, High Court instead of discharging its duty in the said manner, found the accused entitled to benefit of doubt merely on surmises and conjectures — Such conclusion, held, was unsustainable and resulted in miscarriage of justice

When a reference is made to the High Court under Section 366 CrPC by the Sessions Judge on passing a sentence of death, the High Court has to satisfy itself whether a case beyond reasonable doubt has been made out against the accused for infliction of the extreme penalty of death. The proceedings before the High Court in such a case require a reappraisal and reassessment of the entire facts and law so that it may come to its independent conclusion but while so doing, the High Court cannot also totally overlook the conclusion arrived at by the Sessions Judge. In performing its duty, the High Court is of necessity bound to consider the merits of the case itself and has to examine the entire evidence on record. In the instant case, the High Court as a court of appeal has failed to exercise its power under Section 386 CrPC and instead of discharging its bounden duty to examine the evidence and other materials on record, it, without appreciating the same, merely on surmises and conjectures, came to the conclusion that the accused was entitled to the benefit of doubt. Therefore, its conclusion cannot be sustained. Moreover, such infraction of duty by the High Court has caused a gross miscarriage of justice. (Para 5). State of T.N. v. Rajendran, (1999) 8 SCC 679: AIR 1999 SC 3535.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik, M. Srinivasan and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision : 22-9-1999]

[3896] — Ss. 366, 415, 433, 434 and 435 — Keeping prisoners sentenced to death in solitary confinement, held, is impermissible being a distinct and separate kind of punishment under S. 73, IPC and not part of the death sentence under S. 53, IPC — To read solitary confinement as permissible under S. 30(2) would render it unconstitutional and violative of prisoner's fundamental rights under Arts. 21, 20(2), 19 and 14 — Prisoner in jail still retains his fundamental rights — Nature of non-punitive custodial isolation of such a prisoner awaiting execution permissible under S. 30(2) read with S. 366, Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 laid down — Meaning of "apart from other persons" and "be confined in a cell" in S. 30(2) explained — For applicability of S. 30(2) when is a prisoner "under sentence of death" also explained — "Shall" in S. 30(2) means "shall be liable to" — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161 — Prisons Act, 1894, S. 30(2)

The petitioner was found guilty by the Sessions Court of the offence of murder and was awarded the capital sentence. He was a 'B' class prisoner eligible for certain amenities. After the death penalty was pronounced, the prison superintendent stripped him of the 'B' class facilities and locked him up in a single cell with a small, walled yard attached but beyond the view of other human beings except the jail guards and formal visitors who visited in discharge of their official duties and a few callers on rare occasions.

He filed the present petition under Art. 32 of the Constitution of India to the Supreme Court.

Held :

The scope of S. 30(2) is that persons in the position of the petitioner are not to be completely segregated except in extreme cases of necessity which must be specifically made out and that too after he is, in the true sense of the expression, 'a prisoner under sentence of death'.

Per Chandrachud, C.J. and Fazal Ali, Shinghal and Desai, JJ.

It is no more open to debate that convicts are not wholly denuded of their fundamental rights. Prisoners are entitled to all constitutional rights unless their liberty has been constitutionally curtailed. Therefore, any imposition of any major punishment within the prison system is conditional upon the observance of procedural safeguards. However, they are not in a position to enjoy the full panoply of fundamental rights because these very rights are subject to restrictions imposed by the nature of the regime to which they have been lawfully committed.

Solitary confinement has a degrading and dehumanising effect on prisoners. If S. 30(2) of the Prisons Act enables the prison authorities to impose solitary confinement on a prisoner under death sentence, not as a consequence of violation of prison discipline but on the sole and solitary ground that the prisoner is one under sentence of death, the provision would offend Arts. 14, 19 and 20. Further, if by imposing solitary confinement, there is total deprivation of camaraderie amongst co-prisoners, commingling and talking and being talked to, it would offend Art. 21.

It is, however, clear that S. 30(2) does not empower the prison authorities to impose solitary confinement in the sense in which that word is understood in paragraph 510 of the Punjab Jail Manual. Sections 73 and 74, Indian Penal Code, show that solitary confinement is by itself a substantive punishment which can be imposed only by a court of law. The limit of solitary confinement that can be imposed under the court order is strictly prescribed and that provides internal evidence of its abnormal effect on the subject.

Such confinement can neither be cellular nor separate, and in any event, it cannot be a solitary confinement. The expression "such prisoner shall be confined in a cell apart from all other prisoners" has a restricted meaning. It must be given a rational meaning to effectuate the purpose behind the provision so as not to attract the vice of solitary confinement. Section 366(2), Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 enables the Sessions Court to commit a convicted person, who is awarded capital punishment, to jail custody under a warrant. It is implicit that the prisoner is neither awarded a simple nor rigorous imprisonment. The purpose of the subsection is to make available the prisoner when a sentence is required to be executed. He is only to be kept in jail custody. After the sentence becomes executable, he may be kept in a cell apart from other prisoners with a day and night watch. But, even here, unless special circumstances exist, he must be within the sight and sound of other prisoners and be able to take food in their company. Hence, the prisoner under sentence of death, who is already in jail custody cannot be subjected to punitive detention except for prison offences. If he is detained in solitary confinement, it will amount to imposing punishment for the same offence more than once and that would be violative of Art. 20(2).

The expression "prisoner under sentence of death" can only mean a prisoner whose sentence of death has become final and conclusive and indefeasible which cannot be annulled or voided by any judicial or constitutional procedure. A sentence of death imposed by Sessions Judge cannot be executed unless it is confirmed by the High Court. The High Court may either confirm the sentence or pass any other sentence or even acquit him. If he is convicted he can appeal to the Supreme Court when S. 415, Criminal Procedure Code, provides for postponement of execution of sentence of death. Further, under Arts. 72 and 161 of the Constitution of India, the President and the Governor have the power to grant pardon, reprieve, remittance or commutation of sentence of death. It could not have been the intention of the legislature that a prisoner under sentence of death could be kept in solitary confinement from the time the Sessions Judge awards the punishment till the sentence is finally executed, especially when solitary confinement or cellular or separate confinement cannot be imposed beyond the prescribed period under S. 73, Indian Penal Code, and S. 46(8) of the Prisons Act. As the prisoner is not to be kept in solitary confinement and the custody under S. 30(2) would preclude detention in solitary confinement, there is no question of imposing a second punishment and hence the provision is not violative of Art. 20.

The challenge under Art. 21 must also fail on the interpretation given to S. 30(2). Personal liberty of a person who is incarcerated is to a great extent curtailed by punitive detention. It is even curtailed in preventive detention. The liberty to move, mix, mingle, talk, share company with co-prisoners, if substantially curtailed, would be violative of Art. 21 unless the curtailment has the backing of law. Section 30(2) of the Prisoners Act establishes the procedure by which it can be curtailed but it must be read as interpreted above. The word 'law' in the expression 'procedure established by law' in Art. 21 means a law which is right, just and fair and not arbitrary, fanciful or oppressive. Once S. 30(2) is read down its obnoxious element is erased and it cannot be said that it is arbitrary or that there is deprivation of personal liberty without the authority of law.

Classification, according to the sentence for security purposes, is valid, and, therefore, S. 30(2) does not violate Art. 14.

On the interpretation given to S. 30(2) as read down, the restriction is not unreasonable. The restriction is imposed keeping in view the safety of the prisoner and the prison security and it is not violative of Art. 19.

Per Krishna Iyer, J.

Condemned prisoners like the petitioner shall be merely kept in custody and shall not be put to work like those sentenced to rigorous imprisonment. These prisoners shall not be kept apart or segregated except on their own volition since they do not come under S. 30(2) of the Prisons Act. They shall be entitled to the amenities of ordinary inmates in the prison like games, books, newspapers, reasonably good food, the right to expression, artistic or otherwise, and normal clothing and bed. In a sense, they stand better than ordinary prisoners because they are not serving any term of rigorous imprisonment, as such. However, if their gregarious wishes induce them to live in fellowship and work like other prisoners they should be allowed to do so. To eat together, to sleep together, to work together, to live together, generally speaking, cannot be denied to them except on specific grounds warranting such a course such as homosexual tendencies, diseases, violent proclivities and the like. But if these grounds are to be the basis for revocation of advantages to the prejudice of the sentencee he should be given a brief hearing in essential compliance with the principles of natural justice.

Solitary confinement, even if mollified and modified marginally, is not sanctioned by S. 30 for prisoners under sentence of death. The contention that solitary confinement is a compassionate measure to protect the prisoner lest he be killed or kill himself is absurd. Such persons have no motive to commit suicide or further commit murder within the jail. The contention is not based on any relevant statistical study. The contention that the confinement is not 'solitary' but 'statutory' authorised by S. 30(2), Prisons Act, and S. 366(2), Criminal Procedure Code, must also be rejected. It will be a stultification of judicial power, if, under guise of using S. 30(2), the Superintendent inflicts what is substantially solitary confinement which is a species of punishment within the jurisdiction of the criminal Court. The Penal Code and Criminal Procedure Code regard punitive solitude too harsh and the Legislature cannot be intended to permit preventive solitary confinement, released even from the restrictions of Ss. 73 and 74, Indian Penal Code and S. 29, Prisons Act and the restrictive Prison Rules.

Under S. 366(2), Criminal Procedure Code, the Court passing the sentence of death shall commit the convicted person to jail custody under a warrant. This 'safe keeping' in jail custody is the limited jurisdiction of the jailor and the convict is not sentenced to imprisonment. But it is legal under that section to separate such prisoners from the rest of the prison community during hours when prisoners are generally locked in. A special watch day and night of such prisoners by guards is also valid. Infraction of privacy may be inevitable but guards must concede minimum privacy in practice.

The phrase 'to be confined in a cell' does not mean a solitary cell, and 'apart from all other prisoners' only connotes that in a cell where there are a plurality of inmates the death sentencee will have to be kept separated from the rest in the same cell but not too close to others, and under a guard. The word 'shall' in this disciplinary context means 'shall be liable to'. The sub-section, understood in the correct setting, plainly excludes any trace of severity and merely provides for a protective distance being maintained between the prisoner under death sentence and other prisoners, although they are accommodated in the same cell and are allowed to communicate with each other, eat together, see each other for all other practical purposes and continue community life. The sub-section relates to separation without isolation, keeping apart without close confinement.

More importantly, if the prisoner desires loneliness for reflection and remorse, for prayers and making peace with his maker, or opportunities for meeting family or friends, such facilities shall be liberally granted. Having regard to the stressful spell of terrestrial farewell his soul may be passing through the compassion society owes to him whose life it takes.

The crucial holding under S. 30(2) is that a prisoner is not 'under sentence of death' even if the sessions court has sentenced him to death subject to confirmation by the High Court. He is not 'under sentence of death' even if the High Court imposes, by confirmation or fresh appellate infliction, death penalty, so long as an appeal to the Supreme Court is likely to be or has been moved or is pending. Even if Supreme Court has awarded capital sentence, S. 30 does not cover him so long as his petition for mercy to the Governor and/or to the President permitted by the Constitution, Code and Prison Rules, has not been disposed of. Of course, once rejected by the Governor and the President, and on further application there is no stay of execution by the authorities, he is 'under sentence of death', even if he goes on making further mercy petitions. During that interregnum he attracts the custodial segregation specified in S. 30(2), subject to the ameliorative meaning assigned to the provision. To be 'under sentence of death' means "to be under a finally executable death sentence."

Further restraint, however, on such a condemned prisoner would be valid if clear and present danger of violence or likely violation of custody is, for good reasons, made out with due regard to the rules of fair play implied in natural justice. Sunil Batra v. Delhi Admn., (1978) 4 SCC 494: 1979 SCC (Cri) 155: AIR 1978 SC 1675: 1978 Cri LJ 1741.

Bench Strength 5. Coram : Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J.[2] and V.R. Krishna Iyer[1], S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[2], P.N. Shinghal[2] and D.A. Desai[2], JJ. [Date of decision : 30-8-1978]

[3897] — S. 366 — Non-imposition of death sentence even when the case falls under "rarest of rare" category — Long time-gap in matter coming up before Supreme Court — Murder of two old, infirm and defenceless ladies by accused (domestic servant) in whom they reposed confidence — Death sentence imposed by the trial court on 5 2-1994, reduced to that of life imprisonment by High Court — Held, considering long time-gap between the sentence of death originally imposed by trial court and thereafter High Court taking a different view, it would not be a fit case to upset the order rendered by High Court (Para 5). State of Punjab v. Jaswamt Singh, (2009) 16 SCC 357.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: S. Rajendra Babu and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-11-2002]

Amrutlal Someshwar Joshi v. State of Maharashtra, (1994) 6 SCC 186: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1591, considered

[3898] — Ss. 366 to 368 — Confirmation of death sentence — Scope of enquiry by High Court — Obligation to reassess the entire evidence — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, Ss. 374, 375 and 376

On a reference for confirmation of the sentence of death, the High Court is under an obligation to proceed in accordance with the provisions of Ss. 375 and 376 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Under these sections the High Court must not only see whether the order passed by the Sessions Court is correct but it is under an obligation to examine the entire evidence for itself, apart from and independently of the Sessions Court's appraisal and assessment of that evidence.

On facts, the High Court has failed to show due regard to this well-established position in law. It did not undertake a full and independent examination of the evidence led in the case and it mainly contented itself with finding out whether the Sessions Court had in any manner erred in reaching the conclusion that the charge of murder levelled against the appellants was established beyond reasonable doubt. It was wrong to attach a sort of mystical weight and authority to the trial court's judgment on the ground that the trial Judge had the opportunity to observe the demeanour of the witnesses, when in fact he made no special reference to this aspect. Subhash v. State of U.P., (1976) 3 SCC 629: 1976 SCC (Cri) 483: AIR 1976 SC 1924: 1976 Cri LJ 1521: 1977 MLJ (Cri) 129.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : Y.V. Chandrachud, R.S. Sarkaria and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision : 6-5-1976]

[3899] — Ss. 366, 391, 24 and 225 — Confirmation proceedings of death sentence under S. 366 before High Court — Nature of — Recalling of witness before High Court, at stage of — Permissibility — Role and duties of Public Prosecutor towards court — Duty of court in case of dereliction of duty by prosecuting agency — Murder trial — Dying declaration by deceased P given to doctor, not brought on record by prosecution — This declaration part of charge-sheet and copy thereof supplied to accused persons — Aforesaid declaration going to root of matter relating to culpability of one of accused A-2 (out of A-1 to A-3) relating to assault and murders of P and his family members, as it did not mention A-2's name — Application under S. 391 for taking on record aforesaid dying declaration, opposed by Public Prosecutor and A-1 and A-3 — Application rejected by High Court on grounds that no question put to doctor regarding dying declaration by A-2 before trial court and there was strong opposition to application — Sustainability — Held, confirmation proceedings are always original proceedings in the nature of extended trial — Task of Public Prosecutor is not only to secure conviction, he has a duty to court — He is an officer of court and, therefore, in all fairness, firstly, document should have been brought on record and secondly, even if doctor who recorded dying declaration was not confronted with that dying declaration, that opportunity could have been provided before High Court, if necessary by recalling doctor before High Court itself — Fairness of trial is basic requirement in criminal law — Public Prosecutor ought not to have opposed production of document — Therefore, production of document, allowed — Also clarified that though A-2's name did not appear in aforesaid dying declaration, that is of no consequence as evidence of eyewitnesses completely fixes criminal liability on his part herein — Therefore, even if dying declara- tion was somewhat helpful to A-2, that by itself would not wipe out credible evidence of eyewitnesses — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 32(1) (Paras 44 to 50). Dilip Premnarayan Tiwari v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 1 SCC 775.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 10-12-2009]

Rampal Pithwa Rahidas v. State of Maharashtra, 1994 Supp (2) SCC 73: 1994 SCC (Cri) 851, relied on

[3900] — Ss. 366, 368 and 374 — Exercise of power under, to confirm death sentence — Need of greater care and circumspection, stressed

Per Ganguly, J.

The High Court cannot accept one part of the statement to the total non-consideration of the other part in which the appellant has retracted his confession. In a case where death penalty has been imposed, the High Court is expected to consider the evidence with greater care and circumspection. In para 13 of the High Court's judgment, the High Court merely referred to the general denials by the appellant in the course of his examination under Section 313 CrPC and held that the non-explanation of the suspicious circumstances under which the deceased had died will be treated as an additional link against the appellant. (Paras 56 and 55). Rameshbhai Chandubhai Rathod v. State of Gujarat, (2009) 5 SCC 740.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat[1] and A.K. Ganguly[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2009]

Megh Singh v. State of Punjab, (2003) 8 SCC 666: 2004 SCC (Cri) 58, relied on

[3901] — Ss. 366, 368, 415, 432 and 433 — Rape and murder of child by watchman — Death sentence — If warranted — Appellant-accused aged about 27 years was watchman of building where deceased was residing — Death sentence imposed by trial court affirmed by High Court — Difference of opinion amongst Judges of Division Bench of Supreme Court as regards award of capital punishment in Rameshbhai (1) case, (2009) 5 SCC 740 — Possibility of rehabilitation and reformation of young offender — Uncertainty due to nature of circumstantial evidence — Hence held, death sentence cannot be maintained — Considering gravity of offence, behaviour of appellant, and fear and concern such incident generate in ordered society, death sentence commuted to life imprisonment directing that life sentence would extend to full life of appellant subject to any remission/commutation at instance of Government for good and sufficient reasons — Constitution of India, Arts. 72 and 161 — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 376, 302, 363 and 366 (Paras 9 to 12). Rameshbhai Chandubhai Rathod (2) v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 2 SCC 764.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: H.S. Bedi, P. Sathasivam and C.K. Prasad, JJ. [Date of decision: 24-1-2011]

Ramraj v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2010) 1 SCC 573: (2010) 1 SCC (Cri) 842; Mulla v. State of U.P., (2010) 3 SCC 508: (2010) 2 SCC (Cri) 1150; Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681, relied on

Dhananjoy Chatterjee v. State of W.B., (1994) 2 SCC 220: 1994 SCC (Cri) 358, distinguished on facts

Opinion of A.K. Ganguly, J. in Rameshbhai Chandubhai Rathod (1) v. State of Gujarat, (2009) 5 SCC 740: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 881, affirmed

[3902] — S. 366 — Death sentence — Imposition of — Propriety — Factors to be considered — Multiple murder case — Object and function of criminal law, need for imposition of appropriate sentence, extent of adherence to principle of proportionality while sentencing, requirement for delicately balancing the aggravating and mitigating factors and circumstances in which crime committed and guidelines related to imposition of death sentence, restated — Murder of six members of a family, including helpless women and children, committed in a brutal, diabolic and grisly manner — Crime being one of enormous proportion which shocks conscience of law — Death sentence imposed by trial court on S, U, H and Ha, altered to life sentence in case of S and U by High Court, after upholding conviction of S and U, however, acquitting H and Ha — Sustainability — In a case of this nature, held, death sentence as awarded to respondent-accused S and U on conviction under S. 302 r/w S. 149 was appropriate sentence and High Court ought not to have altered it — Regarding acquittal of H and Ha, High Court noted that evidence of their involvement was not totally free from doubt and that High Court had analysed factual scenario in detail to direct acquittal — Hence, their acquittal, affirmed — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 r/w S. 149, Ss. 307/149 and 148 (Paras 2, 4 and 30 to 32). State of U.P. v. Sattan, (2009) 4 SCC 736.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-2-2009]

Bantu v. State of U.P., (2008) 11 SCC 113: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 353, followed

Sahdeo v. State of U.P., (2004) 10 SCC 682: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1873, relied on

[3903] — S. 366 — Death sentence — On facts, held, not warranted — Weighing of mitigating circumstances while awarding death sentence — Requirement of — Reiterated, there have to be very special reasons to award death penalty and if mitigating factors in the case are stronger, then it is neither proper nor justified to award death sentence and it would be sufficient to place it out of "the rarest of rare category" — In the present case of murder by appellant-accused of his wife and children, after weighing the mitigating circumstances, held, instant case not fit to fall within category of "the rarest of rare cases" — Therefore, death sentence, as awarded to appellant by trial court and confirmed by High Court, commuted to life imprisonment — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

In the case in hand, weighing the mitigating circumstances the following facts are manifest:

(i) The appellant had been unemployed for last seven to eight months.

(ii) He used to borrow money from others to meet his daily needs.

(iii) He himself had consumed "sulphas tablets" to commit suicide even though not medically established.

(iv) He therefore, was keen that his whole family should be finished and no one should be alive to suffer the pain and agony alone.

(v) He was fed up with his life and was seen in a perplexed condition by PW 4.

(vi) In any case, he cannot be a threat to the society and there are fairly good chances of his reformation as he has learnt sufficient lesson from it. (Para 45)

Extreme poverty had driven the appellant to commit the gruesome murder of three of his very near and dear family members-his wife, minor son and daughter. There is nothing on record to show that the appellant is a habitual offender. He appears to be a peace-loving, law-abiding citizen but as he was poverty-stricken, he thought in his wisdom to completely eliminate his family so that all problems would come to an end. Precisely, this appears to be the reason for him to consume some poisonous substances, after committing the offence of murder. (Para 46)

No witness has complained about the appellant's bad or intolerable behaviour in the past. That many people had visited his house after the incident is indicative of the fact that he had cordial relations with all. He is now about thirty-five years of age and there appear to be fairly good chances of the appellant getting reformed and becoming a good citizen. (Para 47)

Thus, looking to the matter from all angles and after giving serious consideration to the whole matter, it is not a fit case where it would fall within the category of "the rarest of rare cases" and therefore death sentence as awarded to him by the trial court and confirmed by the High Court deserves to be set aside and quashed and is accordingly done so. Instead he is held guilty of commission of offence under Section 302 IPC on three counts and is awarded life imprisonment for the same. The impugned judgment and order stands modified to the aforesaid extent. (Paras 48 and 49). Sushil Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2009) 10 SCC 434: (2009) 82 AIC 218 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-9-2009]

Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 684: 1980 SCC (Cri) 580; Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470: 1983 SCC (Cri) 681; Om Prakash v. State of Haryana, (1999) 3 SCC 19: 1999 SCC (Cri) 334; Santosh Kumar Satishbhushan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498: (2009) 2 SCC (Cri) 1149, applied

[3904] — S. 366 — Reference of death sentence — Alteration to life imprisonment — Factors to be considered — Held, number of deaths would not be the determinative factor for awarding death sentence — Even in case of single victim death sentence can be awarded taking into consideration circumstances of case — On facts held, it cannot be said that High Court by altering sentence from death to life had acted inappropriately (Para 21). Aqeel Ahmad v. State of U.P., (2008) 16 SCC 372: AIR 2009 SC 1271: (2009) 2 All LJ 178: (2009) 75 AIC 248 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-12-2008]

[3905] — Ss. 366 and 386 — Reference under S. 366 before High Court against death sentence awarded to accused persons for rape and murder — High Court setting aside the conviction and sentence passed by Sessions Court — By doing so High Court adopting an erroneous approach which resulted in miscarriage of justice — Held, error committed by the High Court must be undone by restoring the conviction passed against the accused — But at this distance of time, sentence of death need not be restored — Accordingly accused convicted under Ss. 302 and 376 r/w S. 34 IPC and sentenced to undergo imprisonment for life on the first count and rigorous imprisonment for a period of 10 years on the second count — Sentences on both counts to run concurrently — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 376 r/w S. 34. State of T.N. v. Suresh, (1998) 2 SCC 372: AIR 1998 SC 1044.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision : 5-12-1997]

[3906] — S. 366 — Conviction under — Award of death sentence — Paedophilia and murder — Whether death sentence warranted — Conviction based on circumstantial evidence — Propriety — Essential ingredients of proof by circumstantial evidence, restated — On facts, appellant accused of raping and murdering two minor girls less than ten years of age — Earlier also he was convicted for raping minor girls — Trial court considering all the circumstances to be a complete chain unerringly pointing at the guilt of appellant-accused accordingly convicting him — Appellant awarded death sentence under S. 302 while custodial sentences imposed under Ss. 363, 376 and 201 — Death sentence affirmed by High Court — Sustainability — Contention of appellant that as the case was one which rested on circumstantial evidence, conviction was improper — Alternatively, death sentence was not the proper sentence — Held, prosecution was able to establish the accusations — Also, PWs 7 and 8, wife and daughter of appellant-accused, were the key witnesses — Considering the facts and circumstances held, and the relevant case law, the instant case falls in the rarest of rare category — Hence, the depraved acts of appellant-accused warranted only death sentence — Therefore, no interference warranted — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 363, 376 and 201

Two young girls, N and G, less than ten years of age, were the victims of the sexual assault and animal lust of the appellant-accused. They were not only raped but were murdered by the appellant-accused. Case was based on circumstantial evidence. Trial court considering all the circumstances awarded death sentence to the appellant under Section 302 IPC while imposing custodial sentences under Sections 363, 376 and 201 IPC. The appellant questioned correctness of the judgment before the High Court and a reference was made by the trial court in view of the death sentence imposed. After analysing the evidence, the High Court found the evidence to be cogent and credible and affirmed the death sentence looking into the ghastly acts committed by the appellant.

It was not the first occasion when the appellant was convicted for rape of minor girls. Earlier, the appellant was convicted for kidnapping a minor girl and committing rape on her. Thereafter the accused was again convicted for having raped a minor girl of less than nine years of age. He was released after completion of the sentence and thereafter continued his degraded acts. The raping of the two girls, one aged about five years and the other about ten years, formed the subject-matter of consideration in the instant appeal.

Dismissing the appeal,

Held :

Prosecution relied on the following circumstances to fasten the guilt on the appellant-accused:

1. Last seen.

2. Motive.

3. Seizure of bloodstained clothes which were on the person of the accused at the time of arrest.

4. Chemical analyst's report which showed that shirt and pant of the accused were stained with Blood Group 'A' which was the blood group of both the deceased.

5. Blood in the nail clippings of the accused was of 'A' group which was the blood group of both the deceased.

6. Recovery of dead body of G at the instance of the accused.

7. The accused pointing out the places where rape was committed on N and G where the earth was found stained with blood of 'A' group and other incriminating articles were seized.

8. Extra-judicial confession to PW 11.

9. Recovery of frocks of both the deceased girls at the instance of the accused.

10. The accused pointing out the well wherein he had thrown N.

11. False explanation by the accused. (Para 11)

The prosecution had established that both the girls were missing since about 6 p.m. on 13-12-1999 and the appellant-accused was seen in the company of the girls till morning of 14-12-1999 and soon thereafter dead body of N was found and thereafter the dead body of G was found. The post-mortem of N was conducted on 14-12-1999 between 9.30 p.m. to 10.30 p.m. and post-mortem of G was conducted on 14-12-1999 between 10.30 p.m. to 11.30 p.m. The evidence of doctor, PW 9, clearly showed that the girls according to him were murdered within 36 hours and the rape was committed on them within 48 hours before the time of post-mortem. Therefore, the time given by the doctor fitted with the prosecution case of timings relating to last seen. The prosecution was able to establish the accusations. (Para 20)

In the instant case, interestingly, PWs 7 and 8, wife and daughter of the appellant-accused, were the key witnesses. (Para 17)

The case at hand falls in the rarest of rare category. The depraved acts of the accused called for only one sentence that is death sentence. (Para 23)

Looked at from any angle, the judgment of the High Court, confirming the conviction and sentence imposed by the trial court, does not warrant any interference. (Para 24). Mohan Anna Chavan v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 7 SCC 561: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 193: (2008) 68 AIC 194 (SC).

Bench Strength 3. Coram : Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision : 16-5-2008]

Bodhraj v. State of J&K, (2002) 8 SCC 45; State of M.P. v. Munna Choubey, (2005) 2 SCC 710: 2005 SCC (Cri) 559; Union of India v. Devendra Nath Rai, (2006) 2 SCC 243: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 487, followed

Joseph v. State of Kerala, (2000) 5 SCC 197: 2000 SCC (Cri) 926; Damodar v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 10 SCC 328: 2000 SCC (Cri) 90, relied on [3907] — Ss. 366(1) and 354(3) — Commutation of death sentence to life imprisonment — Acquittal of a large number of the accused is no ground for not awarding death sentence to those whose conviction has been upheld (Para 17). Subash Chander v. Krishan Lal, (2001) 4 SCC 458: 2001 SCC (Cri) 735: AIR 2001 SC 1903: 2001 Cri LJ 1825.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision : 29-3-2001]

[3908] — Ss. 366(1) and 386 — Life imprisonment or death sentence — Where two views are possible the one favouring life sentence should be accepted — Where trial court awarded death sentence but High Court on general conspectus and consideration of facts, commuted the sentence to life imprisonment, for interfering with the sentence of life imprisonment further exceptional grounds should be made out — Held on facts, despite having some reservations about commutation of death sentence to life imprisonment by High Court, discretion exercised by High Court need not be interfered with — However, sentence of life imprisonment of main accused not to be commuted under any circumstances — Constitution of India, Art. 134 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The families of the deceased B and A-1 had an old enmity. One of the sons of B was murdered by A-1 and his family members, the co-accused persons. B and his sons S and PW 2 had been cited as eyewitnesses in that case. During pendency of trial A-1 and the co-accused had been released on bail. They thereupon intruded into the house of the deceased at night when B and his family members were sleeping and started indiscriminate firing on the sleeping family members. As a result B, his son S and his mother died. A-1 exhorted others to spare no family members of B and also fired shots from his pistol which hit the bone of the right-side hip and abdomen of PW 2. His sister PW 3 also received gunshot injuries. PWs 2 and 3 then hid themselves in a room. Thus they survived. When everybody belonging to the family of B fell after receiving gunshot injuries, A-1 declared that the work was over, whereafter the accused persons left the place. The trial court convicted the accused persons under Sections 302, 307, 148, 450 read with Sections 149, 120-B and Section 307 read with Sections 149 and 120-B IPC and awarded death sentence. The High Court upheld the conviction but commuted the death sentence to life imprisonment.

Held :

It is established that the accused-appellants, who were earlier involved in the murder of one of the sons of B left no stone unturned to eliminate the whole family of B including the eyewitnesses in that case. It is also established that the aforesaid accused persons attacked the deceased and the injured at the dead hour of night when they were sleeping, being incapable of defending themselves. The means adopted in execution of the evil designs speak of the mental condition of the accused persons whom the trial court found to have been involved in the commission of a crime termed by it as rarest of the rare cases. The High Court, while commuting the death sentences, appears to have completely ignored various pronouncements of the Supreme Court dealing with the yardstick to be adopted while awarding the death sentence. Merely because 8 persons, convicted by the trial court, were acquitted, by itself cannot be termed to be a justified ground for commuting the death sentence. However, as the High Court, presumably on a general conspectus and upon consideration of facts of the case, found that the accused persons should not be awarded with death sentence, it is felt that for interfering with the discretion of the Court, further exceptional grounds are required to be made out. When two views are possible about the quantum of sentence, a view which favours the grant of life in comparison with death is generally accepted for the exercise of the powers by the High Court in commuting the death sentence. Despite having some reservations about the sentence awarded vide the impugned judgment in view of the exercise of discretion in commuting the death sentence the sentence awarded to the accused persons need not be interfered with by us. (Para 17). Subash Chander v. Krishan Lal, (2001) 4 SCC 458: 2001 SCC (Cri) 735: AIR 2001 SC 1903: 2001 Cri LJ 1825.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision : 29-3-2001]

[3909] — S. 366(1) — Death sentence, upheld — Murder of all members (6) of a family at their residence at night — Circumstances against appellant-accused were motive (money), presence of appellant-accused in the house on the night of the occurrence till next morning and his absence from his own residence during the corresponding period, recovery of clothes under S. 27 of Evidence Act, 1872, fingerprints on doorsteps of the house found by fingerprint expert to have matched with those of accused, recovery of scalp hair of accused from place of occurrence, and judicial confession and extra-judicial confession made by accused — Defence pleas found to be untenable — Trial court and High Court convicted accused on the basis of these proved circumstances — Having regard to the chain of circumstances, held, no interference called for. M.A. Antony v. State of Kerala, (2009) 6 SCC 220.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-4-2009]

Mohd. Aman v. State of Rajasthan, (1997) 10 SCC 44: 1997 SCC (Cri) 777, referred to

[3910] — Ss. 366(1), 368 and 374 — Exercise of power under, to confirm death sentence — Non-application of mind — Rape and murder of a minor girl of 10 years — If a rarest of rare case — Mitigating circumstances — Court not giving any reasons for rejecting/not taking into account extra-judicial confession — Effect on awardability of death sentence

Per Ganguly, J.

The written statement which the accused gave and the court made it as an exhibit must be treated as part of his statement under Section 313 CrPC. It is true that when an extra-judicial confession is retracted by the accused, there is no inflexible rule that the court must accept the retraction. But if the court wants to reject the retraction, the court must give cogent reasons before such rejection. It does not appear that the High Court has given any reason for not accepting the retraction of the confession by the accused. The High Court dealt with the so-called extra-judicial confessions by the appellant and held that the second extra-judicial confession by the appellant before the police is hit by Section 25 of the Evidence Act. But about the retraction of his first extra-judicial confession in the written statement of the appellant, which is part of his Section 313 statement, there is no discussion in the judgment of the High Court. (Paras 52 to 54). Rameshbhai Chandubhai Rathod v. State of Gujarat, (2009) 5 SCC 740.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat[1] and A.K. Ganguly[2], JJ. [Date of decision: 27-4-2009]

Basavaraj R. Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2000) 8 SCC 740: 2001 SCC (Cri) 87; Mohd. Azad v. State of W.B., (2008) 15 SCC 449, relied on

King Emperor v. Biseswar Dey, (1921-22) 26 CWN 1010, approved

[3911] — S. 366(2) — Committing a person sentenced to death to jail custody — Not in the nature of punitive detention — Hence does not amount to double jeopardy — Constitution of India, Art. 20(2)

It was contended that in case of capital punishment the sentence awarded is only sentence of death but not sentence of death plus imprisonment and therefore if a condemned prisoner has to live in jail for long in substance it amounts to punishment which is sentence of death and imprisonment for some time and this will amount to double jeopardy which is contrary to Art. 20. Rejecting the contention

Held :

Per majority (Jagannatha Shetty, J., expressing no opinion)

A person who is sentenced to death and is kept in jail custody under a warrant under S. 366(2) is neither serving rigorous imprisonment nor simple imprisonment. In substance he is in jail so that he is kept safe and protected with the purpose that he may be available for execution of the sentence which has been awarded. The life of the condemned prisoner in jail awaiting execution of sentence must be such which is not like a prisoner suffering the sentence and it is essential that he must be kept safe. Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, (1989) 1 SCC 678: 1989 SCC (Cri) 248: AIR 1989 SC 1335.

Bench Strength 5. Coram : G.L. Oza[1], M.M. Dutt[1], K.N. Singh[1], K. Jagannatha Shetty[2] and L.M. Sharma[1], JJ. [Date of decision : 7-2-1989]

Sunil Batra v. Delhi Admn., (1978) 4 SCC 494: 1979 SCC (Cri) 155, followed

— S. 367 See also Ss. 366 to 368

[3912] — S. 367 — Murder trial — Death sentence — Exception of unsoundness of mind — Applicability — Mental condition during non-offending days — Relevance of — No medical reports on any psychological illness — Unsoundness of accused alleged by family members being attributed to accused's addiction of ganja — Effect — Accused murdering wife and five children (aged 1 to 16 years) with knife — Conviction under S. 302 and award of death sentence confirmed by High Court — Accused not taking the plea of unsoundness of mind in courts below but Supreme Court getting enquiry conducted by police after a plea raised at SLP stage — Report of enquiry and evidences of family members and other witnesses revealing that accused was addicted to ganja for which he was under treatment, due to which mental illness allegedly he killed his wife and five children

— Effect — The accused, on facts, held, is not entitled to benefit under S. 84 IPC — For availing benefit under S. 84 IPC, mental condition of accused on day of the incident, held, is relevant — State of mind on other days is relevant only to the extent of determining mental state on day of the incident along with other evidence and circumstances — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 84 and 302

At about midnight of 19-8-2005, the informant, PW 1 (brother of the appellant-accused), on being informed by PW 4 about a huge commotion in appellant's house, rushed to the spot and saw through the window, his accused brother, sitting in the room with a bloodstained knife in his hand and his clothes soiled in blood. PW 1 also saw the dead bodies of appellant-accused's wife, 4 daughters and one son lying beside him (all murdered children aged between 1 to 16 years). When PW 1 questioned the appellant about the incident, the appellant-accused threatened to kill him as well. PW 1 thereupon retreated and raised an alarm which attracted the occupants of the neighbouring houses. PW 1 locked the room from the outside to prevent the accused-appellant's escape. He also rushed to the police station accompanied by PW 3 and recorded the FIR. He then returned to the village with a police party, headed by PW 15, SI. The appellant was arrested on the spot and on interrogation a bloodstained pyjama and a knife hidden in a quilt were seized. The appellant was convicted under Section 302 IPC for the six murders and was sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge by judgment dated 24-4-2006. On an appeal and reference to the High Court, the conviction and sentence was maintained by the impugned order.

During pendency of the appeal and on direction of the Supreme Court, yet another enquiry was made to find out if the appellant had any mental disorder and had been undergoing any treatment to this effect. Consequent to the enquiry, a report was tendered by an Additional SP to the effect that no medical record which could establish that the appellant had undergone treatment for a mental or psychological problem had been found but statements of his family members and others which were to the effect that the appellant had been addicted to drugs, particularly to ganja, and had become mentally disturbed and had been under treatment, and it was on account of this mental illness that he had killed his family, had been received and were being put on record. Based on this it was pleaded that the appellant appeared to be of unsound mind and incapable of understanding the nature of his actions, and therefore, in terms of Section 84 IPC, should be absolved of any liability.

Dismissing the appeal of the accused,

Held :

The benefit of Section 84 IPC is available to a person who at the time when the act was done was incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that what he was doing was wrong or contrary to law. The implication of this provision is that the offender must be of unsound mind at the time when the act was committed and his unsoundness of mind earlier or later are relevant only to the extent that they, along with other evidence, may be circumstances in determining the mental condition of an accused on the day of incident. (Para 19)

The status report filed by Additional SP and the affidavit in response to the enquiry directed by the Supreme Court do not advance the appellant's case whatsoever. It is significant that before the trial court as well as in appeal before the High Court, no plea with regard to the appellant's mental condition had been taken and it was only in the present SLP, when, shaken by the sheer brutality of the crime, it was felt that only a person of unsound mind could commit such a horrendous crime, and it had thus been thought prudent to have the matter re-examined. (Para 20) . Jagdish v. State of M.P., (2009) 9 SCC 495: (2009) 4 APLJ 1 (SC): (2009) 82 AIC 65 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2009]

[Ed.: In a case of death sentence, the High Court under Section 367 CrPC has power to direct further inquiry to be made or additional evidence to be taken so that no stone is left unturned even if there is a bleak chance of proving the innocence of the accused or bringing on record the mitigating circumstances against death sentence or making out a case for applicability of a general exception under Chapter IV against award of death sentence. In the present appeal, the Supreme Court applied the above rationale noticeable in Section 367 CrPC in exercise of its power under Article 136 of the Constitution by directing a further enquiry to ascertain the possibility of unsoundness of mind during commission of crime. But at the same time the Supreme Court also took note of the fact that such a plea had not been taken in the High Court or the trial court and no medical reports on psychological illness were found.]

— S. 368 See also S. 376, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1176 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 368 See Ss. 229, 241, Ch. XX-A (Ss. 265-A to 265-L) and 368, 399 and 401

See also Ss. 354 and 368

See also Ss. 354(3), 366 and 368

See also Ss. 354(3) and 368

See also Ss. 354(3), 368 and 235(2)

See also Ss. 354(3), 368 and 386

See also Ss. 366 to 368

See also Ss. 366, 368 and 374

See also Ss. 366, 368, 374 and 386

See also Ss. 366, 368 and 386

See also Ss. 366(1), 368 and 374

See also Ss. 433, 433-A, 434, 413, 414, 418, 366, 368 and 371

[3913] — Ss. 368 and 413, 414 and 415 — Sentence of death and its execution are two different aspects — Sentence once confirmed not open to review by Supreme Court but delay in execution if unjustified may, on its peculiar facts and circumstances call for interference by Supreme Court

The sentence in every criminal case when confirmed by the Supreme Court is justified and, therefore, normally it is not open for review or reconsideration. However, the Court on several occasions in appropriate cases even after the imposition of sentence of death reached its finality has commuted that sentence to one of life imprisonment by exercising its extraordinary powers when the Court felt that the execution of that sentence was not justified on account of the subsequent supervening circumstances namely, the undue long delay which has elapsed since the confirmation of that sentence by the Court. This is based on the principle that sentence of death is something and the sentence of death followed by lengthy imprisonment prior to execution is another. (Para 15). Jumman Khan v. State of U.P., (1991) 1 SCC 752: 1991 SCC (Cri) 283: AIR 1991 SC 345: 1991 Cri LJ 439.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision : 30-11-1990]

Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 344: 1983 SCC (Cri) 461, relied on

[3914] — Ss. 368 and 354 — High Court must carefully analyse, assess and discuss each piece of evidence on its merits before reaching its conclusion — Where trial court awarded death sentence to 10 persons, High Court should not have recorded acquittal in a brief judgment by an indifferent process of rejecting the prosecution evidence on a uniform assumption that investigation was faulty

Care and brevity are not strange bed-fellows and both can combine in a judgment, with some beauty for a change. But the compression, in a few brief pages, of a confirmation case by a court of first appeal, involving the death sentence imposed upon 10 persons for four murders, is an act of some uncommon ingenuity which is best left alone. State of U.P. v. Jageshwar, (1983) 2 SCC 305: 1983 SCC (Cri) 427: AIR 1983 SC 349: 1983 Cri LJ 686: 1983 ALJ 281.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and V.D. Tulzapurkar, J. [Date of decision : 14-2-1983]

[3915] — S. 368 — Morally and conscientiously an accused may appear to be guilty on the basis of suspicion, but that cannot amount to legal proof — Graver the crime, greater should be the standard of proof — In case of capital sentence awarded by a court to the accused the appellate court must adopt a very cautious approach to the case. Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116: 1984 SCC (Cri) 487: AIR 1984 SC 1622: 1984 Cri LJ 1738.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : S. Murtaza Fazal Ali[1], A. Varadarajan[2] and Sabyasachi Mukharji[3], JJ. [Date of decision : 19-7-1984]

[3916] — S. 368 — Delay beyond two years in executing death sentence, held, violative of Art. 21 — Death sentence liable to be commuted to life imprisonment in appropriate cases — Constitution of India — Arts. 21, 32, 136, 226, 72 & 161 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302

The accused appellant was sentenced to death for committing dastardly murders in a planned way. He was first a 'prisoner under remand' for two years and thereafter he was kept in solitary confinement for eight years. In the present SLP and writ petition, the accused has claimed that the prolonged delay of about 10 years in executing the sentence of death has violated his right under Art. 21.

Held :

Procedure established by law does not end with the pronouncement of sentence but includes the carrying out of the sentence. Prolonged delay in execution of a sentence of death has dehumanising effect, whatever may be the cause of delay be it the time necessary for appeal and consideration of reprieve or some other cause for which the accused himself may be responsible. This dehumanising factor of prolonged delay has the constitutional implication of depriving a person of his life in an unjust, unfair and unreasonable way so as to offend Art. 21. It is open to the court of appeal or a court exercising writ jurisdiction, in an appropriate proceeding to take note of the circumstance when it is brought to its notice and give relief where necessary.

Having regard to the periods, considered by the Supreme Court in various cases, to be sufficient to justify interference with the sentence of death and making all reasonable allowances for the time necessary for appeal and consideration of reprieve, it must be held that delay exceeding two years in the execution of a sentence of death is sufficient to entitle the person under sentence of death to invoke Art. 21 and demand quashing of the sentence of death.

In the present case in place of the sentence of death, the sentence of imprisonment for life must be substituted. T.V. Vatheeswaran v. State of T.N., (1983) 2 SCC 68: 1983 SCC (Cri) 342: AIR 1983 SC 361 (2): 1983 Cri LJ 481: (1983) 2 MLJ 39: 1983 MLJ (Cri) 466.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : O. Chinnappa Reddy and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision : 16-2-1983]

Overruled in Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, (1989) 1 SCC 678 [See its order at (1988) 4 SCC 574]; Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 2 SCC 344: 1983 SCC (Cri) 461

See also (1991) 1 SCC 752

[3917] — S. 368 — Death sentence whether proper — Bride burning not relating to dowry death — Though accused-husband poured kerosene and lighted matchstick resulting in injuries to his wife but immediately thereafter he made attempts to save her, took her to his relations and to a doctor and also informed her parents indicating that he tried to save her — Deceased's daughter though sleeping along with the deceased remained unhurt — Circumstances thus show that accused had lost his balance due to certain happening — In the circumstances held, High Court erred in enhancing sentence of life imprisonment awarded by trial court to sentence of death — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-B and 302. Jagdish v. State of Rajasthan, 1989 Supp (1) SCC 20: 1989 SCC (Cri) 126.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : G.L. Oza, B.C. Ray and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision : 13-1-1988]

[3918] — S. 368 — Sentence — Death sentence when not proper — Murder of mother and her 12 year old son and infliction of serious injury on daughter — Accused aged 20 years, having illicit relationship with the deceased mother, suddenly spurned by her causing disappointment — Accused's mental agitation further fuelled by a film showing murder of four women seen by him at the night of the occurrence — Accused stopping his murderous assaults immediately on being commanded by a Police Inspector and coming out of the room without trying to escape — On facts, held, death sentence imposed by trial court and High Court should be converted to imprisonment for life — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

The mental agitation of the accused was further fuelled by the movie, showing murder after murder. The vicious effect of films picturising violence in detail on impressionable minds has been subject of serious concern for some time now, but unfortunately no effective step has been taken so far to curb the growing tendency of a section of the film industry to cash in on human weakness. And when this upsets a young man, already vulnerably disturbed, the society cannot be completely absolved from sharing the responsibility of the resulting tragedy. Moorthy v. State of T.N., (1988) 3 SCC 207: 1988 SCC (Cri) 629: AIR 1988 SC 1245: 1988 BBCJ 23.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : A.P. Sen and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision : 9-5-1988]

[Appeal from 1987 Mad LW (Cri) 170]

[3919] — S. 368 — Accused's relation with his family members, held, not a relevant factor to be considered while confirming death sentence — High Court must consider the matter with greatest concern and solicitude

While confirming the sentence of death imposed on the appellant by the Sessions Court, the High Court even took into consideration the appellant's relations with the members of his family. After mentioning that he had beaten his mother and brother and that his wife was living separately from him, the High Court concluded:

"In our opinion, such a person could neither be an asset to his wife and children nor entitled to live in the society."

Unfaithful husbands, unchaste wives and unruly children are not for that reason to be sentenced to death if they commit murders unconnected with the state of their equation with their family and friends. The passing of the sentence of death must elicit the greatest concern and solicitude of the judge because, that is one sentence which cannot be recalled. Shankarlal Gyarasilal Dixit v. State of Maharashtra, (1981) 2 SCC 35: 1981 SCC (Cri) 315: AIR 1981 SC 765: 1981 Cri LJ 325: 1981 MLJ (Cri) 320.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and A.P. Sen and Baharul Islam, JJ. [Date of decision : 17-12-1980]

[3920] — S. 368 — Sentence — Two shots fired at the deceased from two different guns — No clear evidence that fatal injury was caused as a result of the shot fired by the accused — Held, High Court justified in reducing death sentence to life imprisonment. Nidhan Singh v. State of Punjab, 1980 Supp SCC 211: 1980 SCC (Cri) 902: AIR 1981 SC 376: 1980 Cri LJ 1421.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A.D. Koshal, JJ. [Date of decision : 26-8-1980]

— S. 368(c) See also Ss. 386, 374(2) and 368(c)

[3921] — S. 368(c) — Conviction and death sentence — Acquittal by High Court in appeal — Propriety — Theft of properties of a post office (which included inland letters, postcards, revenue stamps etc. valuing Rs 850.55) and murder of

In-charge of that post office — Since accused was employee of same post office, he being found in company of deceased on the date of incident was not an incriminating circumstance — PW 3 stating that on the date of incident she saw the accused coming out of post office with a yellow bag (which was recovered from shop of one P and found containing theft properties) — Testimony of PW 3 not reliable in view of material contradiction as to date and time of incident between the statements of PW 3 and IO — Circumstance of abscondence, also not established — Recovery of bloodstained towel and bloodstained shirt of accused at the instance of accused, not supporting the prosecution case — Non-examination of P, on facts, proved fatal — Acquittal of accused, held, justified — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302, 381 and 201 (Paras 4 and 5). State of T.N. v. Sundar, (2003) 12 SCC 695: AIR 2004 SC 1216: 2004 Cri LJ 913.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-12-2003]

— S. 369 See also S. 377, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1178 et seq. in Vol. 2

[3922] — Ss. 369 and 2(e) — Confirmation by two Judges under S. 377 — Confirmation of death sentence by the only Judicial Commissioner then functioning in the Union Territory not improper — Goa, Daman and Diu (Judicial Commissioner's Court) Regulation, 1963 will not prevail over the Code — In any case Regulation 8(1) permits JC to confirm death sentence — Referral jurisdiction under S. 377 is akin to appeal and revision — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, Ss. 377 & 4(1)(i). Joseph Peter v. State of Goa, Daman and Diu, (1977) 3 SCC 280: 1977 SCC (Cri) 486: AIR 1977 SC 1812: 1977 Cri LJ 1449.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : V.R. Krishna Iyer and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 4-5-1977]

— S. 370 See Ss. 386 & 370

— S. 371 See also Ss. 433, 433-A, 434, 413, 414, 418, 366, 368 and 371

[3923] — S. 371 — Duty to communicate orders of confirmation of conviction and sentence to lower courts immediately

A sentence should not be delayed at least after it is confirmed by the High Court but when this happens on account of the indifference of the administrative side of the High Court in the mechanical process of communication to the trial Court it speaks badly of the management side of the court system. More business-like procedures in such matters should be evolved so that the rule of law need not suffer a new shock on account of messy management of judicial business rectifiable by a little more promptitude and attention. Muktinarain Jha v. State of Bihar, (1978) 1 SCC 497: 1978 SCC (Cri) 131: AIR 1978 SC 770: 1978 Cri LJ 763.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : V.R. Krishna Iyer and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 23-1-1978]

— Ch. XXIX (Ss. 372 to 394) See S. 300 and Ch. XXIX (Ss. 372 to 394)

See also Ss. 437, 439, 300 and Chs. XXIX (Ss. 372 to 394) and XXX (Ss. 395 to 405)

— S. 372 See also S. 404, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, p. 1189 in Vol. 2

[3924] — S. 372 — Criminal appeal — Charge wrongfully quashed by High Court — Even so matter should not be restored where in the fact situation owing to delay it would be difficult to collect the evidence to sustain the charge — Iron and Steel (Control) Order, 1956. State of A.P. v. P. Jagannadhan, (1982) 3 SCC 365: 1983 SCC (Cri) 47.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and O. Chinnappa Reddy, J. [Date of decision : 9-11-1982]

[3925] — S. 372 — Refusal of leave to appeal by High Court when not justified — On question of fact requiring full examination by High Court refusal of the leave without assigning any reason not justified. State of Maharashtra v. Vithal Rao Pritirao Chawan, (1981) 4 SCC 129: 1981 SCC (Cri) 807: AIR 1982 SC 1215.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : D.A. Desai and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision : 20-7-1981]

[3926] — Ss. 372 and 456 — Appeal against order awarding sentence of fine and directing under S. 456 to vacate the premises, held, competent

The appeal filed before the Session Court was also competent. Although against an award of sentence of fine only a revision and not an appeal would lie but since in this case along with the sentence of fine an order purporting to be under S. 456, CrPC for vacating the premises was made, the order was appealable. Kanwal Sood v. Nawal Kishore, (1983) 3 SCC 25: 1983 SCC (Cri) 553: AIR 1983 SC 159: 1983 ALJ 814: 1983 Cri LJ 173.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : D.A. Desai and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision : 26-11-1982]

[3927] — Ss. 372 and 377 — Inadequacy of sentence — Who may appeal and before which forum — Criminal matters — Inadequate sentence — Who may appeal — Reduction of sentence of rape convict by High Court — Appeal by National Commission for Women (NCW) contending that reasons given by High

Court for reducing the sentence not acceptable — State had not filed appeal — Held, said appeal not maintainable under inherent powers of Supreme Court — No appeal lies from a judgment of a criminal court except as provided by CrPC or by any other law — S. 372 proviso CrPC confers a right only on victim and also does not envisage appeal against inadequate sentence — Appeal challenging quantum of sentence maintainable only under S. 377 CrPC — S. 377 CrPC does not authorise appeal to Supreme Court — National Commission for Women Act, 1990, S. 10 — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 375 and 376 — Constitution of India, Art. 136 (Paras 8 and 10). National Commission For Women v. State of Delhi, (2010) 12 SCC 599.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and C.K. Prasad, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-7-2010]

Pritam Singh v. State, AIR 1950 SC 169: (1950) 51 Cri LJ 1270; P.S.R. Sadhananthamv. Arunachalam, (1980) 3 SCC 141: 1980 SCC (Cri) 649, followed

[3928] — Ss. 372 to 382 — Statement regarding what transpired at the hearing in lower court — Whether any other contentions had been raised before High Court — Supreme Court in appeal would not go into that question — It would decide the appeal having regard to the judgment of the High Court — Proper remedy in that respect would be to file a review before the High Court — CPC, 1908, Ss. 96 and 100

Though it had been submitted that various other contentions had also been raised before the High Court, but the Supreme Court would not go into the said contentions inasmuch as assuming the same to be correct, the remedy of the appellants would lie in filing appropriate application for review before the High Court. Incidentally, even in the special leave petition no substantial question of law in this behalf has been raised nor has any affidavit been affirmed by the advocate who had appeared before the High Court or by any officer of the appellant who was present in court that certain other submissions were made before the High Court which were not taken into consideration. As has been observed by the Supreme Court in State of Maharashtra v. R.S. Nayak, the principle is well settled that statements of fact as to what transpired at the hearing, recorded in the judgment of the court, are conclusive of the facts so stated and no one can contradict such statements by affidavit or other evidence. (Para 61). Bhavnagar University v. Palitana Sugar Mill (P) Ltd., (2003) 2 SCC 111: AIR 2003 SC 511: (2003) 2 Guj LR 1154.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik, C.J. and K.G. Balakrishnan and S.B. Sinha, JJ. [Date of decision : 3-12-2002]

State of Maharashtra v. Ramdas Shrinivas Nayak, (1982) 2 SCC 463: 1982 SCC (Cri) 478, relied on

[3929] — Ss. 372 to 382 — Statement of fact regarding proceedings in court such as admission or concession made by a party, recorded in the judgment of a court — Held, is conclusive and not open to be contradicted in appeal denying making of such statement — Only the court recording the statement itself competent to rectify the error if approached without delay — However, plea that the statement was made under wrong appreciation of law may in rare case be allowed by appellate court in the interest of justice — Constitution of India — Arts. 133, 134 and 136 — CPC, 1908, Ss. 96, 97, 99, 100-101, 103, 104 and 107

Statements of fact as to what transpired at the hearing, recorded in the judgment of the court, are conclusive of the facts so stated and no one can contradict such statements by affidavit or other evidence. If a party thinks that the happenings in court have been wrongly recorded in a judgment, it is incumbent upon the party, while the matter is still fresh in the minds of the judges, to call the attention of the very judges who have made the record to the fact that the statement made with regard to his conduct was a statement that had been made in error. That is the only way to have the record corrected. If no such step is taken, the matter must necessarily end there. Of course, a party may resile and an appellate court may permit him in rare and appropriate cases to resile from a concession on the ground that the concession was made on a wrong appreciation of the law and had led to gross injustice; but, he may not call in question the very fact of making the concession as recorded in the judgment. State of Maharashtra v. Ramdas Shrinivas Nayak, (1982) 2 SCC 463: 1982 SCC (Cri) 478: AIR 1982 SC 1249: 1982 Cri LJ 1581.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : O. Chinnappa Reddy and A.P. Sen, JJ. [Date of decision : 28-7-1982]

[3930] — Ss. 372(2) and 386 — Manner of recording of acquittal by High Court was not proper — Absence of appeal by State — Absence of appeal by State — Though Supreme Court not approving the manner of recording of acquittal of some of the co-accused by the High Court and where no appeal filed by State against such acquittal, Supreme Court not inclined to interfere. Darshan v. State of Haryana, (2002) 9 SCC 755: AIR 2002 SC 2344.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and R.C. Lahoti and Ashok Bhan, JJ. [Date of decision : 19-9-2001]

[3931] — Ss. 372 proviso and 377 — No retrospective effect of S. 372 proviso — Proviso inserted by Act 5 of 2009 w.e.f. 31-12-2009 —

Proviso not applicable to this case, as it was inserted long after present incident (Para 8). National Commission For Women v. State of Delhi, (2010) 12 SCC 599.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and C.K. Prasad, JJ. [Date of decision: 23-7-2010]

Pritam Singh v. State, AIR 1950 SC 169: (1950) 51 Cri LJ 1270; P.S.R. Sadhanantham v. Arunachalam, (1980) 3 SCC 141: 1980 SCC (Cri) 649, followed

— S. 373 See Ss. 354(2), 373 and 386

See also Ss. 372 to 382

See also Ss. 389(1) and 482 & 373

— S. 374 See also Ss. 410, 411 & 411-A, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, pp. 1189 et seq. in Vol. 2

— S. 374 See Ss. 313, 228, 374 and 386

See also Ss. 313, 374, 386 and 401

See also Ss. 354(1)(b) and 374

See also Ss. 354(3), 374 and 384

See also Ss. 357 and 421 & 431 and 374 and 389 & 387

See also Ss. 366, 368 and 374

See also Ss. 366, 368, 374 and 386

See also Ss. 366(1), 368 and 374

See also Ss. 372 to 382

See also Ss. 378, 374 and 386

See also Ss. 383 and 374

See also Ss. 383, 374 and 386

See also Ss. 384, 374, 382 and 383

See also Ss. 385, 374, 378 and 386

See also Ss. 386 and 374

See also Ss. 386, 374, 303, 304 and 162

See also Ss. 386 and 374 & 378

See also Ss. 386, 374 and 385(2)

See also Ss. 386, 378 and 374

See also Ss. 386(b)(ii) and 374

See also Ss. 389 and 374

See also Ss. 397, 401, 374, 377 and 386

See also Ss. 401 and 374

See also Ss. 401, 374 and 386

See also Ss. 401(3) and 374

See also Ss. 482 and 374 & 378

[3932] — S. 374 — Right of appeal under — Scope of

Per Mukharji, Oza and Natarajan, JJ.

Article 21 as recently interpreted safeguards one right of appeal on facts and law. The trial by High Court in the present case cannot be deemed to be one under its 'extraordinary original criminal jurisdiction' which is confined to cases decided under Letters Patent jurisdiction. Therefore a right of appeal as of right is not available to the appellant under S. 374, CrPC. A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372: AIR 1988 SC 1531.

Bench Strength 7. Coram : Sabyasachi Mukharji[1], Ranganath Misra[2], G.L. Oza[1&3], B.C. Ray[4], S. Natarajan[1], M.N. Venkatachaliah[5] and S. Ranganathan[6], JJ. [Date of decision : 29-4-1988]

[3933] — S. 374 — Right to appeal against conviction — Nature of — Right to appeal — From a judgment of conviction as under S. 374 CrPC — Is a fundamental right — It is absolute — Neither can be interfered with or impaired nor can it be subjected to any condition — Constitution of India — Art. 21

Article 21 of the Constitution read with Section 374 CrPC confers a right of appeal. Right of appeal from a judgment of conviction affecting the liberty of a person keeping in view the expansive definition of Article 21 as also the international covenants operating in the field, is also a fundamental right. Such a right is an absolute one. Right of appeal, thus, can neither be interfered with or impaired, nor can it be subjected to any condition. (Paras 12, 55 and 66). Dilip S. Dahanukar v. Kotak Mahindra Co. Ltd., (2007) 6 SCC 528: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 209: (2007) 137 Comp Cas 1: (2007) 2 KLT 488: 2007 Cri LJ 2417: (2007) 55 AIC 244 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and Dalveer Bhandari, JJ. [Date of decision : 10-4-2007]

[3934] — S. 374 — Acquittal from criminal conviction — Effect — Nature of — Date effective from — Date of appellate acquittal or date of conviction by lower court — Held (per curiam), is the date of conviction by lower court, thereby wiping out conviction as recorded by lower court and sentence passed thereon — Said effect is a legal fiction which cannot be extended beyond the purpose for which it is created — Hence to hold that a candidate for election, though convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for two years or more, was not disqualified under S. 8(3), Representation of the People Act, 1951 on the date of scrutiny of the nomination, consequent upon his acquittal on a much later date, would be an illegitimate extension of the purpose of the legal fiction

That an appellate judgment in a criminal case, exonerating the accused-appellant, has the effect of wiping out the conviction as recorded by the trial court and the sentence passed thereon — is a legal fiction. While pressing into service a legal fiction it should not be forgotten that legal fictions are created only for some definite purpose and the fiction is to be limited to the purpose for which it was created and should not be extended beyond that legitimate field. A legal fiction presupposes the existence of the state of facts which may not exist and then works out the consequences which flow from that state of facts. Such consequences have got to be worked out only to their logical extent having due regard to the purpose for which the legal fiction has been created. Stretching the consequences beyond what logically flows amounts to an illegitimate extension of the purpose of the legal fiction. Fictionally, an appellate acquittal wipes out the trial court conviction; yet, to hold on the strength of such legal fiction that a candidate though convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for two years or more was not disqualified on the date of scrutiny of the nomination, consequent upon his acquittal on a much later date, would be an illegitimate extension of the purpose of the legal fiction. However in the present case the issue is not so much as to the applicability of the legal fiction; the issue concerns more the power of the Designated Election Judge to take note of subsequent event and apply it to an event which had happened much before the commencement of that proceeding in which the subsequent event is brought to the notice of the court. An election petition is not a continuation of election proceedings. (Para 39). K. Prabhakaran v. P. Jayarajan, (2005) 1 SCC 754: 2005 SCC (Cri) 451: AIR 2005 SC 688: (2005) 1 KLT 510.

Bench Strength 5. Coram : R.C. Lahoti, C.J.[1] and Shivaraj V. Patil[1], K.G. Balakrishnan[2], B.N. Srikrishna[1] and G.P. Mathur[1], JJ. [Date of decision : 11-1-2005]

[3935] — Ss. 374 and 313 — Appeal against conviction — Proper disposal of — Kidnapping and rape — Appreciation of evidence — Guilt established — Conviction restored — Prosecutrix kidnapped from lawful custody of her brother, by A-1 (respondent-accused) and A-2 — She was taken to another place under threat and kept in a rented room for many days, where A-1 committed forcible sexual intercourse upon her — Whenever she asked A-1 for return to her village, she was threatened and her mouth was gagged — Held, evidence of prosecutrix was reliable and rightly acted upon by trial court — Except bald statement of A-1 under S. 313 CrPC, that he was falsely implicated due to enmity, nothing brought on record that may probabilise that prosecutrix had motive to falsely implicate him — Delay in registration of FIR, also reasonably explained — Judgment of High Court not only cryptic and perfunctory but it also did not take into consideration crucial evidence on record — A-1, convicted of serious crime of kidnapping and rape, acquitted on flimsy grounds — There was no application of mind to evidence of prosecutrix at all — High Court not at all justified in taking a different view or conclusion from trial court — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 376, 363, 366 and 368 (Paras 29 to 38). State of U.P. v. Chhotey Lal, (2011) 2 SCC 550.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Aftab Alam and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-1-2011]

[3936] — Ss. 374 and 378 — Appeal — Nature of — Held, is a continuation of original proceedings — Maintainability of writ petition — Question as to — Determination of, in appeal under Art. 136 — Held, said question could be decided by Supreme Court under Art. 136 as appeal is a continuation of original proceedings (Para 13). Moran M. Baselios Marthoma Mathews II v. State of Kerala, (2007) 6 SCC 517: (2007) 3 KLT 349.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision : 4-4-2007]

[3937] — Ss. 374, 378 and 386 — Due weight to be given to appreciation of evidence by trial court — Appellate court should give due weight to appreciation of evidence made by trial court, as it has advantage of observing demeanour of witnesses and general tenor of the evidence

If the court before whom the witness gives evidence had the opportunity to form the opinion about the general tenor of the evidence given by the witness and to observe his demeanour, the appellate court which had not this benefit will have to attach due weight to the appreciation of evidence by the trial court and unless the reasons are weighty and formidable, it would not be proper for the appellate court to reject the evidence on the ground of variations or infirmities in the matter of trivial details. (Paras 16, 74 and 75). State of U.P. v. Krishna Master, (2010) 12 SCC 324: AIR 2010 SC 3071: 2010 Cri LJ 3889: (2010) 94 AIC 257 (SC): (2010) 5 All LJ 423.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-8-2010]

[3938] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — When should appellate court interfere with the judgment and order of conviction — What should be the approach of the appellate court — Trial court lightly brushing aside the infirmities, improbabilities, contradictions and omissions in the prosecution case and convicting the accused on the basis of uncorroborated testimony of the sole interested witness and High Court instead of objectively scrutinizing the evidence as a first court of appeal, finding absence of plausible defence and explanation by accused, simply endorsing the conviction and sentence recorded by the trial court — In view of this erroneous approach which resulted in miscarriage of justice Supreme Court's interference called for — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

In this case the substantial portion of the judgment of the trial court is contained in the narration of the prosecution story and referring to the prosecution witnesses. There was hardly any evaluation, analysis or scrutiny of evidence in a proper perspective objectively. Apart from material contradictions and omissions in the statements of witnesses, there were serious infirmities and improbabilities of the prosecution case giving rise to grave doubts as to the involvement of the appellant in the commission of the offence. With regard to serious infirmities pointed out by the defence raising doubt about the prosecution case, the Sessions Judge simply stated that he did not agree with such contentions. The trial court was not right and justified in lightly brushing aside the infirmities and improbabilities brought out from the prosecution case, that too when the entire prosecution case rested on the sole eyewitness, who was interested being the son of the deceased; more so in the absence of any corroboration of his evidence by other independent evidence on material aspects of the prosecution case. However, the High Court has simply endorsed the conviction and sentence passed by the trial court without objectively and satisfactorily scrutinizing and examining the evidence as a first court of appeal except narrating the prosecution case and referring briefly to the evidence of a few prosecution witnesses. The High Court instead of giving benefit of doubt to the appellant, placed the burden on the defence and found that there was absence of plausible defence and explanation by the appellant. The case of the prosecution should rest on its strength, not on the absence of explanation or plausible defence by the accused. (Paras 7, 6 and 8)

Ordinarily the Supreme Court does not disturb or upset the concurrent findings recorded by the trial court as affirmed by the High Court, entering into the domain of appreciation of evidence. But in a case like this where there was no proper and objective appreciation of evidence by the trial court and the High Court, as a first court of appeal, fails in its duty of reappreciating the evidence and reviewing the evidence objectively and simply endorses the conclusion arrived at by the trial court resulting in patent miscarriage of justice, not only the Supreme Court interferes but it becomes its duty to do so to prevent miscarriage of justice. (Para 5)

In the result, the impugned judgment affirming the judgment of the trial court is set aside. The appellant is acquitted giving benefit of doubt. He be set at liberty forthwith if he is not required in any other case. (Para 9). Toran Singh v. State of M.P., (2002) 6 SCC 494: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1377: AIR 2002 SC 2807.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Doraiswamy Raju and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision : 1-8-2002]

[3939] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — When appellate court's interference called for — Findings recorded by trial court and accepted by High Court, suffering from manifest error and improper and misappreciation of evidence on record — Held, Supreme Court's interference with conviction recorded by courts below called for — Appellant-accused entitled to benefit of doubt (Para 28). Arun Bhanudas Pawar v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 11 SCC 232: 2008 Cri LJ 1798: (2008) 63 AIC 129 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P.P. Naolekar and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-1-2008]

[3940] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Proper mode of disposal — Held, where two views of a story appear to be probable, the one that was contended by the accused should be accepted — Trial court as well as the High Court, after weighing the probability of both, erred in convicting the appellant opining that the appellant having not been able to prove his case, the prosecution case should be accepted

Both the trial court as also the High Court proceeded to compare the probabilities of two views. It is now beyond any cavil that where two views of a story appear to be probable, the one that was contended by the accused should be accepted. Hence appellant entitled to be acquitted. (Para 27). Vikramjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 12 SCC 306: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 732: 2007 Cri LJ 1000: (2007) 49 AIC 89 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision : 24-11-2006]

Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116: 1984 SCC (Cri) 487; K. Gopal Reddy v. State of A.P., (1979) 1 SCC 355: 1979 SCC (Cri) 305; Tota Singh v. State of Punjab, (1987) 2 SCC 529: 1987 SCC (Cri) 381; Divakar Neelkantha Hegde v. State of Karnataka, (1996) 10 SCC 236: 1996 SCC (Cri) 1242; State of Orissa v. Babaji Charan Mohanty, (2003) 10 SCC 57: 2004 SCC (Cri) 785; Hem Raj v. State of Haryana, (2005) 10 SCC 614: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1646, relied on [3941] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Judgment of trial court acquitting the accused perverse, erroneous and based on wrong assumptions — On facts held, High Court justified in interfering with trial court's judgment by reversing the same and convicting the accused — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 148 and 302 read with S. 149. Narayan Singh v. State of M.P., (1985) 4 SCC 26: 1985 SCC (Cri) 460: AIR 1985 SC 1678.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision : 19-7-1985]

[3942] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Method of disposal — Reappreciation of the evidence by the appellate court itself, held, essential — It cannot proceed to dispose of the appeal upon appraisal of evidence by the trial court alone, particularly when the appeal has been already admitted and placed for final hearing — Disposal of criminal appeal in contravention to the said procedure, if permitted, held, would amount to negation of valuable right of appeal of an accused — Since the High Court disposed of the appeal without reappraising the evidence independently, matter remitted to it for disposal afresh — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 326 and 325 r/w S. 34

The High Court did not consider any evidence and disposed of the appeal by simply saying that after reappreciation of the evidence and rescrutiny of the records, it did not find any error apparent in the finding of the trial court. (Para 4)

It is well settled that in a criminal appeal, a duty is enjoined upon the appellate court to reappraise the evidence itself and it cannot proceed to dispose of the appeal upon appraisal of evidence by the trial court alone, especially when the appeal has been already admitted and placed for final hearing. Upholding such a procedure would amount to negation of valuable right of appeal of an accused, which cannot be permitted under law. Hence, the impugned order passed by the High Court is fit to be set aside. (Para 4). Rama v. State of Rajasthan, (2002) 4 SCC 571: AIR 2002 SC 1814.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.B. Shah and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision : 5-4-2002]

[3943] — Ss. 374, 386 and 389 — Appeal — Non-application of mind — Casual disposal of appeal — In appeal by A-1 to A-3 against conviction under Ss. 326/149, without adverting to contentions of appellants held that since S. 149 was invoked acquitted accused would be equally and vicariously liable though noting that State had not filed appeal against such "illegal acquittal" — Held, High Court had not applied its mind to the various contentions and disposed of the appeal in a casual manner — Matter remitted for fresh disposal — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 326/149 (Paras 3 to 6). Huchappa v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 14 SCC 497.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-4-2008]

[3944] — Ss. 374, 378 and 386 — Appellate jurisdiction — High Court does not have any advisory jurisdiction

The High Court does not have authorisation by and under the existing legal system to exercise any advisory jurisdiction. The Government has its agencies to advise and in the event the Government feels it expedient to obtain the advice from such agency or agencies, it is for the Government to decide and not for the High Court to suggest. The State is otherwise capable of managing its own affairs in a manner conducive to the people at large and the State itself has got its own law officer/officers to advise in its legal affairs: the State Government in the contextual facts did not seek any opinion from the High Court as to the methodology of dealing with the matter. The methodology of filing an appeal lay with the State and the High Court has no authority or jurisdiction to issue such a directive. Direction to file appeal not only stands as an excessive user of jurisdiction but indicates exercise of advisory jurisdiction which the High Court does not possess and is unknown to law. (Paras 11 and 14)

In this case, obviously the High Court was swayed by the nature of incident, namely, the deaths of about 20 people by reason of consumption of illicit country liquor. But it is not for the High Court but for the Government to decide as to whether there is any social evil. In the event of a positive reply it is the Government's responsibility to proceed with the matter further and it is not for the High Court to advise. The High Court has not only exceeded its jurisdiction but has transgressed all limits of jurisdiction. This is neither fair nor reasonable and thus cannot be sustained. (Paras 15 and 17). Dwarka Dass v. State of Haryana, (2003) 1 SCC 204: 2003 SCC (Cri) 264: AIR 2003 SC 185.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : U.C. Banerjee and Y.K. Sabharwal, JJ. [Date of decision : 13-11-2002]

Mohinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1985) 1 SCC 342: 1985 SCC (Cri) 87, relied on [3945] — S. 374 — Appeal against conviction — Manner of disposal of — Thorough appraisal of evidence — Necessity of — Reversal of conviction without appraisal of evidence — Impropriety of — Sessions Court imposing sentence of seven years' RI — High Court, without any discussion of evidence whatsoever modifying conviction to one under S. 354 and reducing sentence to period already undergone and fine of Rs 5000 — Held, for the serious and heinous crime of rape, judgment of Sessions Court could not have been reversed without adverting to the evidence at all, by general observations made in one paragraph of the impugned judgment — Matter remanded to High Court for decision afresh — Directed that matter be placed before a Judge other than the Judge who delivered the impugned judgment — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 375 and 376. State of U.P. v. Munni Lal, (2005) 11 SCC 574.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Y.K. Sabharwal and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision : 15-4-2005]

[3946] — S. 374 — Appeal against conviction — Reappreciation of entire evidence — Necessity of — Trial court convicted six accused and sentenced them to life imprisonment — High Court upheld conviction of all accused excepting A-3 without discussing entire evidence — State has not preferred any appeal against acquittal of A-3 — Appeal excepting re A-3 remitted to High Court for deciding the same afresh after closely examining entire evidence — Penal Code, 1860, S. 302 r/w S. 149. Shivanagoud Chanegoud Patil v. State of Karnataka, (2010) 13 SCC 537.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dalveer Bhandari and A.K. Patnaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 14-1-2010]

[3947] — S. 374 — High Court in appeal bound to consider all the circumstances against the accused before confirming the conviction by trial court — Failure to do so meriting reconsideration by the High Court — Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, S. 410. Jagan Nath v. State, (1976) 1 SCC 583: 1976 SCC (Cri) 101: AIR 1976 SC 1132: 1976 Cri LJ 847.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.K. Mathew and Y.V. Chandrachud, JJ. [Date of decision : 21-10-1975]

[3948] — Ss. 374, 378 and 386 — Proper approach of High Court in appeal against conviction — When reversal of trial court's order of conviction by High Court should be interfered with by Supreme Court in second appeal — Constitution of India — Art. 136

The High Court in appeal against the Sessions Court's order of conviction should record its finding in regard to the question of reliability and credibility of witnesses, and, after weighing the probabilities, and taking into account the circumstantial evidence, should record a finding of fact. If the High Court performs this function, which it is normally expected to do, the Supreme Court under Art. 136 would not examine afresh on merits the finding of guilt recorded by the Sessions Court. But where the High Court resorts to unfounded surmises and conjectures, when no such defence was taken and no such plea was ever advanced on behalf of the accused, the Supreme Court will have to reappraise the evidence. In the present case the High Court set aside the unexceptionable finding of the Special Judge under a serious misconception, on an altogether untenable reasoning. Therefore, the High Court's order of acquittal has to be set aside. State of U.P. v. G.K. Ghosh, (1984) 1 SCC 254: 1984 SCC (Cri) 46: AIR 1984 SC 1453.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, A. Varadarajan and M.P. Thakkar, JJ. [Date of decision : 21-9-1983]

[3949] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Duty of High Court under — Need if any, to consider/advert to all points raised in memorandum of appeal — Held, while deciding appeal under S. 374, High Court must go into all details of oral and documentary evidence adduced in the case, and conclusions should be drawn on basis thereof — High Court should discuss oral and documentary evidence on record, to indicate that points argued were considered — Usual practice that in memorandum of appeal/revision, several grounds are taken/pleaded, but at time of arguments, advocate confines himself to few points which he considers best and presses only those points to be considered by court, and consideration of only such points by the court is not improper — Herein, advocate for appellant and others emphasised three points before High Court — High Court justified in considering those points and not adverting to all points raised in memorandum of appeal — No grievance of appellant-accused that certain points were urged but not considered by High Court — Herein, impugned judgment indicates that conviction of appellant-accused was confirmed by High Court after careful analysis, assessment and discussion of relevant piece of evidence on record — Hence, conviction of appellant, held, justified (Paras 12 and 15). Ram Bharosey v. State of U.P., (2010) 1 SCC 722.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: B. Sudershan Reddy and J.M. Panchal, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-11-2009]

[3950] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Improper disposal — High Court disposing of the remitted matter, again without discussing evidence in detail, in spite of specific directions of Supreme Court that High Court could not sideline the defence version and the same had to be considered to see whether presumption under S. 113-B, Evidence Act, 1872 had been rebutted by appellant — Impugned judgment set aside and matter remitted for expeditious disposal, preferably within six months — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304-B — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 113-B (Paras 2 to 4). Gurram Chakravarthy (2) v. State of A.P., (2008) 16 SCC 799: (2008) 72 AIC 106 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 28-11-2008]

[3951] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — When can High Court interfere with trial court's judgment recording conviction

The High Court has nowhere stated that the analysis of evidence and the conclusions arrived at by the trial court were erroneous. Without recording such a finding, the High Court was not justified in drawing different conclusions without indicating any reason to justify the same. Such a course is impermissible. Even if a different view is possible to be drawn, it should be specifically held that the view taken by the trial court was not supportable by evidence. It would not be possible for the High Court to act on surmises and conjectures and disturb the findings recorded by the trial court. (Para 19)

Above being the position, the judgment of the High Court is set aside and the judgment of the trial court is restored. (Para 20). Basudeo Yadav v. Surendra Yadav, (2008) 15 SCC 124: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 744: AIR 2009 SC 546.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 25-8-2008]

Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 2 SCC 793: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1033; Ramesh Babulal Doshi v. State of Gujarat, (1996) 9 SCC 225: 1996 SCC (Cri) 972; Jaswant Singh v. State of Haryana, (2000) 4 SCC 484: 2000 SCC (Cri) 991; Raj Kishore Jha v. State of Bihar, (2003) 11 SCC 519: 2004 SCC (Cri) 212; State of Punjab v. Karnail Singh, (2003) 11 SCC 271: 2004 SCC (Cri) 135; State of Punjab v. Phola Singh, (2003) 11 SCC 58: 2004 SCC (Cri) 276; Suchand Pal v. Phani Pal, (2003) 11 SCC 527: 2004 SCC (Cri) 220; Sachchey Lal Tiwari v. State of U.P., (2004) 11 SCC 410: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 105; S. Sudershan Reddy v. State of A.P., (2006) 10 SCC 163: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 503; Israr v. State of U.P., (2005) 9 SCC 616: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1260; Munivel v. State of T.N., (2006) 9 SCC 394: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 581; State of U.P. v. Satish, (2005) 3 SCC 114: 2005 SCC (Cri) 642, relied on [3952] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — High Court by impugned judgment acquitting respondent-accused by a practically unreasoned order and without indicating any reasons as to why conclusions of trial court convicting the accused were unsustainable — Whatever reasons were indicated were not only sketchy but also based on surmises and conjectures — Impugned order set aside and matter remitted to High Court for consideration afresh — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302, 450, 324 & 148 r/w S. 149 (Paras 10 to 13). State of Punjab v. Mohinder Singh, (2009) 17 SCC 751: (2009) 1 APLJ 171: (2009) 80 AIC 182 .

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-2-2009]

[3953] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal before High Court against conviction — Reversal of trial court's conviction order by High Court on the basis of surmises, conjecture, minor and insignificant inconsistencies and rejection of testimony of truthful eyewitnesses as being not independent or impartial — Held, manifestly unreasonable and unsustainable — Conviction recorded by trial court restored — Constitution of India — Arts. 136 and 137. State of U.P. v. Brahma Das, (1986) 4 SCC 93: 1986 SCC (Cri) 368: AIR 1986 SC 1769: 1986 Cri LJ 1732.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.P. Thakkar and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision : 19-8-1986]

[3954] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal before High Court against conviction — High Court has full powers in an appeal to review the entire evidence and come to its own conclusion unless the matter depended on the demeanour of the witness — On facts held, reversal of order of acquittal by High Court justified. Jinnat Mia v. State of Assam, (1998) 9 SCC 319: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1017: AIR 1998 SC 533.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.M. Punchhi and M. Srinivasan, JJ. [Date of decision : 12-12-1997]

Tota Singh v. State of Punjab, (1987) 2 SCC 529: 1987 SCC (Cri) 381; Sanwat Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1961 SC 715: (1961) 1 Cri LJ 766; Betal Singh v. State of M.P., (1996) 8 SCC 205: 1996 SCC (Cri) 571; Rajendra Mahton v. State of Bihar, (1998) 9 SCC 315, relied on [3955] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal before High Court against conviction — High Court failing to view the evidence in its proper perspective and setting unrealistic standards to evaluate testimony of eyewitnesses — Held, High Court adopted an unsustainable approach which vitiated its reasoning and conclusion — Hence High Court's reversal of conviction and sentence recorded by trial court open to interference by Supreme Court in appeal against acquittal under Art. 136 — Constitution of India — Art. 136. State of U.P. v. Ranjha Ram, (1986) 4 SCC 99: 1986 SCC (Cri) 374: AIR 1986 SC 1959: 1986 Cri LJ 1906.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.P. Thakkar and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision : 19-8-1986]

[3956] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal before High Court against conviction — When two views are possible, one which is favourable to accused should be accepted. State of Haryana v. Inder Singh, (2002) 9 SCC 537.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : R.P. Sethi and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 29-1-2002]

[3957] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal before High Court against conviction — High Court erroneously sidestepping all the relevant and reliable circumstances established by the prosecution and interfering with the well-considered conclusion of trial court by acquitting all the accused —

Held, thereby the judicial system became mauled and faith of the public in the efficacy of the judicial function would have been considerably impaired (Para 46). State of Maharashtra v. Damu, (2000) 6 SCC 269: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1088: AIR 2000 SC 1691: 2000 Cri LJ 2301.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision : 1-5-2000]

[3958] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction by High Court — Trial court's judgment perverse and based mainly on surmises and conjectures without any attempt to appreciate the evidence in a proper and scientific manner — No view other than that taken by High Court possible — Conviction and sentences imposed by High Court in circumstances upheld — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304/34. Keisam Kumar Singh v. State of Manipur, (1985) 3 SCC 676: 1985 SCC (Cri) 446: AIR 1985 SC 1664.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision : 26-7-1985]

[3959] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Improper exercise of power by High Court, censured by Supreme Court — On facts, respondent-accused, a Senior Engineer (Civil), convicted under Ss. 13(1)(d)/13(2) and 7, PC Act, 1988 — High Court had only to find whether respondent was guilty or not of the offence alleged against him — Evidence that a full-fledged departmental enquiry was conducted against respondent, wherein he was found guilty — However, High Court acquitted respondent and directed his reinstatement as seniormost Civil Engineer with all usual retiral monetary benefits inclusive of restoration of seniority, etc. with immediate retrospective effect — Sustainability — Held, this was certainly not the jurisdiction of High Court — Under what powers High Court acted, not known — Step taken by High Court in straightaway writing off findings in departmental enquiry without any justification, shocking — This aberration on part of High Court speaks of its wholly incorrect approach — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 13(1)(d)/13(2) and 7 (Para 36). State v. G. Prem Raj, (2010) 1 SCC 398.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 19-11-2009]

[3960] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Matters to be considered — High Court acquitting accused persons — Propriety of — The alleged delay in lodging FIR satisfactorily explained that informant first got his two injured sons admitted to hospital and soon thereafter lodged FIR — High Court not considering relevance of concession made by advocate of accused as regards death of wife of informant — High Court also discarding evidence of three injured eyewitnesses which trial court found flawless and credible — Held, High Court should not have on mere surmises and conjectures interfered with judgment of trial court — Hence, conviction restored

On 11-2-1993 M (PW 1) accompanied by his sons, MJ and B was returning to his dhani in the fields after closing the shop. When they were on the kacha path leading to the house of accused L, they were confronted by L armed with a DBBL gun, and other accused persons heavily armed with various weapons. On seeing M and his sons, accused persons fired gunshots resulting in the death of MJ and leaving another gravely injured. On hearing the noise MJ's mother D with her other two sons came. She also received gunshot injuries. Other accused persons attacked M and his other two sons with various weapons gravely injuring them. One SI recorded the statement of informant at 00.05 a.m. on 12-2-1993 and on its basis the formal FIR was registered at the police station 30 minutes later. Trial court found all accused persons guilty and convicted them. The High Court primarily directed acquittal on the ground that there was delay in lodging the FIR and there is doubt about the weapon used.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The first aspect which has been highlighted by the High Court was purported delay in lodging the FIR. The explanation given to explain the so-called delay was that two sons of M were seriously injured and the first reaction was to provide the medical facilities to them and accordingly he took them and got them admitted to the hospital and immediately thereafter the FIR was registered. Therefore, there is absolutely no delay in lodging the FIR. (Paras 13 and 14)

Shots fired on D were clearly from the weapon described by the prosecution as wads and pellets were found in the wounds. There was clear concession by learned counsel for the accused that in the light of the report given by Dr. G there could be no doubt that D had died of gunshot wounds as wads and pellets have been recovered from her body. The High Court unfortunately did not consider the relevance of this concession. The High Court observed that the concession had been made rightly, but it further said that there was doubt about the weapon used on MJ. Even if that be so, there was no scope for directing acquittal of the accused persons in respect of murder of D. (Para 17)

Coming to the question of testimony of the three injured eyewitnesses the trial court noticed that their statements were flawless and nothing has come out in their cross-examination on the basis of which any doubt could be created about their veracity. The High Court discarded the credible evidence of the eyewitnesses on mere surmises and conjectures. Though there should not be interference with the judgment of acquittal where the view taken is a possible view, but where conclusions are without any foundation, there is need to interfere with the judgment of the appellate court. In the instant case the analysis done by the trial court was appropriate and the High Court should not have on mere surmises and conjectures interfered with the judgment of the trial court and directed the acquittal. In the result, the appeals are allowed. (Paras 18 and 21). State of Punjab v. Atma Singh, (2009) 15 SCC 45.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-5-2009]

[3961] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Proper mode of disposal — High Court's judgment of acquittal unreasoned and having deficiencies — When should matter be remitted to High Court for fresh decision on merits instead of restoring trial court's judgment of conviction — Murder — Two of the eyewitnesses fully corroborated prosecution case but High Court observed that there were material discrepancies in eyewitness' version — Evidence clearly established that one of the acquitted accused caused farsa injury on head of deceased but that fact was not noticed by High Court — Neither eyewitness' version nor medical evidence discussed by High Court — Incident as per prosecution, occurred at 9 a.m. and FIR lodged at 9.30 a.m. at police station at a distance of 6 km — But according to High Court time of the incident was changed by prosecution — Held, High Court's judgment was unsustainable in view of these deficiencies — Normally, Supreme Court would have restored trial court's judgment of conviction but in view of the fact that respondent-accused had not appeared in spite of notice, matter remitted to High Court for detailed analysis of relevant evidence and fresh decision on merits. State of M.P. v. Ramesh, (2009) 11 SCC 330: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1349: (2009) 75 AIC 26 (SC): (2009) 1 APLJ 87 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 3-2-2009]

[3962] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal under — Proper approach for disposal — High Court, as final court of fact required to reappraise evidence — High Court rejected appeal observing that nothing could be pointed out to show as to why it should reappreciate the evidence — Held, observation is erroneous — High Court has not disposed of appeal in manner postulated under law — No reference made to evidence produced — No discussion as to process of reasoning leading to dismissal of appeal — Matter remitted for decision afresh (Paras 6 and 7). Amarjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2010) 12 SCC 106.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and C.K. Prasad, JJ. [Date of decision: 29-4-2010]

Rama v. State of Rajasthan, (2002) 4 SCC 571: 2002 SCC (Cri) 829, followed

[3963] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Proper mode of disposal — In appeal against conviction, High Court acquitting respondent-accused basing its conclusions on surmises and conjectures and erroneously discarding presence of witnesses — Impugned judgment set aside and matter remitted to High Court for disposal afresh — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 r/w Ss. 148 and 149 (Paras 1, 12 and 17). Rama Kant Verma v. State of U.P., (2008) 17 SCC 257: AIR 2009 SC 1093: (2009) 74 AIC 238 (SC): (2009) 2 All LJ 122.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Aftab Alam, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2008]

State of A.P. v. Kanda Gopaludu, (2005) 13 SCC 116: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 121; B.K. Channappa v. State of Karnataka, (2006) 12 SCC 57: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 374, considered

[3964] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Wrong acquittal by High Court in appeal — Effect

In this case the acquittal of the accused recorded by the High Court was clearly contrary to the evidence on record and on the basis of misappreciation of eyewitnesses' account.

Held :

The criminal justice system must be alive to the expectation of the people. Like the principle that no innocent man should be punished it is equally applicable that no guilty man should be allowed to go unpunished. Wrong acquittal of the accused will send a wrong signal to the society. Wrong acquittal has its chain reactions, the law-breakers would continue to break the law with impunity, people then would lose confidence in the criminal justice system and would tend to settle their score on the street by exercising muscle power and if such situation is allowed to happen, woe would be the rule of law. (Para 15). Nallabothu Venkaiah v. State of A.P., (2002) 7 SCC 117: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1615: AIR 2002 SC 2945.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision : 20-8-2002]

[3965] — Ss. 374 & 386 and 366 — Non-appearance of accused's counsel before High Court in appeal against conviction under S. 302 IPC — High Court disposing of the appeal relying on assistance of counsel for the State — Permissibility — Held, even though High Court considered the matter elaborately, but that is no substitute for judgment rendered after hearing the counsel for the accused especially in case where accused is convicted under S. 302 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment — Matter remitted to High Court for fresh disposal expeditiously after appointing an amicus curiae — Request for bail also directed to be considered on merits. Mangat Singh v. State of Punjab, (2005) 11 SCC 185.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P. Venkatarama Reddi and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision : 10-1-2005]

[3966] — S. 374 — Appeal from conviction — Where appellant's advocate had died during pendency of appeal before High Court and High Court disposed of matter without hearing appeal, held, intimation should have been given to appellant to make alternative arrangements — High Court erred in disposing of matter without hearing — Case remanded to High Court for rehearing (Para 3). Tehzibul Husain v. State of U.P., (2000) 3 SCC 688: 2000 SCC (Cri) 739.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.T. Nanavati and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision : 7-1-2000]

[3967] — Ss. 374, 384, 386, 401 and 397 — Appeal/Revision against conviction — Dismissal of, due to non-deposit of fine imposed by trial court — Propriety — Trial court convicting appellant in two cases under S. 138, NI Act and directing him to undergo one month's simple imprisonment and pay fine of certain amounts in each case — Appellate court dismissing the appeals against conviction due to failure of appellant to deposit the amount of fine — Revision petitions against the said order also dismissed due to non-deposit of fine — Held, the appellate court and the revisional court were not right in dismissing the appeals and revisions in the event of non-deposit of fine — The said courts should have disposed of the case on merits — Matter remitted to appellate court for disposal on merits in accordance with law after giving opportunity of hearing to the parties — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 (Paras 4 and 5). Vijay D. Salvi v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 5 SCC 741: (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 13: (2007) 104 Cut LT 511.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : B.N. Agrawal and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision : 16-5-2007]

[3968] — S. 374 — Non-appearance of accused's counsel — Effect — Relief — Accused charged under Ss. 302/34 and 323/34, IPC but convicted by Sessions Court under Ss. 304 Part II/34 and 323/34 — Appeal to High Court filed by accused — But in absence of appearance of the accused's counsel, High Court proceeding with the case with the assistance of State's counsel — Although High Court finding that the accused had intention to cause death of the deceased, but in absence of any appeal being filed by the State against the acquittal under S. 302, it maintaining the conviction and sentence imposed by the Sessions Court — Held, non-appearance of the counsel during the hearing of the appeal influenced the decision on the merits as certain aspects of the case could not be covered — Hence, in the special circumstances of this exceptional case, High Court's judgment set aside and the case remitted to it for fresh consideration and disposal of the appeal . Shaukin Singh v. State of U.P., (1981) 3 SCC 128: 1981 SCC (Cri) 662: AIR 1981 SC 1698: 1981 ALJ 966.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : R.S. Pathak and Baharul Islam, JJ. [Date of decision : 30-3-1981]

[3969] — Ss. 374 and 468 — Appellate court interfering with conviction on the ground of bar of limitation — Necessity to record findings on merit — Appellant convicted by Judicial Magistrate for offences under Ss. 406, 420 and 471 IPC — On appeal, Additional Sessions Judge acquitting appellant on the ground that prosecution was barred by limitation — High Court on further appeal, reversing the decision and restoring the order of the Judicial Magistrate and also recording conviction under S. 467 IPC — Held, the Additional Sessions Judge while setting aside the conviction on the ground of limitation did not consider the findings recorded by the Judicial Magistrate on merits — The High Court also, while restoring the conviction, did not consider the matter on merits — Thus the appellant was convicted without being afforded the right to assail on merits the findings of the Judicial Magistrate — Hence conviction set aside and matter remitted to Additional Sessions Judge for consideration on merits. Balwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Supp (1) SCC 511: 1994 SCC (Cri) 591.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.C. Agrawal and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision : 3-5-1993]

[3970] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — High Court's power to dismiss the appeal summarily — Held, must be exercised only in a case where there is no arguable question of fact or law — High Court simply affirming the findings of trial court without recording reasons — High Court observing that the trial court had gone into all details of oral and documentary evidence adduced in the case and it finding that conclusions drawn on the basis thereof were absolutely correct and hence there was no need to discuss oral and documentary evidence on record which may only result in repetition — Held, this approach was perverse — Matter remanded to the High Court with a direction to scrutinise the evidence closely and decide the issues in detail (Paras 3 and 4). Vijayendra Kumar v. State of Bihar, (2005) 9 SCC 252.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : B.P. Singh and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision : 24-11-2004]

[3971] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — High Court allowing the appeal but recording reasons therefor, later — Impermissibility — Held, the same was a very unsatisfactory way of disposing of the case — Moreover, thus the impugned judgment appears to be antedated because date of the judgment giving reasons is mentioned as 31-7-2003, while in para 7 of the judgment it is mentioned that the reasons will be given after 31-7-2003 (Paras 10 to 14). State of Tripura v. Ram Bir Singh, (2007) 11 SCC 442: (2007) 55 AIC 70 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision : 8-5-2007]

[3972] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Appellate court should not interfere with the findings of lower court without indicating reasons — Incumbent upon the appellate court, if it takes a contrary view, to analyse the evidence and to record its own conclusions — High Court's view that the prosecutrix being of easy virtue the accused were entitled to acquittal, indefensible — Matter remitted to High Court for rehearing (Para 13). State of U.P. v. Pappu, (2005) 3 SCC 594: 2005 SCC (Cri) 780: AIR 2005 SC 1248: 2005 Cri LJ 331.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Arijit Pasayat and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision : 1-12-2004]

[3973] — Ss. 374, 378 and 386 — Appeal — Proper mode of disposal of — Principles reiterated — Held, role of appellate court in criminal appeal is extremely important — All facts are open to it and it is expected to go deep into evidence and more particularly, the record as also proved documents — In instant case, there was no serious effort to delve deep into record of case and evidence of witnesses — Hence, need to examine evidence afresh along with the proved documents

The courts below also failed to appreciate the evidence in its proper perspective and to delve deeper into record of the case and evidence of witnesses. The role of the appellate court in a criminal appeal is extremely important. All the questions of facts are open before the appellate court. However, since High Court failed in its duty, it was necessary to examine the evidence afresh along with the proved documents, which ordinarily would not have been done. (Paras 30 and 31). Arun Kumar Sharma v. State of Bihar, (2010) 1 SCC 108.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 5-10-2009]

Arun Kumar Sharma v. State of Bihar, (2002) 3 PLJR 174, reversed

[3974] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Proper mode of disposal — Trial court convicted appellant under Ss. 307, 326 and 324 IPC and sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for 7 years and 5 years respectively — High Court disposed of the appeal by a brief order — Sentence reduced from 7 years to 6 years, for being his first offence — Material evidence against appellant not taken into account — No reason given for maintaining conviction — Held, High Court while hearing appeal is the last court of facts — Order of High Court set aside and appellant's appeal before High Court is restored to its file for a fresh hearing and decision in accordance with law — In case appeal is not disposed of by end of year, it will be open to appellant to make a prayer for bail before High Court — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 307, 326 and 324. Ram Ratan v. State of Rajasthan, (2010) 13 SCC 509.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Aftab Alam and R.M. Lodha, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-10-2010]

[3975] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal in High Court against conviction — Disposal of, by cryptic order — Propriety — Where 5 persons had been convicted of an offence under S. 302 IPC and awarded life imprisonment, it was expected that the High Court should have dealt with the case more thoroughly — Merely stating that the eyewitnesses had convincingly given depositions against the appellants for an offence committed in broad daylight, held, was not a proper manner to discharge the judicial obligations to discuss evidence and arguments. Shanabhai Gokalbhai Baria v. State of Gujarat, (2002) 10 SCC 123.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and R.C. Lahoti and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision : 18-7-2001]

[3976] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — High court by a cryptic judgment acquitted accused persons — Judgment held unsustainable — Matter remanded for elaborate and comprehensive discussion — Reasoned order — Necessity of Appeals allowed and matter remanded to the High Court. State of M.P. v. Chandu, (2010) 13 SCC 718.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and C.K. Prasad, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-12-2010]

[3977] — Ss. 374, 378, 384 and 386 — Appeal — High Court not making points for determination nor making critical assessment or appraisal of evidence — Case remitted to High Court for fresh disposal in accordance with law. Chhedi Rana v. State of Bihar, 1990 Supp SCC 88: 1990 SCC (Cri) 624.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : A.P. Sen, L.M. Sharma and M.N. Venkatachaliah, JJ. [Date of decision : 12-10-1987]

[3978] — Ss. 374 and 366 — Ex parte disposal on merits without hearing the accused-appellant or his counsel bad — Court can appoint counsel at State cost — Case remanded — Matter can be disposed of on merits only after hearing the appellant or his counsel. Ram Naresh Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1987 SC 1500: 1986 Pat LJR (SC) 52: 1987 Cri LJ 1856.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.P. Thakkar and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision : 21-7-1986]

Overruled in (1996) 4 SCC 720

See also (1999) 8 SCC 644 and (1998) 5 SCC 123; (1994) 4 SCC 664; (1996) 4 SCC 720

But see also AIR 1962 SC 1208

Held Overruled in Madan Lal Kapoor v. Rajiv Thapar, (2007) 7 SCC 623

[3979] — S. 374 — Appeal against conviction — Proper mode of disposal — Ex parte disposal of appeal with assistance of State counsel — Propriety — None appearing for appellant — Notice issued to appellant for engaging another counsel — High Court itself not sure as to service of notice on appellant — Hence, held, appeal should not have been taken up ex parte — Matter remitted for fresh consideration on merits — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, Ss. 36-B and 18. Sukhdev Singh v. State of Haryana, (2007) 15 SCC 238.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-6-2007]

[3980] — S. 374 — Appeal against conviction — Proper mode of disposal — Reasons for decision — Clarity of decision, necessity of, restated — Dismissal of the criminal appeal by a non-reasoned order — Order of High Court set aside, case remanded back — Casual manner in which appeal dismissed, deprecated — CPC, 1908, Or. 20 Rr. 4(2) and 5 — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 376(2)(g), 506 and 34

The appellants stood convicted for offence punishable under Sections 447, 376(2)(g) and 506 read with Section 34 of the Penal Code, 1860. Contention of the appellants was that the High Court's judgment was practically non-reasoned.

Remanding the case to the High Court,

Held :

A bare perusal of the High Court's impugned judgment shows that the same is non-reasoned and no basis or reasons have been indicated by the High Court and there is not even analysis of the evidence. Various infirmities pointed out by the accused to throw doubt on the authenticity of the prosecution evidence are not even referred to. (Paras 8 and 10). Prasad v. State of Karnataka, (2009) 3 SCC 174.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 9-2-2009]

Breen v. Amalgamated Engg. Union, (1971) 2 QB 175: (1971) 2 WLR 742: (1971) 1 All ER 1148 (CA); Alexander Machinery (Dudley) Ltd. v. Crabtree, 1974 ICR 120 (NIRC); State of Punjab v. Bhag Singh, (2004) 1 SCC 547, relied on [3981] — S. 374 — Appeal from conviction — Proper mode of disposal — Need for reasoned/speaking order — Murder trial — High Court reversing conviction of respondent-accused by trial court under S. 302 r/w S. 34 IPC — Sustainability — Held, High Court practically disposed of criminal appeal without analysing the evidence — No reason was indicated as to why detailed analysis done by trial court deserved to be upset — Conclusions were factually incorrect — Hence, matter remitted to High Court for disposal afresh in accordance with law (Paras 18 and 20). G. Vivekanandan v. Sriramulu, (2009) 11 SCC 281: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1326.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-2-2009]

Applied in State v. Sriramulu, (2009) 11 SCC 491 at p. 492

[3982] — Ss. 374, 378 and 386 — Unreasoned order of High Court — Dismissal of appeal based on — Matter remanded — Nine accused armed with swords, iron rods, hockey sticks, etc. alleged to have broken the glass windows of complainant's hotel and severely assaulted the employees therein, resulting in death of one — Trial court convicting Accused 1 to 4 under Ss. 302, 307, 324, 323, 427, 453, 506(II), S. 147 r/w S. 149 and S. 148 IPC — They were, however, acquitted of charges under S. 120-B IPC — High Court dismissing the appeal filed thereagainst by a cryptic and practically non-reasoned order by simply referring to the conclusion of trial court to come to a conclusion that the same cannot be termed to be unreasonable or perverse without discussing as to why it was so — Appeal filed by appellant Union also related to the acquittal of Accused 1 to 4 of the charges relating to S. 120-B IPC but no finding was recorded so far as they were concerned — Impugned order set aside and matter remitted to High Court for reconsideration — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 307, 324, 323, 427, 453, 506(II), S. 147 r/w S. 149 and S. 148 (Paras 3 and 9 to 17). Union of India v. Bali Ramu Pawar, (2008) 15 SCC 793: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1220: AIR 2009 SC 135.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-10-2008]

[3983] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Acquittal by cryptic, non-reasoned order — Impermissibility — On facts, respondents convicted by trial court for causing death and in respect of other allied offences — Convictions primarily based on evidence of PWs 2 and 8 — High Court directing acquittal of respondents — Sustainability — Acquittal by a cryptic and practically non-reasoned order — Impermissibility of — Held, if High Court intends to differ from conclusions of trial court, it has to indicate reasons therefor — Merely stating that evidence of witness is not believable would not suffice — Herein, High Court had discussed, in major parts of its judgment, the factual scenario as projected by the parties — Thereafter, by abrupt conclusions, PW 2's evidence was discarded — This certainly was not the proper way of disposing of an appeal involving accusations relating to death of five persons — On that limited ground, High Court's judgment set aside, with directions to it for reconsidering the matter afresh by dealing with various points highlighted by prosecution and responses of accused persons — No opinion expressed on merits — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 307, 147 to 149 and 353 (Paras 9 to 11 and 13). State of Orissa v. Sikhar Jena, (2008) 15 SCC 187: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 775: AIR 2009 SC 1039: (2009) 74 AIC 90 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 980.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-12-2008]

[3984] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Reasoned order/Speaking order necessity — High Court by impugned judgment without attempting to analyse evidence of witnesses upholding judgment of trial court convicting A-1, A-2 and A-3 under S. 394, S. 302 r/w S. 34 and S. 307 r/w S. 34, by a practically unreasoned order — Matter remitted to High Court for disposal afresh (Paras 2, 4 and 5). Sudheer Singh v. State of A.P., (2008) 17 SCC 64: AIR 2009 SC 784: (2009) 2 ECrN 550 (SC).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, C.K. Thakker and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-10-2008]

[3985] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Reversing order of conviction in appeal — Propriety of — Proper mode of disposal — Matter remitted to High Court for fresh consideration — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 323 and 34

Respondent-accused persons were found guilty and had been convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for life and to pay fine by the Sessions Judge. However, the co-accused, was acquitted by the Sessions Judge. A Division Bench of the High Court acquitted the respondents.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The High Court has not analysed the evidence in detail. It has come to certain abrupt conclusions about the prosecution version being not credible. Since the High Court was upsetting a judgment of the trial court which had been rendered after analysing the evidence, the casual manner in which the appeal was disposed of allowing the appeal filed by the respondent-accused persons was certainly not the proper course to be adopted. Therefore, without expressing any opinion on merit, the judgment is set aside and the matter remitted to the High Court for fresh consideration. (Paras 3 and 4). State of H.P. v. Naresh Kumar, (2009) 14 SCC 195.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 22-4-2009]

[3986] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Dismissal without reason — Unsustainability — High Court dismissed the criminal appeal under S. 27 of the PC Act without discussing the merits of the case though in its 14 page judgment it only referred to evidence and arguments to conclude that there was no ground to interfere with conviction of the appellant under Ss. 7, 13(1)(d) and (2) — Matter therefore remanded to High Court for fresh disposal — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Ss. 27, 7, 13(1)(d) and (2)

It was alleged that the appellant while working as a Junior Assistant in the office of the Commissioner, Endowments received illegal gratification after making a demand from PW 1. By the impugned order, the Division Bench of the High Court dismissed a criminal appeal against conviction for offences punishable under Sections 7, 13(1)(d) read with Section 13(2) of the PC Act.

Allowing the appeal partly,

Held :

The High Court has not dealt with the criminal appeal in an appropriate way. The only conclusion arrived at by the High Court after referring to the evidence and arguments is that there is no ground to interfere with the conviction and sentence imposed by the court below. Out of 14 pages of the judgment as appearing in the paper book except the above conclusion there is no discussion about the merits of the case. The impugned judgment is, therefore, set aside and remitted back for a fresh consideration in accordance with law. (Para 6). S. Raghu Ramaiah v. State of A.P., (2009) 1 SCC 70.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-11-2008]

[3987] — Ss. 374 and 378 — Appeal — Proper mode of disposal — Contradictory findings of guilt in respect of A-1 in order of trial court — High Court disposing of appeal without considering the same — Unsustainability — Matter remanded for decision afresh in respect of guilt of A-1. Thanga Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2008) 14 SCC 698.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 26-11-2008]

[3988] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Acquittal if justified — Findings of High Court based on no evidence — Respondent-accused personally known to victims — Dying declarations and evidence of injured witnesses identifying respondents as accused — Trial court convicting respondents for offence committed under S. 396 IPC — High Court in appeal acquitting accused — Propriety — Held, High Court had failed to correctly analyse the evidence on record — Certain findings of its judgment were based on no evidence — High Court further ignored the dying declarations recorded by Magistrate — Also ignored the consistent and well-corroborated evidence of injured witnesses — Unless there were compelling reasons, held, High Court ought not to have set aside the judgment of a trial court — Setting aside of a well-reasoned judgment of trial court by High Court was an error — High Court's judgment of acquittal set aside as an exceptional case and trial court's judgment of conviction restored — Bail bonds of respondents cancelled — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 9 and 32

Certain findings in the impugned judgment of the High Court are based on no evidence. All the witnesses have categorically stated that the accused persons committed dacoity and killed two and injured two others. There was adequate light in which they had recognised these accused persons in the night who were otherwise known to them. On careful consideration of the entire evidence on record, the following conclusions are inescapable:

1. The impugned judgment of the High Court is based on total misreading of the evidence of the injured eyewitnesses.

2. The High Court has gravely erred in totally ignoring the dying declarations, particularly when the dying declarations were recorded by the Magistrate.

3. The High Court erred in discarding the evidence of the injured eyewitnesses whose statement is consistent and corroborated by other evidence on record. (Paras 22, 27 and 31)

The High Court erroneously set aside a well-reasoned judgment of the trial court which is based on correct evaluation of evidence of the injured eyewitnesses and other witnesses and dying declarations on record. (Para 28)

The impugned judgment of the High Court is contrary to well-settled legal principles which have been crystallised by a series of decisions of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court on an earlier occasion has clearly observed that unless there are compelling reasons the High Court should not set aside the judgment of the trial court and must always keep in view that the trial court had the advantage of seeing the demeanour of the witnesses and, therefore, the conclusion of the trial court should not be set aside in the light-hearted manner. (Paras 32 and 34)

Ordinarily the Supreme Court would have been very reluctant to interfere with the judgment of acquittal but in this case for very substantial and compelling reasons the Court is constrained to set aside the impugned judgment of the High Court and restore the judgment of the trial court because the High Court totally misread the entire evidence on record. (Paras 35 and 36). State of U.P. v. Sukhpal Singh, (2009) 4 SCC 385.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dalveer Bhandari and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-1-2009]

Ghurey Lal v. State of U.P., (2008) 10 SCC 450: (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 60, followed

Har Pal Singh v. State of U.P., (2000) All LJ 2226: 2000 Cri LJ 4552, reversed

[3989] — S. 374 — Appeal against conviction — Conviction by trial court upheld — High Court reversing order of conviction of trial court disbelieving otherwise consistent and reliable witnesses on ground of trivial discrepancies — High Court's approach artificial and based on speculations, conjectures and surmises — High Court committing serious error of law in not considering common object of the accused persons — Held, High Court's judgment perverse and must be set aside — Conviction under Ss. 302/149, Penal Code and sentence of life imprisonment ordered by trial court upheld — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 149 — Constitution of India — Art. 136. State of Gujarat v. Naginbhai Dhulabhai Patel, (1983) 3 SCC 316: 1983 SCC (Cri) 590: AIR 1983 SC 839: 1983 Cri LJ 1112: (1983) 2 Mah LJ 1189.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, A. Varadarajan and M.P. Thakkar, JJ. [Date of decision : 6-5-1983]

[3990] — S. 374 — Appeal against conviction — Ground of acquittal of some accused persons raised therein — Effect — Acquittal of some accused persons on the ground of benefit of doubt — Effect of, on the remaining accused persons in the case — Held, the said ground ipso facto could not in any manner affect the prosecution case against the remaining accused persons, particularly when the evidence against them is found to be credible

Merely because benefit of doubt has been given in relation to some of the accused persons, the same ipso facto cannot in any manner affect the prosecution case against the appellants especially when the evidence against them has been found to be credible. (Para 8)

The complicity of two accused persons who were armed with guns having been doubted by the High Court itself, they have already been acquitted which cannot in any manner affect the prosecution case so far as the appellants are concerned against whom the witnesses have consistently deposed and their evidence has been found to be credible. (Para 13). Komal v. State of U.P., (2002) 7 SCC 82: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1600: AIR 2002 SC 3057.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : U.C. Banerjee and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision : 23-8-2002]

[3991] — S. 374 — Case related to murder and causing of grievous injuries — Contention of appellant that when co-accused were acquitted, there was no reason for High Court to uphold his conviction — Held, High Court had indicated reasons as to why appellant-accused stood on a different footing from acquitted co-accused and how accusations against him were fully established — Hence, no infirmity in High Court's view to warrant interference — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 307, 326, 325, 323, 148 and 149 — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Paras 2, 8, 14 and 15). State of Punjab v. Sukhchain Singh, (2008) 16 SCC 629: AIR 2009 SC 1542: (2009) 2 ECrN 51 (SC).

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, C.K. Thakker and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-11-2008]

[3992] — Ss. 374, 384 and 386 — Criminal appeal — That High Court should not dismiss the appeal in limine, especially where grave offence such as murder is involved reiterated — High Court directed to dispose of the appeal on merits. Arun Ram Chandra Swant v. State of Maharashtra, 1989 Supp (2) SCC 410.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : O. Chinnappa Reddy and K.N. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 30-3-1987]

[3993] — Ss. 374, 386 and 401 — Appeal before High Court against conviction — Dismissal without examining merits — Propriety — Appeal dismissed only on ground that criminal revision petition filed by informant had been dismissed and the revision and the appeal related to the same judgment — Case of the appellants not examined independently on merits — Held, merely because revision petition filed by informant was dismissed, that could not have been a ground for not discussing merits of the appeal filed by appellants — Revision petition may have been without merits but that would not make the appeal meritless — Matter sent back to High Court for fresh consideration on merits. Kalu Ram v. State of Delhi, (2006) 5 SCC 674: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 48: AIR 2006 SC 2460: 2006 Cri LJ 3284.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Arijit Pasayat and Altamas Kabir, JJ. [Date of decision : 15-6-2006]

[3994] — S. 374 — Appeal against conviction — High Court's practice of dismissing the appeal in limine deprecated — Reasoned order commended. Samir Kumar Das v. State of W.B., 1989 Supp (1) SCC 23: 1989 SCC (Cri) 125.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : A.P. Sen and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision : 25-1-1988]

[3995] — S. 374 — Intervention in appeal — Permissibility — Locus standi — Capital sentence awarded by lower courts to mother of a suckling child — National Commission for Women seeking permission for intervention to save such woman from the gallows — Held, under the Code of Criminal Procedure, the National Commission for Women or any other organisation does not have locus standi to intervene — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Panchhi v. State of U.P., (1998) 7 SCC 177: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1561: AIR 1998 SC 2726.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : M.M. Punchhi, C.J. and K.T. Thomas and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision : 19-8-1998]

[3996] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal before High Court against conviction under S. 302, IPC — Murder arising out of dispute between two factions in the village over possession of land — High Court while settling the land dispute summarily setting aside the conviction without considering the evidence on record — Held, improper — Case remanded . Jai Singh v. Sarwan Singh, (1984) 1 SCC 165: 1984 SCC (Cri) 42: AIR 1983 SC 1326.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and E.S. Venkataramiah, J. [Date of decision : 14-11-1983]

[3997] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal before High Court against conviction under S. 302 IPC — High Court is dutybound to examine the evidence on record and arrive at its own conclusion — That having not been done, case remitted to High Court for rehearing and redisposal

When the accused prefers an appeal against his conviction and sentence the appellate court is dutybound to consider the evidence-on-record and examine the question of reliability of those witnesses on which the conviction is based. The High Court while deciding the appeal filed by the accused, convicted of offence under Section 302 IPC, has to examine all the relevant and material circumstances before upholding conviction. In this case the High Court failed to exercise its jurisdiction vested in law in not discussing the evidence and not coming to its own conclusion. Thus the judgment cannot be held to be one in accordance with law. It is, therefore, appropriate to remit the matter to the High Court with the direction that the appeal be reheard and redisposed of in accordance with law by giving opportunity of hearing to the party concerned. Since the appeal is an old one, the High Court is requested to dispose of the same within 3 months from the date of receipt of this order. (Para 1). Badri v. State of Rajasthan, (2000) 10 SCC 246.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision : 30-9-1999]

[3998] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction under Ss. 302 and 307 Indian Penal Code — Appreciation of evidence of High Court in convicting the appellant not to be interfered with by Supreme Court in appeal in absence of any flaw in reasoning or approach of the High Court — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 307 — Constitution of India, Art. 134. Veluswami v. State of T.N., 1987 Supp SCC 598: 1988 SCC (Cri) 130.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : A.P. Sen and V. Balakrishna Eradi, JJ. [Date of decision : 25-2-1987]

[3999] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Multiple murders — Conviction justified — Appellants along with other accused alleged to have murdered B and M by inflicting axe-blows, set Mu on fire resulting in the death, attempted to murder two others and also caused injuries to children — PWs 3, 8 and one A who were also eyewitnesses supporting the prosecution case and their evidence found credible — Trial court convicting the appellants under Ss. 302 and 307 IPC and imposing death sentence while other accused were convicted under S. 326 IPC — High Court in appeal opining that only the appellants were responsible for death of deceased and attempt to murder, while participation of other accused was not established — It however, reducing the sentence of death to RI for life — High Court by reason of the impugned judgment opined that a free fight between the parties had taken place and examining the case on the basis of the actual role played by each of the accused — Existence of any common intention, on facts, ruled out — No case made out that injuries were inflicted by the appellants in their self-defence — Hence, injuries suffered by some of them insignificant — Held, three persons had lost their lives and the manner in which the offence was committed was gruesome — Those who came to save them were also assaulted and even children were not spared — Hence, appellants cannot be absolved of charges of murder — However, since State had not preferred any appeal against acquittal of other accused, Supreme Court restraining itself from expressing any opinion thereon — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 (Paras 3, 4 and 17 to 21). Motilal v. State of M.P., (2007) 14 SCC 453: 2008 Cri LJ 722: (2007) 60 AIC 49 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision : 3-10-2007]

[4000] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Murder — FIR lodged promptly and special report also sent to Ilaqa Magistrate promptly — Trial court's conclusion of conviction based on ocular testimony of eyewitnesses which was corroborated by medical evidence — High Court proceeding to test correctness of expert opinion regarding the injuries sustained by deceased and in the process substituting its own opinion — High Court also disbelieving the testimony of the eyewitnesses on unsustainable grounds — Held, High Court's approach not justified — Conviction and sentence recorded by trial court upheld — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302/34 — Arms Act, 1959, Ss. 25, 30

According to the prosecution, two brothers were murdered by the accused-respondents as their father had appeared as a witness against the respondents in a case in which one of the respondents and his companions had been convicted for the offence of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment. The existence of the motive stood established. On appreciation of evidence, the trial court found that it was admitted case of the parties that the occurrence had taken place at about 5 p.m., of which the FIR was lodged at the police station located at a distance of 7 km from the place of occurrence at about 8 p.m. The special report was received by the Ilaqa Magistrate on the same night at 11 p.m. The findings arrived at by the trial court were based upon the ocular testimony of the eyewitnesses which was supported by the medical evidence. But the High Court found that the oral evidence of the two eyewitnesses was not consistent with the medical evidence which was sufficient to hold that they were not the eyewitnesses of the occurrence and were got-up witnesses. Despite the expert opinion that the injuries found on the person of the deceased were gunshot injuries and the injuries were caused by sharp-edged and blunt weapon, the High Court plunged into the exercise of finding out as to whether the injuries could be caused by gunshots. Keeping in mind the distance between the accused and the victim, as stated by the eyewitnesses, the High Court held that since there was no blackening, tattooing or collar of abrasion or charring on the injuries on the person of the deceased, they could not have received such gunshot injuries from the distance as detailed by the eyewitnesses. The High Court found that as in the post-mortem report Ext. PA it was not mentioned that the injuries found on the person of the deceased were caused by a firearm, the doctor was not justified to state so in the court. The High Court did not rely on the statement of the doctor and arrived at its own conclusions. The High Court disbelieved the eyewitnesses on finding a number of injuries on the person of the deceased on account of the fact that the eyewitnesses were held to have stated the firing of only two gunshots.

Allowing the appeal by the State,

Held :

The finding of the High Court in this regard cannot be justified. The High Court could not substitute its own opinion for the opinion of the expert who had categorically stated that the injuries received by the deceased were the gunshot injuries. The statements of the eyewitnesses have not been properly appreciated. Nothing could be spelt out from their cross-examination which could weaken the testimony of the aforesaid two witnesses regarding the firing of a number of shots at the time of occurrence. The shots were fired from the double-barrelled gun and the cartridges recovered show that the firing would have spread the pellets all around. In such a situation it could not be ruled out that the deceased could have received more than one or two injuries. As the witnesses had run away from the spot to save their lives, they could not state as to what happened to the deceased after they were forced to leave the place of occurrence. The testimony of the witnesses could not be discarded only on the ground that they happened to be the relations of the deceased. Under the circumstances of the case the eyewitnesses were proved to be natural witness. There was, therefore, no justification for the High Court not to accept the testimony of the eyewitnesses and reject the same on the ground of there being contradictions between their testimony and the conclusion arrived at by the High Court regarding the injuries sustained by the deceased. There is no inconsistency between the statements of the two eyewitnesses and that of the doctor. The statements of the eyewitnesses stand corroborated by the medical evidence. There is no doubt that the accused persons are responsible for causing the death of the deceased persons. The prompt lodging of the FIR and its dispatch to the Magistrate has further strengthened the belief that there was no possibility of either wrong person being impleaded as accused or persons who have not seen the occurrence produced as eyewitnesses. The finding of the High Court, being contrary to the legal evidence, is perverse and cannot be sustained. (Paras 13 to 15). State of Punjab v. Jugraj Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 234: 2002 SCC (Cri) 630: AIR 2002 SC 1083: 2002 Cri LJ 1503.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : R.P. Sethi and K.G. Balakrishnan, JJ. [Date of decision : 14-2-2002]

[4001] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction before High Court — Causation of fatal injury — Benefit of doubt — Conviction restored — Respondent-accused alleged to have hit deceased on left side of his head with a stone consequent to which he dropped dead and rolled down the hillside up to a distance of about 50 ft — Respondent-accused and co-accused thereafter alleged to have pelted stones at others present there, causing simple hurt to two others — High Court in appeal against conviction, acquitting respondent- accused noticing that the injury could have been caused because of the fall and not because of the assault made by the respondent — Basis for such conclusion was that the injuries noticed on post-mortem clearly revealed that there was a scope for the injuries having been sustained during the fall — However, eyewitnesses categorically stating that respondent hit the deceased on the left side of the head with the stone and he rolled down — No material before High Court to come to a conclusion that the death occurred due to fall — Besides the fatal injury there were at least five other injuries on head which could be related to the assault by the stone and more particularly Injury 9 viz. the fracture in the left temporal region — Held, since the High Court's order is based on surmises and conjectures, it cannot be sustained and is set aside and the order of conviction recorded by the trial court stands restored (Paras 2 and 8 to 11). State of H.P. v. Ram Krishan, (2009) 11 SCC 327: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 1347: 2009 Cri LJ 1138: (2009) 2 ECrN 259 (SC): (2009) 74 AIC 17 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-1-2009]

[4002] — Ss. 374 and 386 — High Court acquitting respondents — Propriety of — Trial court had analysed evidence in great detail in coming to conclusion about its acceptability — Held, without indicating any basis as to how conclusion of trial court was erroneous High Court should not have interfered with those conclusions — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 149, 148 and 326 — Explosives Act, 1884, S. 9

All the thirteen accused persons were sentenced to undergo imprisonment for life for the offence relatable to Section 302 IPC. Separate sentence was imposed for the offences punishable under Sections 148, 326 IPC and Section 9 of the Explosives Act, 1884. Primarily the prosecution version rested on the dying declaration purported to have been made by the deceased and the evidence of the injured witnesses. In appeal the High Court directed acquittal.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The trial court by an elaborate judgment had considered the evidence of the eyewitnesses and held that to be cogent and credible and after referring to the various aspects of the case, the trial court held the accused persons guilty. The High Court came to the conclusion that the evidence of the so-called injured eyewitnesses does not inspire confidence because they were similar and there was party faction. It was not open to the High Court to discard the evidence by observing in very generalised terms that the evidence lacks credibility and cogency. The trial court had analysed the evidence of the injured eyewitnesses in great detail and had come to the conclusion about its acceptability. Without indicating any basis as to how the conclusion of the trial court, was in any manner, erroneous, the High Court should not have interfered with those conclusions. (Paras 6 and 7). State of Orissa v. Pramod Kumar Kodam Singh, (2009) 12 SCC 725.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 15-4-2009]

[4003] — Ss. 374 and 386(b) — Dying declaration — Recorded by IO — Reliance upon — Propriety — Death by burning — High Court, holding that dying declaration was not in accordance with applicable Police Rules relating to recording of dying declaration directing acquittal — Sustainability — Appellant State contending that authenticity of dying declaration was not doubted, hence, acquittal was indefensible — Held, Police Rules on which High Court placed reliance was at the most a set of procedural guidelines — That cannot take away effect of S. 32(1) — Moreover High Court disbelieved IO's statement that it was not possible to get hold of a Magistrate, rejected without reason — Dying declaration was recorded in presence of a doctor — To add to vulnerability of High Court's judgment, High Court concluded that there was no other reliable evidence — This conclusion runs counter to High Court's own observation that evidence of PWs 7 and 6 (eyewitness and his cousin, respectively), was credible — Evidence of PW 8 (brother of deceased) and PW 9 provide ample corroboration — Hence, judgment of acquittal set aside — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 32(1)

In Dalip Singh case, (1979) 4 SCC 332, it was categorically observed that in case there was no time or facility available to the prosecution for adopting any better method, the dying declaration can be taken into consideration. In fact in the present case that is the categorical statement of PW 20 (police officer who recorded the statement of the deceased) that it was not possible to get a Magistrate to record the dying declaration. As rightly contended by counsel for the State, the High Court discarded the statement even without indicating any reason. The dying declaration was recorded in the presence of a doctor. In addition, the evidentiary value of the evidence of PW 7 (the eyewitness), PWs 9 and 10 has not been considered in its proper perspective. (Paras 9, 12 and 13). State of Rajasthan v. Champa Lal, (2009) 12 SCC 571: 2009 Cri LJ 2403.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 1-4-2009]

Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab, (1979) 4 SCC 332: 1979 SCC (Cri) 968; Ramawati Devi v. State of Bihar, (1983) 1 SCC 211: 1983 SCC (Cri) 169; Laxman v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 6 SCC 710: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1491, relied on

Munnu Raja v. State of M.P., (1976) 3 SCC 104: 1976 SCC (Cri) 376, clarified

[4004] — Ss. 374 and 386(b) — Conviction restored — Altercation between PW 2 and A-3, at petrol pump owned by accused persons, ending in fight between them — Sometime afterwards, PW 2 dragged and beaten by A-1 to A-3, which was seen by PW 1 (appellant complainant and relative of PW 2) and A, who tried to intervene — On exhortation of A-3, A-2 shot at PW 1 and A, compelling them to retreat to safety — Gunshot and resulting commo-

tion attracting attention of R and B (both sons of PW 1), who reached the spot — Again A-1 and A-3 exhorted A-2 to kill R and B — Shots fired by A-2 hitting both, resulting in their death — Aforesaid incident witnessed by PW 3 and several other persons — PW 2 then taken captive by accused persons inside their petrol pump and released only when accused tried to flee seeing police — Held, no dispute regarding place of crime — PWs 1 to 3 (eyewitnesses) fully proving incident and corroborating statements mentioned in FIR — No material contradiction in their cross-examination — Allegation of bungling regarding report and time of FIR because of its prompt registration, devoid of any merit — Medical evidence clearly establishing cause of death — Regarding submission of PWs 1 to 3 being interested witnesses, held, although PWs 1 and 2 were relatives and both deceased were PW 1's sons, however, PW 3 not interested with PWs 1 and 2 in any way nor he having any enmity with accused persons — PW 3's evidence being unmistakably clear, cannot be doubted — Again, non-examination of other witnesses available on spot, held, not necessary to prove guilt of accused as it is quality of evidence and not number of witnesses that is relevant for ascertaining truth — Taking PW 2 captive by accused persons completely believable as PW 2 could have well protected accused persons from crowd which gathered at petrol pump after hearing gunshots, while also protecting petrol tank from being damaged by pressure of agitated crowd — Injuries found on PW 2 by doctor — Defence version that both deceased came to petrol pump of accused persons to commit robbery by hurling bomb causing damage to it, not proved — Nothing on record even remotely suggesting that accused persons acted in exercise of their right of private defence — Hence, reversal of conviction, not justified — Arms Act, 1959, Ss. 27 and 30 — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 307, 323, 342 r/w S. 34 (Paras 20 to 36). Raj Narain Singh v. State of U.P., (2009) 10 SCC 362: (2009) 82 AIC 261 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dalveer Bhandari and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-9-2009]

Takhaji Hiraji v. Thakore Kubersing Chamansing, (2001) 6 SCC 145: 2001 SCC (Cri) 1070, relied on

[4005] — Ss. 374 and 386(b) — Appreciation of evidence — Conviction restored — Approach of High Court while acquitting respondent-accused — Propriety — On a scuffle between deceased and three respondent- accused, deceased shot at by respondent-accused S, resulting in his death — Trial court, placing reliance on evidence of PW 1 (eyewitness and father of the deceased), convicting respondent-accused S under S. 302 and other two respondent-co-accused under Ss. 302/34 — High Court directing acquittal of respondents — Sustainability — Held, conclusions of High Court were based on surmises, conjectures and hypothesis — Evidence of PW 1 was credible and cogent, therefore, acquittal of S as recorded by High Court, unsustainable — However, so far as other two respondent-co-accused were concerned, High Court after analysing evidence of PW 1, rightly held that evidence was not sufficient to bring in application of S. 34 IPC — Hence, their acquittal, proper — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 34

The conclusions of the High Court were based on surmises and conjectures and hypothesis. Mere non-mention of the names of the assailants or the nature of the weapon in the inquest report, cannot be a ground to discard the evidentiary value of PW 1's (eyewitness and father of the deceased) evidence. (Para 10)

Regarding non-mention of the name of PW 1 (eyewitness and father of the deceased) in the hospital records, who accompanied the deceased to the hospital, defence witness (DW 1, the Chief Pharmacist), had clearly stated in his cross-examination by the prosecution, that in case an injured is accompanied by several persons to the hospital, only the name of one person is recorded who is closest to the injured. He had also stated that besides the mother of the deceased others may have accompanied the deceased to the hospital. The presumptuous conclusion (of the High Court) that merely because the name of the mother of the deceased was recorded in the medical records, PW 1's presence is ruled out, is indefensible. (Para 13)

Again, PW 1, an advocate, had categorically stated that he did not go to the court because it was a Saturday and the lawyers were on strike for a particular reason. There was no cross-examination even on this aspect. The High Court's conclusion that he was expected to be at the place of practice (and not at home) on the face of this stand shows non-application of mind. (Para 14)

The evidence of PW 1 is credible and cogent, therefore, the acquittal of respondent-accused S as recorded by the High Court cannot be sustained and is set aside. (Para 15)

So far as the other two co-accused-respondents are concerned, the High Court, after analysing the evidence of PW 1, had rightly held that the evidence is not sufficient to bring in application of Section 34 IPC. Therefore, while allowing the appeal qua S, the appeal is dismissed for the other two respondent-accused. (Paras 15 and 17). State of U.P. v. Atul Singh, (2009) 14 SCC 203: AIR 2009 SC 2713: (2009) 5 All LJ 443.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and A.K. Ganguly, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-5-2009]

Girija Shankar v. State of U.P., (2004) 3 SCC 793: 2004 SCC (Cri) 863, relied on

Atul Singh v. State of U.P., 2004 Cri LJ 111: 2003 All LJ 2742, reversed

[4006] — Ss. 374 and 386(b) — Appeal against conviction — Improper exercise of power by High Court under — Acquittal reversed in case of some of the accused — Case of atrocities committed by upper caste T against lower caste H — 18 respondent-accused of T caste committed dacoity in house of PW 14 and J (PW 14's wife) of H caste — Thereafter, persons present in the house (eight in number), including PW 14 and J, tied with rope and taken to bank of river, where they were pushed into boats and brutally murdered, except PW 14 who jumped and saved his life — For wiping out entire evidence of atrocities, dead bodies of victims thrown in river where currents were very strong — Therefore, bodies of five abducted persons could not be recovered — J was recovered in injured and unconscious state, who afterwards succumbed to her injuries — Reversing their conviction by trial court, all 18 respondents acquitted by High Court — Sustainability — Held, trial court exhaustively dealt with entire evidence and documents on record — It gave graphic description of entire prosecution case and detailed circumstances in which evidence of PW 14 recorded — According to trial court, prosecution succeeded in establishing case against respondent-accused — However, findings of High Court not based on proper analysis and marshalling of entire evidence and documents on record — High Court in the impugned judgment did not even discuss evidence on record — Entire evidence and documents on record re-examined by Supreme Court — Trial court's view found to be the only possible view in facts and circumstances of the case — However, order of trial court modified, to the extent of giving benefit of doubt to 12 accused — Hence, their acquittal by High Court, maintained — But no iota of doubt regarding remaining 6 accused, whose participation in aforesaid ghastly crime, established — Hence, their acquittal by High Court set aside — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/149, 395, 364 and 201 (Paras 31 to 41, 44, 45 and 60 to 63). State of U.P. v. Ram Sajivan, (2010) 1 SCC 529.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dalveer Bhandari and A.K. Patnaik, JJ. [Date of decision: 4-12-2009]

[4007] — Ss. 374, 378 and 386 — Appellate Court's approach when accused is charged of murder — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

It is the duty of an appellate court to look into the evidence adduced in the case and arrive at an independent conclusion as to whether the said evidence can be relied upon or not and even if it can be relied upon, then whether the prosecution can be said to have been proved beyond reasonable doubt on the said evidence. The credibility of a witness has to be adjudged by the appellate court in drawing inference from proved and admitted facts. It must be remembered that the appellate court, like the trial court, has to be satisfied affirmatively that the prosecution case is substantially true and the guilt of the accused has been proved beyond all reasonable doubt as the presumption of innocence with which the accused starts, continues right through until he is held guilty by the final court of appeal and that presumption is neither strengthened by an acquittal nor weakened by a conviction in the trial court. The judicial approach in dealing with the case where an accused is charged of murder under Section 302 has to be cautious, circumspect and careful and the High Court, therefore, has to consider the matter carefully and examine all relevant and material circumstances, before upholding the conviction. In the present case the majority Judges of the High Court have not acted in accordance with the aforesaid parameters and the duties of a court of appeal, while considering the legality of conviction recorded by the Sessions Judge. (Paras 2 and 3). Padam Singh v. State of U.P., (2000) 1 SCC 621: 2000 SCC (Cri) 285: AIR 2000 SC 361: 2000 Cri LJ 489: 2000 All LJ 123.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision : 30-11-1999]

[4008] — Ss. 374, 378 and 386 — Where two views are possible, one in favour of accused and the other against it, the one favouring the accused should be accepted (Para 33). Raghunath v. State of Haryana, (2003) 1 SCC 398: AIR 2003 SC 165.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision : 13-11-2002]

[4009] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Powers of appellate court — Enhancement of sentence — Interference with sentence passed — Enhancement to death sentence — Appeal against conviction — Appellant convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment for causing murder of his wife by courts below — Held, crimes against women are brutal and barbaric which outrage modern conscience and belong to rarest of rare category deserving death sentence — Hence, notice issued to petitioner as to why his life sentence be not enhanced to death sentence — Constitution of India, Art. 136. Sukhdev Singh v. State of Punjab, (2010) 13 SCC 656.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Markandey Katju and Gyan Sudha Misra, JJ. [Date of decision: 12-11-2010]

Satya Narayan Tiwari v. State of U.P., relied on [4010] — Ss. 374, 386 and 164 — Appeal against conviction — Reversal of conviction by the High Court on ground that statement of the witness initially recorded as dying declaration but subsequently treated as a statement recorded under S. 164 and the FIR lodged by the said witness contradicted each other materially — Held, approach of the High Court was patently wrong — A case has to be decided on the basis of the evidence adduced by the witnesses during the trial — Previous statement of a witness cannot be used as substantive evidence — It can only be used by the defence to contradict or discredit any witness as provided in S. 145, Evidence Act — High Court further erred in discarding the evidence of the witnesses with a sweeping observation that they were artificial and unnatural — Matter remanded to the High Court for disposal of the appeal in accordance with law — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 145. Chinnammal v. State of T.N., (1997) 1 SCC 145: 1997 SCC (Cri) 51.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision : 20-11-1996]

[4011] — Ss. 374, 386 and 428 — Appeal — Period of sentence awarded by trial Court less than that already undergone as undertrial — Held, fact that appellant would not have to suffer further imprisonment because of set-off under S. 428 does not mean he cannot challenge his conviction. Retti Deenabandhu v. State of A.P., (1977) 1 SCC 742: 1977 SCC (Cri) 173: AIR 1977 SC 1335: 1977 Cri LJ 1004: (1977) 2 SCR 599.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : H.R. Khanna and R.S. Sarkaria, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-1-1977]

[4012] — Ss. 374, 393 and 401 — Appeal by accused and plea for revision by complainant — Revision application disposed of on grounds, stated in appeal — No further appeal against disposal of appeal — Effect on appeal against disposal of revision application. Suraj Bhan v. Om Prakash, (1976) 1 SCC 886: 1976 SCC (Cri) 208: AIR 1976 SC 648: 1976 Cri LJ 577.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : P.K. Goswami, P.N. Shinghal and Jaswant Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 2-2-1976]

[4013] — Ss. 374 and 360 — Conviction under Ss. 279/304-A IPC — Maintainability of appeal against the said conviction if accused released on probation — Held, the Appellate Authority erred in holding that the appeal was not maintainable merely because the Magistrate released the accused on probation. Arun Ahluwalia v. State, (2002) 10 SCC 454.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and U.C. Banerjee, JJ. [Date of decision : 4-9-2000]

[4014] — Ss. 374 and 378 — Challenge to public document for the first time in appeal — Permissibility — Public document (in this case, order of sanction for prosecution issued in the name of Governor and authenticated by Secretary to Govt.) — Authenticity of, not challenged before trial court — Held, respondent could not be permitted to question the admissibility of the said document for the first time before the appellate court — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 19 — Evidence Act, 1872, Ss. 74 and 78 (Para 13). State v. K. Narasimhachary, (2005) 8 SCC 364.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision : 7-10-2005]

Ranvir Singh v. Union of India, (2005) 12 SCC 59, relied on [4015] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Conviction and sentence of imprisonment upheld but sentence of fine reduced by Supreme Court — Penal Code, 1860, S. 326 — Constitution of India, Art. 134. Labh Singh v. State of Punjab, 1990 Supp SCC 20: 1990 SCC (Cri) 602.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision : 31-1-1990]

[4016] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Accused-appellant convicted under S. 302, IPC and S. 27 of Arms Act and sentenced to life imprisonment and one year's RI respectively by trial court — Conviction and sentence affirmed by High Court having regard to ocular, circumstantial and medical evidence — Considering facts and circumstances as well as evidence on record, held, there was no infirmity in the judgment and order of High Court — Hence Supreme Court's interference not called for — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Bikkar Singh v. State of Punjab, 1989 Supp (1) SCC 265: 1989 SCC (Cri) 414: AIR 1989 SC 1440: (1989) 2 Crimes 1: 1989 Cri LJ 1457.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : B.C. Ray and K. Jagannatha Shetty, JJ. [Date of decision : 28-3-1989]

[4017] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal to Supreme Court against conviction by High Court setting aside acquittal ordered by trial court — Where prosecution failed to establish charges and High Court without proper appraisal of materials and without meeting the findings reached by trial court reversed the acquittal, held, Supreme Court's interference called for — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Vinod Chaturvedi v. State of M.P., (1984) 2 SCC 350: 1984 SCC (Cri) 250: AIR 1984 SC 911: 1984 Cri LJ 814.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Murtaza Fazal Ali and Ranganath Misra, JJ. [Date of decision : 5-3-1984]

[4018] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Interference by Supreme Court — In absence of any infirmity, illegality, failure of justice or question of principle, Supreme Court would not interfere with the order of conviction and sentence concurrently arrived at by trial court and High Court — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302 and 364 — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Gopal v. State of T.N., (1986) 2 SCC 93: 1986 SCC (Cri) 111: AIR 1986 SC 702: 1986 Cri LJ 801.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : V. Balakrishna Eradi and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision : 30-1-1986]

[4019] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Interference with concurrent findings — When justified — Though Supreme Court does not normally interfere with the concurrent findings of fact but where High Court merely affirmed the findings of trial court without reappraisal of its own which resulted in substantial or grave injustice, it would interfere — Constitution of India, Arts. 134 and 136

While it is true that normally the Supreme Court would not interfere with the concurrent findings of fact save in exceptional circumstances, where legal process is disregarded or principles of natural justice are violated or substantial and grave injustice has otherwise resulted. The High Court is a final court of appeal and normally this Court would not interfere, if the High Court on the reappraisal of evidence confirms the trial court judgment. But in the present case, going through the judgment of the High Court, it appears that the High Court merely affirmed the findings of the trial court without reappraisal of the evidence on its own. (Para 21). Raghunath v. State of Haryana, (2003) 1 SCC 398: AIR 2003 SC 165.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision : 13-11-2002]

Balak Ram v. State of U.P., (1975) 3 SCC 219: 1974 SCC (Cri) 837, relied on [4020] — Ss. 374 and 386 — On grant of SLP against acquittal by HC non-bailable warrants directed to be issued to accused-respondents — But respondent 1 had already been granted bail and whether notice of appearance before the Court served on him not known — Respondent 2 remained untraceable — So the warrant could not be executed — Offence alleged to have been committed in 1971 — It would be unjust to carry on the present prosecution — SLP revoked — Not to prejudice rights in future if respondent 2 traced — Constitution of India — Art. 136. State of J&K v. Mazhar Ali, 1989 Supp (2) SCC 181: 1990 SCC (Cri) 28.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Sabyasachi Mukharji and S. Ranganathan, JJ. [Date of decision : 31-3-1989]

[4021] — S. 374 — Appeal before Supreme Court against order of acquittal of High Court by reversing conviction recorded by trial court — Two courts below having come to different conclusion, it is incumbent on the part of Supreme Court to reappreciate the entire evidence to see whether the findings of the trial court were so unreasonable and unrealistic as to call for interference therewith — Prosecution having adduced inviolable and convincing evidence through eyewitnesses supported by circumstantial and medical evidence, finding of the trial court being reasonable one and High Court in a summary manner and on insignificant and flimsy reasons having ignored abundant material produced by prosecution, held on facts, finding of High Court not sustainable and conviction recorded by trial court must be restored — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302 and 302/34 — Constitution of India, Arts. 134 and 136. State of U.P. v. Vinod Kumar, (1992) 2 SCC 536: 1992 SCC (Cri) 505: AIR 1992 SC 1011: 1992 Cri LJ 1115.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : S. Ratnavel Pandian, M. Fathima Beevi and Yogeshwar Dayal, JJ. [Date of decision : 12-3-1992]

[4022] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Intervention of Supreme Court when called for — Conviction restored — Reiterated, interference by Supreme Court on reappraisal of evidence should not ordinarily be made, particularly in case of acquittal — However, if it is found that judgment of acquittal recorded by High Court was not justified on evidence, it would be a travesty of justice for Supreme Court to ignore this aspect and circumstances may thus warrant interference — High Court, on appeal, considering PW 1 was not an eyewitness and hence conviction of accused by trial court was based on solitary related witness and a belated FIR, acquitting the accused — Propriety — Held, eyewitnesses and medical evidence have fully supported prosecution story and there is no delay in recording FIR — Hence, conviction restored — Constitution of India, Art. 136 (Paras 14 and 19 to 21). State of A.P. v. M. Narasimha Rao, (2010) 9 SCC 166: (2010) 3 SCC (Cri) 1165: AIR 2010 SC 3776.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and C.K. Prasad, JJ. [Date of decision: 27-8-2010]

[4023] — Ss. 374 and 386(b) — Appeal against conviction — Acquittal by High Court on the basis that the prosecution version was unreliable — High Court's view plausible — Interference, by Supreme Court, if called for — On facts, trial court by placing reliance on the evidence of PW 3, convicted respondent-accused under S. 304 IPC — In appeal, High Court finding several factors making prosecution version unreliable, directed acquittal — Sustainability — Appellant State contending that factors highlighted by High Court to direct acquittal had no foundation — Held, though some of the factors highlighted by High Court may not create a dent in the prosecution version but the cumulative effect certainly casts a shadow upon credibility of the prosecution version — View taken is a possible view — Therefore, no interference called for

In appeal, the High Court found that there were several factors which made the prosecution version unreliable. It was noted that the FIR was purportedly lodged on 22-3-1989 but the same was received by the Ilaqa Magistrate after a long time i.e. on 24-3-1989, though the Court of the Ilaqa Magistrate was situated at less than half a kilometre. Additionally, the number of injuries as stated by the so-called eyewitness, PW 3, was at great variance with the medical evidence. It also noted that the medical examination conducted at 3.30 p.m. by PW 1, the doctor, showed that the injuries were caused within a duration of 6 to 12 hours. His specific evidence was that the deceased could have received the injuries at about 10 a.m. on 22-3-1989 and he had not received injuries within six hours. According to the prosecution version the occurrence took place at 3.30 p.m. and the medico-legal examination was done at 5.30 p.m. (Para 8)

Though some of the factors highlighted by the High Court may not create a dent in the prosecution version but the cumulative effect certainly casts a shadow upon the credibility of the prosecution version. The view taken is a possible view. Therefore, no interference is called for. (Para 11). State of Haryana v. Krishan, (2008) 15 SCC 208: (2009) 3 SCC (Cri) 786: (2009) 1 ECrN 633 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and C.K. Thakker, JJ. [Date of decision: 7-11-2008]

Suchand Pal v. Phani Pal, (2003) 11 SCC 527: 2004 SCC (Cri) 220; Sachchey Lal Tiwari v. State of U.P., (2004) 11 SCC 410: 2004 SCC (Cri) Supp 105, relied on

[4024] — Ss. 374 and 386(b) — Appeal against conviction — Reappreciation of evidence by appellate court — When justified

The view taken by the High Court is both plausible and possible. The scope of interference under Article 136 of the Constitution, in an appeal against acquittal, is rather limited. The findings recorded by the High Court do not warrant any interference by the Supreme Court. (Paras 40 and 45). State of U.P. v. Guru Charan, (2010) 3 SCC 721.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : B. Sudershan Reddy and S.S. Nijjar, JJ. [Date of decision : 23-2-2010]

[4025] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — When Supreme Court's interference not called for — Charge of abetment of suicide by husband — Proof — Suicide committed by wife by pouring kerosene on her person and setting her body on fire soon after marriage — Constant harassment, humiliation and torture of wife by appellant husband for bringing insufficient dowry articles and his persistent demand for more sophisticated articles proved by reliable evidence of PWs — Defence of accused husband that his wife was suffering from mental ailment belied by evidence of PWs — Fact that deceased sustained 100% burn injuries showing that neither accused made any effort to save his wife from committing suicide nor he called any doctor though he was present in the house when the incident took place — This apathetic conduct of accused provided an additional circumstance in the link of the ocular version of PWs who supported prosecution case in its entirety — Courts below found accused guilty — Evaluation of findings of trial court and High Court not suffering from any illegality, manifest error or perversity, nor those courts overlooked or wrongly discarded any vital piece of evidence against accused — Held findings of fact of courts below do not call for any interference by Supreme Court in appeal — Hence conviction and sentence of 7 years' RI under S. 306 IPC and 6 months' RI under S. 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act and fine of Rs 5000 with default clause against the husband upheld — Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961, S. 4 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 306 (Paras 11 to 14). Arvind Kumar v. State of M.P., (2007) 12 SCC 681: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 356: AIR 2007 SC 2674: (2007) 57 AIC 54 (SC): 2007 Cri LJ 3741.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : R.V. Raveendran and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision : 24-7-2007]

[4026] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Supreme Court's interference with, when called for — Murder — Approach and appreciation adopted by the Sessions Court was manifestly erroneous and contrary to the well-settled principles of law inasmuch as lapses, omissions and contradictions in the prosecution case were either condoned or lightly brushed aside or were supported without any justification against the probabilities appearing in the case — Reliance on sole evidence was not justified — High Court instead of seriously and objectively reappreciating the evidence placed on record as first appellate court, simply approving the judgment of Sessions Court — On facts and in the circumstances held, prosecution failed to establish guilt of accused beyond reasonable doubt — Sessions Court as well as the High Court have concurrently and manifestly erred in convicting and sentencing the accused — In a case like this it is Supreme Court's duty to interfere with the judgment and order of High Court to do substantial justice — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302. Sohan v. State of Haryana, (2001) 3 SCC 620: 2001 SCC (Cri) 587: AIR 2001 SC 1380: 2001 Cri LJ 1707.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : U.C. Banerjee and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision : 2-3-2001]

[4027] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Trial Court and High Court recording concurrent finding of guilt — On reappraisal of evidence Supreme Court finding that evidence of identification of accused-appellant was not reliable and that of recovery of crime articles at the accused's instance could not be acted upon — Held, prosecution failed to establish its case beyond reasonable doubt — Hence order of conviction and sentence set aside . Veerpal v. State of Haryana, 1986 Supp SCC 733: 1987 SCC (Cri) 227.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.P. Thakkar and K.N. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 16-10-1986]

[4028] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Scope of consideration by the Supreme Court — Held, there was no scope to interfere on appeal by the convicted persons where High Court after dispassionately considering all contentions raised before it, gave benefit of doubt where possible, took considerate view in upholding conviction of rest of persons and recorded cogent reasons for its decision — Constitution of India, Arts. 134(1)(c) and 134-A. Annaporna Dutt v. State of U.P., 1993 Supp (2) SCC 246: 1993 SCC (Cri) 502: AIR 1993 SC 1207: 1993 Cri LJ 490.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K. Jayachandra Reddy and G.N. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision : 24-9-1992]

[4029] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Conviction by three courts below — Interference — Grounds — Held, conviction ordinarily would not have been interfered with by Supreme Court by reappreciating evidence — However, when evidence has been found to be mechanically appreciated, without proper consideration of facts and circumstances on record, the same reappreciated in interests of justice — Conviction reversed (Para 4). Mankamma v. State of Kerala, (2009) 10 SCC 164.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: V.S. Sirpurkar and Deepak Verma, JJ. [Date of decision: 8-10-2009]

[4030] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Conviction and sentence of life imprisonment under S. 302 IPC challenged on ground that the deceased for whose murder accused were convicted, was found murdered 12 years later — Inquiry report of DM called for by Supreme Court — Report indicating that the deceased for whose murder the accused-appellants were convicted was not the same person whose dead body was later found, thus falsifying accused's claim — Supreme Court also coming to the same conclusion by comparing photographs of the two dead bodies — Held, appellants not entitled to be released — Constitution of India — Arts. 136 and 21. Lallu Ram v. State of U.P., 1984 Supp SCC 424: 1985 SCC (Cri) 15: AIR 1984 SC 1886.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and E.S. Venkataramiah and A. Varadarajan, JJ. [Date of decision : 27-9-1984]

[4031] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Reappraisal of evidence — When not called for — On facts, held, no error committed by courts below in appreciation of evidence of witnesses — Hence not a fit case for reappraisal of evidence in exercise of jurisdiction under Art. 136 — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Ajab v. State of Maharashtra, 1989 Supp (1) SCC 601: 1989 SCC (Cri) 602: AIR 1989 SC 827: (1989) 1 Crimes 725: 1989 Cri LJ 954.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Natarajan and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision : 24-2-1989]

[4032] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Rule of non-interference by Supreme Court with concurrent findings of fact — Principles restated — Case law referred to — Appeal disposed of accordingly — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Ashok Kumar Chatterjee v. State of M.P., 1989 Supp (1) SCC 560: 1989 SCC (Cri) 566: AIR 1989 SC 1890.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : B.C. Ray and S. Ratnavel Pandian, JJ. [Date of decision : 2-5-1989]

[4033] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Supreme Court's interference with concurrent findings of trial court and High Court when called for — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Mallela Seetharmaiah v. State of A.P., 1989 Supp (1) SCC 74: 1989 SCC (L&S) 177: AIR 1989 SC 421: 1989 Cri LJ 968.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : B.C. Ray and N.D. Ojha, JJ. [Date of decision : 2-11-1988]

[4034] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Murder — Relying upon evidence of three eyewitnesses PWs 1, 2 and 4 and finding corroboration of the same with evidence of the doctor who had conducted autopsy on the dead body, trial court convicting the appellant under Ss. 302/34 and sentencing him to imprisonment for life — High Court on reappreciation of evidence of the eyewitnesses taking the view that prosecution case had been proved beyond reasonable doubt and therefore affirming the conviction and sentence — On scrutiny of evidence, held, reliable evidence of PW 1 who was accompanying the deceased right from the beginning, was fully corroborated by the testimony of PWs 2 and 4 and therefore, courts below were justified in maintaining conviction and sentence of the appellant (Para 6). Ramesh v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 243: 2000 SCC (Cri) 206: AIR 1999 SC 3759: 1999 Cri LJ 4603.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision : 16-9-1999]

[4035] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Normally Supreme Court, sitting in appeal against conviction passed by trial court and upheld in appeal, does not reappreciate the evidence of the witnesses again — But when the evidence had been placed before Supreme Court and had been argued at length by the counsel, Court can scrutinise the evidence — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 6). Ramesh v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 243: 2000 SCC (Cri) 206: AIR 1999 SC 3759: 1999 Cri LJ 4603.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision : 16-9-1999]

[4036] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal to High Court against conviction under S. 302, IPC — High Court must examine the defence version by applying its own mind and if decides to reject it, must do so only after recording reasons on points which are shown to be arguable — Defence plea of grave and sudden provocation under S. 300 Exception 4, IPC involves mixed question of fact and law — High Court dismissing the appeal without applying its mind on that question — Order of dismissal of the High Court must be set aside and appeal remitted to High Court — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 300 and 302 — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Rajaram Govind Gavade v. State of Maharashtra, (1982) 3 SCC 225: 1983 SCC (Cri) 7: AIR 1982 SC 31: 1982 Cri LJ 157.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : D.A. Desai and Baharul Islam, JJ. [Date of decision : 14-4-1981]

[4037] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Summary dismissal by High Court of appeal against conviction under S. 376, IPC and sentence of imprisonment for one year, held, not justified — Appeal therefore, remanded to the High Court for disposal on merits after issuing notice to the State — Practice and Procedure. Mayur Panabhai Shah v. State of Gujarat, (1982) 2 SCC 396: 1982 SCC (Cri) 442: AIR 1983 SC 66: 1982 Cri LJ 1972.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P.N. Bhagwati and E.S. Venkataramiah, JJ. [Date of decision : 22-1-1982]

[4038] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Grounds for recording acquittal — Only because a lesser sentence is imposed by trial court (two years' RI in case of rape), held, the same would not be a ground for acquitting the accused — Matter remanded to High Court for fresh consideration — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 375 and 376 (Para 5). State of Rajasthan v. Bhanwar Singh, (2006) 6 SCC 9: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 9.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision : 2-5-2006]

[4039] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Duty of appellate court — Murder — Appellant's conviction under S. 302 IPC by trial court affirmed by High Court — But except affirming the conclusion of trial court, High Court not appreciating the evidence — Neither credibility of the witnesses examined nor conclusion drawn after examining the evidence on record — Held, High Court failed to discharge its duty of an appellate criminal court as its judgment suffers from improper judicial approach — Appellate court while sitting in appeal against the judgment of the trial Judge is duty-bound to satisfy itself that the guilt of the accused has been established beyond all reasonable doubt. L.L. Kale v. State of Maharashtra, (2000) 1 SCC 295: 2000 SCC (Cri) 169: AIR 2000 SC 366: 2000 Cri LJ 494.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision : 30-11-1999]

[4040] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Conviction not sustained — Circumstantial evidence — Held, to base a conviction on circumstantial evidence prosecution must establish all the pieces of incriminating circumstances by reliable and clinching evidence and the circumstances so proved must form such a chain of events as would permit no conclusion other than one of guilt of the accused — Further held, suspicion, however grave, cannot be a substitute for a proof and the courts should take utmost precaution in finding an accused guilty only on the basis of the circumstantial evidence — Conviction of appellants on the basis of circumstantial evidence, in the instant case, not sustainable

The appellants were prosecuted for murdering one R between 10.30 p.m. of 14-6-1998 and 5 a.m. of 15-6-1998. The deceased was a motor mechanic. A quarrel allegedly took place between the deceased and the appellants at about 9 p.m. on 14-6-1998 on two grounds: (1) Jeep of A-1 had not been satisfactorily repaired by the deceased although he had taken repair charges in respect thereof; and (2) over a woman. PW 8 and others were said to have intervened and the deceased thereafter went to his residence. At about 10.30 p.m. the appellants went to his residence in an auto and A-1 called him on the ground that his jeep required some repairs. PW 1, elder brother of the deceased came out and saw A-1 on the road and A-2 and A-3 standing by an auto on which the words "swathi" were inscribed. Next day dead body of the deceased was found in front of PW 4's house who informed about the same to PW 1. PW 1 went to the spot and thereafter to the police station. But instead of going directly in, he waited for about 10 minutes in front of the police station and got the FIR scribed from PW 5 who was passing by, despite the fact that he was related to one SI. Although FIR was dispatched to the court at 0645 hours, nothing was brought on record to show as to when it reached the court. Testimony of PW 9, an eyewitness to the occurrence was relied on by the trial court to base the conviction, whereas the same was disbelieved by the High Court. However, the High Court upheld the conviction and sentence passed by the Sessions Judge holding that the appellants had quarrelled with the deceased and thus motive was proved. Hence, the present appeal.

Allowing the appeals,

Held :

The statement of PW 9 (an eyewitness) was recorded three days after the incident by the police. PW 8, eyewitness to the quarrel, was also examined two days after the incident. No TI parade was held. PW 6, the auto driver, in whose auto the appellants were alleged to have driven to the deceased's house was examined after three years and three months and he deposed that the words written on his auto were "suverna" and not "swathi" as disclosed in FIR and hence identity of the auto by the first informant was doubtful. Besides, his conduct in not going to the police station to lodge the FIR though he was related to one of the police officer, and waiting for someone to scribe the same on road makes his story doubtful. It is a mystery as to how PW 1 could name all the accused in the FIR since he had neither stated in the FIR nor in his deposition in the court that he knew the appellants. Moreover, since he had not met PW 8 before lodging the FIR there was no reason for him to know about the alleged quarrel between the appellants and the deceased. Testimony of other PWs neither appears credible nor corroborating each other. Though Appellant 2 was a history-sheeter and his whereabouts must have been known to the police, why the appellants were arrested after a fortnight has not been explained. Further, why the FIR was dispatched at 0645 hours when the court was situated in the same town is also difficult to understand. Exact time of death has also not been proved, particularly when no specific reason therefor had been assigned in the post-mortem report. Even the recovery of knife was said to have been made only from Appellant 2.

Considering aforementioned circumstantial evidence the conviction of the appellants cannot be sustained. Ramreddy Rajesh Khanna Reddy v. State of A.P., (2006) 10 SCC 172: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 512: AIR 2006 SC 1656: (2006) 2 Guj LH 271.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision : 24-3-2006]

Anil Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (2003) 9 SCC 67: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1167; Reddy Sampath Kumar v. State of A.P., (2005) 7 SCC 603: 2005 SCC (Cri) 1710, relied on [4041] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Acquittal confirmed — Murder of wife — Prosecution case based on circumstantial evidence — Deceased wife and accused husband found lying in a pool of blood in their house — Their throat had been cut and while wife was dead, husband was gasping for breath — Crime weapon found under clothes of deceased, as stated by IO — Informant stated that accused having suspected chastity of deceased, there used to be frequent quarrel between them — Trial court found that circumstances were sufficient to establish the guilt of accused and accordingly, convicted him — But High Court noted defence stand that PWs did not support prosecution case — It also noted that there was no quarrel between accused and deceased — It accepted the possibility that there was suicide pact between them or that wife attacked the husband and committed suicide after inflicting blows on neck of the accused who survived — Accordingly, it concluded that prosecution failed to establish its case and hence it acquitted the accused — Held, defence version was not an improbable stand — Reasons which weighed with High Court to direct acquittal cannot be characterised as perverse — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 316 and 309. State of Rajasthan v. Narain, (2008) 17 SCC 6: AIR 2009 SC 821: (2008) 72 AIC 129 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 17-10-2008]

V.N. Ratheesh v. State of Kerala, (2006) 10 SCC 617: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 50, relied on

[4042] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Acquittal justified — Charge of committing murder of three persons — Trial court held that the charge was established by evidence of substantial nature — But, High Court noticed certain glaring infirmities in prosecution case — Pivotal witness, claimed to be eyewitness injured in the occurrence, examined three weeks after his release from hospital and no explanation offered for this delay — Fact that incident took place around 12 midnight but FIR lodged at 8.30 a.m. next morning, High Court considered it as abnormal delay — Prosecution explained that one M had told informant about the incident at 7 a.m. and after some time was spent for taking injured persons to hospital, FIR was lodged, but M not examined which according to High Court was a vitiating factor — Further, serious injuries sustained by accused, delay in sending accused to hospital also not explained — Information sent by doctor attending accused reached police before lodging of FIR — Effect of this information and whether it constituted FIR not considered by trial court — Held, acquittal as directed by High Court cannot be faulted — Even though it may be possible hypothetically to take a different view on evidence, interference with view of High Court not called for. State of Punjab v. Kulwant Singh, (2008) 16 SCC 290: AIR 2008 SC 3279: (2008) 3 APLJ 61 (SC): (2008) 68 AIC 1 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 4322.

Bench Strength 3. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat, P. Sathasivam and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 16-7-2008]

Sheo Swarup v. King Emperor, (1933-34) 61 IA 398: AIR 1934 PC 227 (2); Nur Mohammad v. Emperor, AIR 1945 PC 151: 47 Cri LJ 1; Prandas v. State, AIR 1954 SC 36; Aher Raja Khima v. State of Saurashtra, AIR 1956 SC 217: (1955) 2 SCR 1285; Sanwat Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1961 SC 715: (1961) 3 SCR 120; M.G. Agarwal v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1963 SC 200: (1963) 2 SCR 405; Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 2 SCC 793: 1973 SCC (Cri) 1033; K. Gopal Reddy v. State of A.P., (1979) 1 SCC 355: 1979 SCC (Cri) 305; Ramesh Babulal Doshi v. State of Gujarat, (1996) 9 SCC 225: 1996 SCC (Cri) 972; George v. State of Kerala, (1998) 4 SCC 605: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1232; Jaswant Singh v. State of Haryana, (2000) 4 SCC 484: 2000 SCC (Cri) 991; Bhagwan Singh v. State of M.P., (2002) 4 SCC 85: 2002 SCC (Cri) 736; Kallu v. State of M.P., (2006) 10 SCC 313: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 546; Chandrappa v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 4 SCC 415: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 325, relied on [4043] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Acquittal confirmed — Unnatural conduct of eyewitnesses — Contradictory dying declarations — A-1 to A-3 armed with knives while A-4 armed with sickle alleged to have severely assaulted deceased while he was going along with his friends PWs 1 and 2 — Deceased bleeding profusely falling down in pool of blood and PWs 1 and 2 fleeing away on being threatened by accused — PW 3, an auto driver, seeing deceased lying with bleeding wounds taking him to hospital — No explanation for why any close friend of a person i.e. PWs 1 & 2 would allow such a thing to happen — Further, they not informing about occurrence to anybody till they were asked by police in midnight of date of occurrence — Held, conduct of PWs 1 and 2 is unnatural and unbelievable and their presence at time of occurrence is doubtful and hence, their testimonies cannot be accepted — Moreover, deceased not stating in his dying declaration before the Judicial Magistrate that A-1 to A-4 were his assailants — Rather, he stating that four unknown persons had attacked him — According to prosecution case, deceased knew all accused very well since he had an encounter with all of them a few days before occurrence — In such circumstance, if really Accused 1 to 4 had attacked the deceased, definitely he would have told the names or identification of the assailants — Reliance by prosecution on Ext. P-21 statement given by deceased to PW 22 Head Constable in hospital as his dying declaration was found misplaced — Ext. P-21 ran to two full pages and names of accused and overt acts on their part were mentioned in detail — Vast difference in both statements of deceased with regard to contents discernible — Also, actual complaint not having been sent with FIR leads to suspicion as rightly noted by High Court — In such circumstances, dying declaration by Judicial Magistrate deserves acceptance that deceased had not implicated accused therein — Analysis of High Court directing acquittal well justified — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 32(1) (Paras 31 to 37). State of T.N. v. Zubair, (2008) 16 SCC 319: AIR 2009 SC 1189: (2009) 73 AIC 11 (SC): (2009) 2 ECrN 68 (SC): 2009 Cri LJ 1777.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision: 18-12-2008]

[4044] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Injured eyewitness — Corroboration of testimony — Sufficiency of — Non-explanation of injuries of accused — Effect — Prosecution case mainly based on evidence of injured eyewitnesses PWs 12 and 13 — While PW 12 was the informant, PW 13 was named as eyewitness in FIR itself — These two witnesses consistently supported the prosecution case in their statements before police as well as in court — Their evidence corroborated by medical evidence — Held, evidence of the injured eyewitnesses credible and no ground made out to disbelieve the same — Therefore, non-explanation of injuries of accused by prosecution cannot be a ground to record acquittal of accused-appellants — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/149, 307/149, 324 and 148

Merely because prosecution has failed to explain injuries on the accused, the same cannot be a solitary ground for doubting the prosecution case, if otherwise, evidence relied upon is found to be credible. (Para 4). Krishan v. State of Haryana, (2006) 12 SCC 459: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 214.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : B.N. Agrawal and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision : 23-8-2006]

[4045] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Search and seizure — Requirement under the section — Non-compliance with — Effect — The plastic bag, on which the appellant was found sitting, after being seized and on verification thereafter, found containing poppy straw — Rejecting appellant's contention that the requirement under S. 50 were not complied with, held, the said section comes into play only in the case of search of a person and not in respect of the search related to any premises etc. — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 50. Birakishore Kar v. State of Orissa, (2000) 9 SCC 541: 2001 SCC (Cri) 645: AIR 2000 SC 3626 (1): (2000) 1 KLT 639.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.T. Nanavati and S.S.M. Quadri, JJ. [Date of decision : 12-8-1999]

State of Punjab v. Baldev Singh, (1999) 6 SCC 172: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1080, relied on [4046] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Conviction under S. 304 Pt. I IPC — Appeal against — Appreciation of evidence — Blows inflicted on deceased's head with sharp side of barchi — FIR lodged promptly mentioning appellant's name — Testimony of eye-witnesses credible and corroborated by FIR, dying declarations and medical evidence — Plea of alibi not sustainable in view of such evidence — On facts and in the circumstances held, appeal against conviction unmerited — Constitution of India, Art. 134 — Penal Code, 1860, S. 304 Pt. I. Munir Ahmad v. State of Rajasthan, 1989 Supp (1) SCC 377: 1989 SCC (Cri) 455: AIR 1989 SC 705: 1989 Cri LJ 845.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Natarajan and A.M. Ahmadi, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-1-1989]

[4047] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Dowry death — Intimation of death to bride's family not a mitigating factor if cruelty proved — Death due to electrocution within seven years of marriage — Six accused persons including husband and in-laws of the deceased charged under Ss. 304-B and 201 IPC — Acquittal of three accused by Sessions Court becoming final as not appealed in High Court — Remaining three accused, in appeal before High Court, acquitted of the charge under Ss. 304-B and 201 but convicted under S. 498-A — Once the High Court comes to the conclusion on the basis of evidence adduced that the deceased during her lifetime was subjected to harassment on account of insufficient dowry and demands were being made before her death occurred, held, intimation of death by the in-laws to the parents of deceased would not absolve the accused of their ill-motive when necessary ingredients of the offence under S. 304-B are established — Setting aside the acquittal, accused convicted under S. 304-B and sentenced to 7 years' imprisonment — However, acquittal in respect of offence under S. 201 upheld — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 304-B, 201 and 498-A. Balwant Singh v. Partap Singh, (2000) 9 SCC 352: 2001 SCC (Cri) 318.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik, R.P. Sethi and Shivaraj V. Patil, JJ. [Date of decision : 29-3-2000]

[4048] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Rape on married woman — Testimony of the victim of the rape corroborated by her immediate and subsequent conduct as also medical evidence — Testimony found to be truthful and trustworthy — Prosecutrix neither a woman of easy virtue nor having any grudge or reason to falsely implicate the accused — Non-examination of neighbour who had responded to her cry but was not a witness to the crime, held, not fatal — Held on facts, High Court seriously erred in reversing trial court's verdict of conviction, on the basis of wild surmises — Penal Code, 1860, S. 376

According to the prosecutrix, at midnight during absence of her husband, the two accused-respondents entered her room by making a passage from the thatched roof. Both of them then closed the mouth of the prosecutrix and threatened her. They then subjected her to forcible sexual intercourse one after the other and thereafter, they made good their escape. The prosecutrix raised a cry whereupon one of the neighbours rushed towards her house. Next day the prosecutrix was carried in a trolley to the police station which is seven kilometres away from the place of occurrence. She lodged a report at 1030 hours in the morning. In the course of investigation the police seized the petticoat of the prosecutrix which she was wearing at the time of forcible sexual intercourse with her and also the kantha and mat on which she was sleeping. The prosecutrix was sent for medical examination and was found to have stains of human blood and semen and a bruise of 1 cm x 1 cm 1/4 cm on the lateral side of the left of the genital channel. The bruise was found to have been caused within 24 hours. According to chemical examination report there was presence of blood and semen stains on the articles including petticoat sent for chemical examination. According to the trial Judge, the version of the prosecutrix was corroborated by the medical evidence and the evidence of the chemical report of the Forensic Science Laboratory. However, the High Court disbelieved the prosecutrix's version. With regard to injuries found on her private parts, the High Court observed that there was no evidence as to how long before and after the alleged offence the husband of the prosecutrix was absent and the possibility of her sexual contact with her husband could not be ruled out. The High Court also took note of the statement made in cross-examination by the doctor that the injury could be self-inflicted. It was observed that the possibility of semen being that of her husband could not be ruled out. It also saw some infirmity in the prosecution case as her neighbour who was alleged to have rushed towards her house after she had given a cry and when the accused ran away, was not examined as a witness. The High Court also took note of the omission of the investigating officer (PW 5) in not making any attempt to collect any evidence of forcible entry of the accused in the house through the roof. On the above reasoning the High Court acquitted the accused.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The High Court discarded the apparent truthful testimony of the prosecutrix on wild surmises and strange reasoning. The High Court did not at all bestow any importance to the fact that the victim of the rape was not a woman of easy virtue. There has been no suggestion made to her in cross-examination or in the defence plea of the accused in the course of their examination under Section 313 CrPC that the prosecutrix had any grudge or reason to falsely implicate the two accused in such a heinous crime in which she herself was ravished and her honour was at stake. The High Court gave no importance to the report of the chemical examiner and serologist which showed blood and semen stains on the petticoat of the prosecutrix. It gave no importance to the fact that the trial Judge rejected the defence plea that the semen stains on the petticoat of the prosecutrix might have been caused by her physical contact with her husband. There was nothing to disbelieve, according to the trial Judge — the version of the prosecutrix that her husband had left the house on the previous afternoon and was absent at the time of incident and when she made the report to the police. The High Court then ventured into a wild surmise that the injury found on her private parts could have been self-inflicted. It is most unlikely that only to falsely implicate the accused the prosecutrix would inflict injury on her private parts. Non-examination of one of the neighbours who had rushed towards her house after hearing a call by her, is also not a serious infirmity in the prosecution case as he was not the witness of the commission of the offence. The testimony of the prosecutrix appears truthful and trustworthy being without any embellishments and exaggerations. She is corroborated by her immediate and subsequent conduct as also the medical evidence. Consequently, the judgment of acquittal passed by the High Court is set aside and the judgment of conviction and sentence of the trial court is restored. (Paras 7, 8 and 9). State of Orissa v. Thakara Besra, (2002) 9 SCC 86: AIR 2002 SC 1963: 2002 Cri LJ 2642.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : R.P. Sethi and D.M. Dharmadhikari, JJ. [Date of decision : 16-4-2002]

State of Punjab v. Gurmit Singh, (1996) 2 SCC 384: 1996 SCC (Cri) 316, relied on

Thakara Besra v. State, (1994) 2 Crimes 596 (Ori), reversed

[4049] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Murder — Common intention — Absence of — Testimony conflicting with medical evidence — Benefit of doubt — Appellants along with other companions allegedly causing death of the deceased inflicting blows with lathis — Medical evidence not indicating any lathi-blow — Out of the three witnesses one stating that he saw appellants inflicting lathi-blows while other two stating that they found appellants chasing deceased with lathis — In absence of any reliable evidence showing appellants inflicted lathi-blows on deceased, held, is not enough to credit the appellants with sharing common intention with real killers — Appellants acquitted on benefit of the doubt — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 r/w 34 or 149 and 148. Kalachand Bhowmik v. State of Tripura, 2001 SCC (Cri) 1585: AIR 2000 SC 3583.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.T. Thomas and D.P. Mohapatra, JJ. [Date of decision : 3-2-2000]

[4050] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction under — Trial court's order of acquittal reversed by High Court on cogent reasons — Testimony of independent eyewitness corroborated by recovery crime article, relied on — No view other than the guilt of the accused possible on the evidence — Held, conviction justified — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302/34. Bhanwar Lal v. State of Rajasthan, 1984 Supp SCC 538: 1985 SCC (Cri) 91: AIR 1985 SC 336.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : Y.V. Chandrachud, C.J. and D.A. Desai and M.P. Thakkar, JJ. [Date of decision : 27-9-1984]

[4051] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Conviction of appellant under, by trial court and High Court — No eyewitness to the occurrence — Prosecution case based solely on uncorroborated testimony of approver which on facts appearing to be involuntary — Evidence regarding recovery of deceased's wearing apparel doubtful — Deceased's body could not be traced — Various discrepancies found in evidence led by prosecution — Held on facts, conviction not proper — Accused-appellant entitled to acquittal — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302. Abdul Sattar v. UT of Chandigarh, 1985 Supp SCC 599: 1985 SCC (Cri) 505: AIR 1986 SC 1438.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : A.N. Sen and Ranganath Misra, JJ. [Date of decision : 24-9-1985]

[4052] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Nature of injury — Effect — Appellant-accused inflicted only one injury on deceased which resulted in his death — Appellant-accused also received injury — PWs consistently supported prosecution case and their statements were corroborated by medical evidence — Held, prosecution succeeded in proving its case beyond reasonable doubt — But having regard to the nature of offence, High Court was not justified in confirming conviction of appellant under S. 302, instead he should have been convicted under S. 304 Pt. II — Since appellant was in custody since 1999, ends of justice would be met if appellant is sentenced to the period of imprisonment already undergone — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 or 304 Pt. II. Mohd. Shakeel v. State of A.P., (2007) 3 SCC 119: (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 44.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : B.N. Agrawal and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision : 22-11-2006]

[4053] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Accused apprehended while accepting money pursuant to a trap — Sustainability of explanation — Explanation of accused that money was received by him from complainant as payment towards govt. loan and not as a bribe for showing any official favour to complainant — Held on facts, not reasonable and probable — Trial court rightly convicted the accused — When material on record led to the only conclusion of guilt of accused, in absence of two possible views, High Court erred in reversing the order of conviction and acquitting the accused on benefit of doubt — Penal Code, 1860, S. 161 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 13(2) r/w S. 13(1)(d) — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 5(2) r/w S. 5(1)(d)

The respondent was working as Talathi of a village. The complainant and his brother B had taken a loan from one K and had secured the land owned by them in favour of K by way of mortgage. A mortgage suit was filed by the mortgagee which ended in compromise. The complainant then requested the respondent to delete the name of K from the revenue record in view of repayment of the mortgage loan in terms of the compromise. According to the prosecution case, the respondent demanded Rs 900 for this work. The complainant paid Rs 600 but the respondent insisted on payment of the balance amount of Rs 300 for doing the work. The complainant then lodged a report with the Anti- Corruption Bureau, which laid a trap. Evidence of the complainant (PW 1) shows payment of Rs 300 as illegal gratification by him and acceptance thereof by the respondent in his house. PW 2 (panch witness) who accompanied the complainant corroborated the evidence of the complainant. The defence as put forth in the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and the explanation given in the statement under Section 313 CrPC was as follows: some amount was outstanding from the complainant in regard to a Tagai loan taken in the name of his brother B. The Tahsildar sent a communication on 3-9-1986 to the respondent stating that B was due in a sum of Rs 2575.90 towards interest in respect of an engine loan taken in the year 1966. The accused was, therefore, instructed to recover the said amount and deposit it in the government treasury. Therefore, the accused sent a notice dated 6-9-1986 to the complainant, demanding payment of the amount due. In pursuance of it, the complainant came to the accused's house on 6-10-1986 and paid him Rs 300 towards the amount outstanding to the Government, and it was received by him as government dues and not as a bribe for showing any official favour to the complainant.

The explanation given by the accused was rejected by the Special Judge, with detailed reasons. Accepting the case of the prosecution, he convicted and sentenced the respondent herein to undergo RI for one year in regard to an offence under Section 161 IPC and RI for one year for an offence punishable under Section 5(2) read with Section 5(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act and to pay a fine of Rs 1000 and in default to suffer further RI for three months, with a direction that both the substantive sentences shall run concurrently. The accused filed an appeal, which the High Court allowed holding that the explanation given by the accused for receiving the amount was reasonable and probable and therefore, the charge against the accused that he had accepted Rs 300 as illegal gratification was not proved beyond doubt and that the accused was entitled to benefit of doubt.

Allowing the appeal, setting aside the order of the High Court and restoring the judgment of the Special Judge convicting the respondent,

Held :

Section 4 of the Act, inter alia, provided that where in any trial of an offence punishable under Section 161 IPC or Section 5(1)(a) or (b) punishable under Section 5(2) of the Act, it is proved that an accused person has accepted any gratification (other than legal remuneration), it shall be presumed, unless the contrary is proved, that he accepted that gratification as a motive or reward, such as is mentioned in the said Section 161. This would mean that a mere explanation in the statement under Section 313 that the amount was received towards a loan will not be sufficient. The contrary position should be established by the accused either from inferences legally drawn from the evidence on record let in by the prosecution, or by letting in direct evidence in regard to the explanation. The statutory presumption raised under Section 4 will not stand rebutted merely by offering an explanation under Section 313 if such explanation does not find support from the evidence let in by the prosecution. Though, it is well settled that the accused is not required to establish his explanation by the strict standard of "proof beyond reasonable doubt", and the presumption under Section 4 of the Act would stand rebutted if the explanation or defence offered and proved by the accused is reasonable and probable, the following words of caution in Chaturdas Bhagwandas Patel v. State of Gujarat should be kept in mind before it can be said that the presumption stood rebutted: "Nevertheless, this burden on the accused is to be discharged by bringing on record evidence, circumstantial or direct, which establishes with reasonable probability, that the money was accepted by the accused, other than as a motive or reward such as is referred to in Section 161." (Paras 11 and 13)

In this case, the evidence of PW 1 (the complainant), PW 2 (panch witness) and PW 3 (Police Inspector) clearly prove the ingredients of a valid trap case. If the accused has received the money towards a government loan or at least being under a bona fide impression that it was towards repayment of the government loan, he will not be guilty. But the evidence clearly shows that no amount was due from the complainant to the State. When no amount was due from the complainant, and when the instruction of the Tahsildar was that the amount outstanding from B should be recovered, there is no explanation as to why the accused should send a demand notice to the complainant and not B on 6-9-1986. If no amount was due to the Government from the complainant, the question of the accused accepting it as payment towards a government loan does not arise. The evidence relating to demand, payment and acceptance of illegal gratification, is clear. The trial court had considered the entire evidence in detail and drawn proper inferences. (Paras 14 to 16)

Further, the notice of demand on 6-9-1986 was not sent by registered post to the complainant, nor delivered personally against acknowledgement. The notice was posted on 6-9-1986 at Pune and a certificate of posting was obtained. It is strange that the notice dated 6-9-1986, if really sent, was not posted at the place where the accused was working, but from Pune which is at a distance of about 40 km from his place of work. It is thus clear that no notice dated 6-9-1986 was issued to the complainant and the accused has tried to create an explanation by securing a certificate of posting dated 6-9-1986 from Pune after the event. (Para 16)

It is no doubt true that if two views are possible and the view of the High Court acquitting the accused cannot be said to be wholly improbable, the Supreme Court will not interfere with the decision of the High Court. But where the material on record leads to only one conclusion viz. the guilt of the accused, the judgment of the High Court will not be sustained. In this case the High Court was not justified in accepting the explanation regarding receipt of Rs 300 by the accused as being towards Tagai loan. The conclusion of guilt is inescapable. Therefore, the trial court was justified in convicting the respondent under Section 161 IPC and Section 5(2) r/w Section 5(1)(d) of the P.C. Act. (Para 18). State of Maharashtra v. Rashid B. Mulani, (2006) 1 SCC 407: (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 408: AIR 2006 SC 825: 2006 Cri LJ 794: (2006) 39 AIC 65 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision : 4-1-2006]

Chaturdas Bhagwandas Patel v. State of Gujarat, (1976) 3 SCC 46: 1976 SCC (Cri) 351; Dhanvantrai Balwantrai Desai v. State of Maharashtra, 1963 Supp (1) SCR 485: AIR 1964 SC 575: (1964) 1 Cri LJ 437, relied on [4054] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Dying declaration — Necessity for corroboration arises only when the dying declaration suffers from any infirmity — Dying declarations recorded by the Head Constable and doctor found to be genuine and properly recorded — Deceased herself stating that the accused poured kerosene on her body and set her on fire — Finding of the High Court that there was no evidence to prove that the accused was in the house was patently wrong — Medical evidence supporting the dying declaration — Held, in the circumstances of the case, High Court not justified in reversing the conviction of the accused — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 32. State of Maharashtra v. Mehtabi, (1998) 8 SCC 618: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1614.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision : 22-2-1996]

[4055] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Attempt to murder — First part of S. 307 — Applicability — Intention or knowledge regarding commission of murder and doing of an act towards it are necessary ingredients —

Receipt of injury by victim not a prerequisite for convicting accused under first part — When victim receives injuries, second part would be attracted — Pursuant to rivalry inter se between the parties in regard to grant of railway contracts, two bombs hurled by accused at the victims, one of which did not explode and the second one exploded but victims did not sustain any injury — Trial court convicted accused persons under Ss. 307 and 307/109 — High Court held that no injury having been sustained by the victims, no case under S. 307 was made out — No finding arrived at by High Court that PWs contradicted themselves in material particulars so as to render their testimonies untrustworthy or that findings of trial court were either unsatisfactory or contrary to legal principles — Held, High Court's judgment cannot be sustained — Matter remitted to High Court for consideration afresh — Penal Code, 1860, S. 307. Prakash Chandra Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2007) 13 SCC 134: 2008 Cri LJ 438.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and H.S. Bedi, JJ. [Date of decision : 12-10-2007]

Parsuram Pandey v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 189: 2005 SCC (Cri) 113, followed

[4056] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Held, must be considered by appellate court, both on questions of law and questions of fact (Para 3). Vijayendra Kumar v. State of Bihar, (2005) 9 SCC 252.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : B.P. Singh and Arun Kumar, JJ. [Date of decision : 24-11-2004]

[4057] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — High Court in appeal against the conviction by the trial Court could not possibly affirm the conviction if it had disbelieved the essential and vital part of the prosecution case. Hari Dev Sharma v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1977) 3 SCC 352: 1977 SCC (Cri) 516: AIR 1976 SC 1489: 1976 Cri LJ 1176.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : A.C. Gupta and S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, JJ. [Date of decision : 4-5-1976]

[4058] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — High Court not justified in acquitting some of the accused persons influenced by false involvement of others even though their involvement in crime had been established — Maxim falsus in uno falsus in omnibus wrongly applied. State of Karnataka v. Bheemappa, 1994 Supp (1) SCC 103: 1994 SCC (Cri) 198: 1993 Cri LJ 2609.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. A.S. Anand and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 13-5-1993]

[4059] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — High Court not justified in disposing of an appeal against conviction by a cryptic judgment, specially in a case under S. 302 IPC — High Court must go into the evidence, advert to the same as well as the arguments of the appellant's counsel and then pass a reasoned order. Badri v. State of Rajasthan, 1995 Supp (3) SCC 521: 1995 SCC (Cri) 990.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision : 18-7-1994]

[4060] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Affirming the conviction sentence reduced considering 90 years age and physical condition of appellant — Interference with sentence — Reduction of sentence — Age factor — Conviction of appellant under Ss. 307, 326, etc. IPC not interfered with — However, considering the advanced age of 90 years and physical condition of the appellant, sentence reduced to the period already undergone on condition that he pays the fine imposed on him within four weeks — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Beyas Mahto v. State of Bihar, (2000) 9 SCC 509: 2001 SCC (Cri) 638.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision : 24-4-2000]

[4061] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Allowed by High Court giving valid and weighty reasons for its unassailable logical conclusion — Prosecution evidence directly in conflict with medical evidence — Held on facts, conclusion of High Court cannot be termed as perverse or fallacious and hence Supreme Court's interference not called for — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 302/109 — Constitution of India, Art. 136. State of Haryana v. Lakhbir Singh, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 35: 1991 SCC (Cri) 242: AIR 1990 SC 2154: 1990 Cri LJ 2274.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Ratnavel Pandian and K. Jayachandra Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-9-1990]

[4062] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Defence case based on objective evidence and appearing to be more probable — No explanation advanced by prosecution — Held, accused entitled to benefit of doubt — Interference with concurrent finding of conviction called for

When two versions are before the court, the version which is supported by objective evidence cannot be brushed aside lightly unless it has been properly explained. In this case the defence version surfaces as a more probable one in the facts and circumstances of the case. At any rate the appellant is entitled to the benefit of doubt. Consequently the order of conviction and sentence is set aside. (Paras 8 and 10). Buta Singh v. State of Punjab, (1991) 2 SCC 612: 1991 SCC (Cri) 494: AIR 1991 SC 1316: 1991 Cri LJ 1464.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : A.M. Ahmadi, V. Ramaswami and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision : 26-3-1991]

[4063] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Discrepancies in evidence considered by the trial court and good reasons given for accepting the evidence of the prosecution witnesses — High Court giving undue importance to those discrepancies and without valid reasons discarding their evidence — Erroneous appreciation of evidence by the High Court and consequent acquittal leading to miscarriage of justice — Judgment and order passed by the High Court set aside and judgment and order passed by the trial court restored. State of Bihar v. Ram Padarath Singh, (1998) 6 SCC 240: 1998 SCC (Cri) 1436: AIR 1998 SC 2606.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.T. Nanavati and V.N. Khare, JJ. [Date of decision : 21-7-1998]

[4064] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Erroneous appreciation of evidence by High Court — CRPF personnel alleged to have attacked the local police when they were asked to vacate some seats in a function, for which the CRPF personnel did not have any tickets, resulting in death of one — Held, CRPF personnel who are responsible for this incident deserve severe punishment both on the criminal side as well as in departmental proceedings — No one can be allowed to take the law into his own hands, because if permitted rule of law and democracy will collapse — Prosecution unequivocally proving that the CRPF personnel had committed the offence — As regards identity of accused, though trial court dealt with the evidence elaborately, High Court failed to advert to those points — Arms Issue Register of CRPF Authority was produced by prosecution to prove that the said Authority had issued arms and ammunitions to the accused person, and the investigating officer had seized those self-loading rifles from the CRPF Authority — CFSL also corroborated the fact that those were used very recently and were used for firing purpose — Trial court specifically observing that all the eyewitnesses had clearly, categorically and emphatically stated that the accused CRPF personnel had opened fire indiscriminately from their self-loading rifles and the defence not specifically denying it — High Court failing to consider said point also — High Court merely emphasising in detail that there was an opportunity to show the accused to the witnesses before they were put up in the test identification parade, but not considering the fact that the accused had been kept in police custody in a different police station and not in the police station to which the witnesses belonged — Matter remitted to High Court for consideration afresh (Paras 16 to 23). State of Tripura v. Ram Bir Singh, (2007) 11 SCC 442: (2007) 55 AIC 70 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision : 8-5-2007]

[4065] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Erroneous appreciation of evidence by High Court — Prosecution case primarily based on circumstantial evidence viz. deceased last seen in company of accused and recoveries at instance of accused — High Court failing to consider evidence on record in its proper perspective and basing its findings on surmises and conjectures — For example, High Court holding that identity of accused as the person who travelled with the deceased was not established, whereas his identity was clearly established by PWs — Evidence was also produced to show that deceased was also seen subsequently in company of other accused, which was not properly considered by High Court — Moreover, High Court also failed to appreciate the fact that dead body of deceased was alleged to have been recovered at the instance of accused and that recoveries were made pursuant to disclosures made by other accused — Hence, matter remitted to High Court for consideration afresh — Considering the fact that incident occurred 10 years back, High Court directed to consider feasibility of hearing the case expeditiously. State of H.P. v. Uttam Kumar, (2007) 12 SCC 348: (2008) 1 SCC (Cri) 378: 2007 Cri LJ 2946: (2007) 55 AIC 210 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.B. Sinha and Markandey Katju, JJ. [Date of decision : 27-4-2007]

[4066] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — High Court altering the conviction of the respondent for offence punishable under S. 302 r/w S. 34 of the Penal Code, 1860 to S. 307 IPC — Sustainability — High Court in the impugned order altering the conviction primarily on the ground that there was no injury on the person of the deceased, as allegedly accepted by the learned Public Prosecutor and further observing that "mechanical" injury being absent it would be unjust if the argument of the learned counsel for the accused is not given some weightage — It thereafter concluding that in this background offence under S. 307 IPC would be clearly made out because in that process there was an attempt by virtue of which one of the victims has died — Held, on a bare reading of the High Court's order it is clear that it is a classic case of non-application of mind — Evidence of doctor as well as the post-mortem report clearly showed that there were 12 injuries noticed on the body of the deceased and each one of them was described to be ante-mortem — It is not clear as to how the High Court observed that there was no injury on the body of the deceased and what it meant by the expression "mechanical injury" — Judgment of trial court restored and the High Court's order so far as it relates to alteration of the conviction from S. 302 r/w S. 34 to S. 307 IPC set aside (Paras 2, 10, 11 and 13 to 16). State of Rajasthan v. Gulab Singh, (2008) 8 SCC 139: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 433: AIR 2008 SC 3100: (2008) 69 AIC 160 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. Arijit Pasayat and P. Sathasivam, JJ. [Date of decision : 10-7-2008]

[4067] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — High Court by a cryptic unreasoned order acquitting respondent-accused for offence punishable under Ss. 363, 366 and 376 IPC — Unsustainability — High Court neither discussing the evidence, nor indicating any basis for departing from conclusions of trial court — Matter remanded to High Court for fresh disposal — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 363, 366 and 376 (Paras 1, 2, 6 and 8). State of U.P. v. Munshi, (2008) 9 SCC 390: (2008) 3 SCC (Cri) 778: (2008) 70 AIC 237 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision : 28-8-2008]

[4068] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — High Court failing to consider individual cases of the accused persons — Entire evidence considered by the High Court, although not in detail — No infirmity found in the impugned judgment of the High Court — But, since the High Court did not consider the individual cases of the accused persons, Supreme Court considering the same instead of remitting the appeal — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302 (Para 6). Amar Malla v. State of Tripura, (2002) 7 SCC 91: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1608: AIR 2002 SC 3052.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : U.C. Banerjee and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision : 23-8-2002]

[4069] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Rape — High Court should be slow to interfere with trial court's findings based on proper appreciation of evidence merely on surmises and conjectures

The judgment of the High Court was based more on surmises and conjectures than on proper appreciation of evidence. Court must be sensitive to the serious crime committed against human dignity. Courts must be wary, circumspect and slow to interfere with reasonable and proper findings based on appreciation of evidence as recorded by the lower courts, before upsetting the same and acquitting an accused involved in the commission of heinous offence of rape of hapless girl child. State of H.P. v. Raghubir Singh, (1993) 2 SCC 622: 1993 SCC (Cri) 674: 1993 (2) ALT (Cri) 286: (1993) 2 Crimes 887.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. A.S. Anand and N.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 18-2-1993]

[4070] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — Two accused (respondents) convicted under Ss. 302 r/w 34 IPC and each sentenced to life imprisonment — High Court acquitting one of them in view of a gift of land made by him in favour of widow of the deceased as compensation and converting conviction of the second respondent to one under S. 304, IPC and reducing his sentence two years' RI -- Held, High Court's judgment perverse and bad and liable to be set aside — Case remanded to High Court for rehearing without taking notice of the gift. Ramesh Kumar v. Ram Kumar, (1984) 3 SCC 90: 1984 SCC (Cri) 387: AIR 1984 SC 1029: 1984 Cri LJ 832.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : O. Chinnappa Reddy, A.P. Sen and E.S. Venkataramiah, JJ. [Date of decision : 26-4-1984]

[4071] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against conviction — When High Court acquitted the co-accused finding it unsafe to convict him on sole testimony of the complainant, held, it erred in upholding conviction of the accused appellant on the basis of the same testimony — Hence conviction and sentence of appellant also set aside — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, Ss. 5(1)(d) & 5(2) — Penal Code, 1860, S. 161. Shantilal Kashibhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, 1993 Supp (2) SCC 187: 1993 SCC (Cri) 456.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Kuldip Singh and Yogeshwar Dayal, JJ. [Date of decision : 2-11-1992]

[4072] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against trial court's judgment awarding life imprisonment — Duty of High Court to consider the matter in detail — Disposal of appeal in one paragraph indicating agreement with findings recorded by trial court improper — Case remitted back to High Court. Saybu Maruti Ghadge v. State of Maharashtra, 1990 Supp SCC 65: 1990 SCC (Cri) 619.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.N. Singh and Kuldip Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 6-2-1989]

[4073] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal before High Court against conviction — High Court reversing the order of conviction — Propriety — Testimony of prosecution witnesses unimpeached and corroborated by medical evidence and post-mortem report — Motive for committing crime established — High Court recording acquittal on two grounds: (i) though the incident was alleged to have occurred on a pucca road at 5.15 p.m., no outsider or pedestrian or resident of the vicinity had been named in FIR or statement of witnesses but only PW 2 was examined as independent witness; and (ii) there was no necessity for PW 1 (father of the deceased) to go to Bareilly to fetch medicines for his younger son, when the deceased was going there to give evidence — Held, findings recorded by High Court are contrary to evidence on record and based on surmises and conjectures — Prosecution evidence has to be weighed and not counted — Besides, naming of witnesses is within the domain of the prosecution — Moreover, High Court has doubted the presence of witnesses without assigning any reasons — Hence order of acquittal recorded by High Court set aside and that of trial court restored — Evidence Act, 1872, S. 134 (Paras 10, 11, 12, 14, 15 and 18). State of U.P. v. Ganga Ram, (2005) 13 SCC 239: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 154: AIR 2006 SC 20: (2006) 1 All LJ 298: 2005 Cri LJ 4643.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : H.K. Sema and P.P. Naolekar, JJ. [Date of decision : 25-10-2005]

Mithu Singh v. State of Punjab, (2001) 4 SCC 193: 2001 SCC (Cri) 668, considered

State of Rajasthan v. Kishan Singh, (2002) 10 SCC 160: 2004 SCC (Cri) 456, distinguished

[4074] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal before High Court against conviction — Rape case — High Court while acquitting the accused on benefit of doubt should be cautious to see that the doubt should be a reasonable doubt — It should not reverse the findings of guilt on the basis of irrelevant circumstances or mere technicalities — No person should be allowed to escape unpunished once guilt against him is proved

It is true that the golden thread which runs throughout the cobweb of criminal jurisprudence as administered in India is that nine guilty may escape but one innocent should not suffer. But at the same time no guilty should escape unpunished once the guilt has been proved to the hilt. An unmerited acquittal does no good to the society. If the prosecution has succeeded in making out a convincing case for recording a finding as to the accused being guilty, the court should not lean in favour of acquittal by giving weight to irrelevant or insignificant circumstances or by resorting to technicalities or by assuming doubts and giving benefit thereof where none exists. A doubt, as understood in criminal jurisprudence, has to be a reasonable doubt and not an excuse for a finding in favour of acquittal. An unmerited acquittal encourages wolves in the society being on the prowl for easy prey, more so when the victims of crime are helpless females. It is the spurt in the number of unmerited acquittals recorded by criminal courts which gives rise to the demand for death sentence to the rapists. The courts have to display a greater sense of responsibility and to be more sensitive while dealing with charges of sexual assault on women. (Para 9). State of Rajasthan v. N.K., (2000) 5 SCC 30: 2000 SCC (Cri) 898: AIR 2000 SC 1812: 2000 Cri LJ 2205.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : Dr. A.S. Anand, C.J. and R.C. Lahoti and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision : 30-3-2000]

Bharwada Bhoginbhai Hirjibhai v. State of Gujarat, (1983) 3 SCC 217: 1983 SCC (Cri) 728; State of Punjab v. Gurmeet Singh, (1996) 2 SCC 384: 1996 SCC (Cri) 316, relied on [4075] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal from conviction — High Court acquitting respondent-accused and setting aside their conviction recorded by trial court under Ss. 302/34 and 209 IPC — Sustainability — Accused R, S and C variously armed, alleged to have belaboured the deceased with their respective weapons, while he was returning after grazing the cattle, along with his wife (PW 1 and informant) and son (PW 7) — On hearing their shouts PW 4 and others gathered on the spot but all were chased away by the assailants, and victim dragged by his feet — PW 1 after some time going to the place of occurrence along with village chowkidar but could not find her husband although blood was found lying there — FIR lodged by PW 1 on next day at 9.15 a.m. — Body of victim discovered from a pond which was full of water after a month of the occurrence by village chowkidar — Dead body identified by PW 1 solely from the clothes worn by the corpse — PW 4 resiling from the statement made during investigation — Evidence of PW 1 found totally unreliable and full of discrepancies — Moreover, her relationship with deceased found doubtful because even though she claimed to be married to deceased, PW 7 stated that she was not living with the deceased on the relevant date — Besides, from the next day of murder she started staying with one I — No explanation offered for non-examination of village chowkidar — PW 7, aged 7/8 years appeared to be a tutored witness — Held, in such circumstances, judgment of High Court calls for no interference (Paras 1, 2, 3, 7, 8 and 10). State of U.P. v. Ram Veer Singh, (2007) 13 SCC 102: AIR 2007 SC 3075: (2007) 58 AIC 111 (SC): (2007) 5 All LJ 705.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. Arijit Pasayat and D.K. Jain, JJ. [Date of decision : 5-9-2007]

V.N. Ratheesh v. State of Kerala, (2006) 10 SCC 617: (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 50, relied on [4076] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal to High Court against conviction under S. 302, IPC and sentence of life imprisonment — Held, High Court not justified in enhancing the sentence by imposing additional sentence of fine of Rs 5000 and in default 2 years' RI without issuing show cause notice to the accused and without affording the accused opportunity to the heard — Hence the additional sentence set aside — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302. Surjit Singh v. State of Punjab, 1984 Supp SCC 518: 1985 SCC (Cri) 90: AIR 1984 SC 1910(2).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : D.A. Desai and Ranganath Misra, JJ. [Date of decision : 31-8-1984]

[4077] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal to Supreme Court against conviction — Court can take into account the circumstances of the case even if defence version found to be incorrect

Even if the defence version is incorrect, that itself cannot blind the court to the circumstances in which the offence was committed, the background in which it was committed and the ferocity of the attack and the weapon used. Jawahar Lal v. State of Punjab, (1983) 4 SCC 159: 1983 SCC (Cri) 805: AIR 1983 SC 284: 1983 Cri LJ 429.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : D.A. Desai and R.B. Misra, JJ. [Date of decision : 17-1-1983]

[4078] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Concurrent finding of guilt by trial court and High Court — Testimony of injured eyewitnesses fully corroborated by medical evidence and testimony of approvers also corroborated by other evidence establishing presence of those witnesses at the scene of occurrence — Trial court and High Court recording concurrent finding of guilt of accused-appellants — No infirmity in appreciation or assessment of evidence or approach of courts below as to relevant evidence pointed out — Held, there was no reason to upturn the finding of the courts — Constitution of India, Art. 134 — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302, 34 and 149. Kannan v. State of T.N., 1989 Supp (1) SCC 81: 1989 SCC (Cri) 184: AIR 1989 SC 396: 1989 Cri LJ 825.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.P. Thakkar and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision : 31-10-1988]

[4079] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Criminal appeal — Appeal against conviction — Supreme Court's interference with concurrent findings of trial court and High Court when called for — Reappreciation of evidence by Supreme Court — Place of occurrence as stated by prosecution witness different from that mentioned in FIR — Evidence regarding time of occurrence also not satisfactory — FIR prepared at hospital and handed over to police 7 hours after the occurrence and after victim's death without any convincing reason for the inordinate delay — Commencement of investigation also much delayed — Author of FIR a man of dubious character and his evidence completely tarnished — Eye witnesses highly inimical towards the accused and interested in prosecution and their testimony ambulatory and vacillating — Held, prosecution evidence unreliable, and it failed to establish the charges against the accused — Findings of courts below perverse — Hence Supreme Court's interference called for. Nain Singh v. State of U.P., (1991) 2 SCC 432: 1991 SCC (Cri) 421.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Ratnavel Pandian and M. Fathima Beevi, JJ. [Date of decision : 22-2-1991]

[4080] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Expeditious disposal of appeal — Direction by Supreme Court for — Delay incurred in proceedings — Appellant in custody for a long period — Relief — Hence, High Court requested to dispose of the appeal as expeditiously as possible — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 6). Satbir v. State of Haryana, (2006) 9 SCC 234: (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 553.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : B.P. Singh and S.H. Kapadia, JJ. [Date of decision : 5-9-2005]

[4081] — Ss. 374 and 386 — High Court unreasonably brushing aside truthful and compulsive testimony of witnesses on fanciful grounds and acquitting the accused — Trial court justified in accepting testimony of disinterested witnesses and convicting the accused — Conviction under S. 302 restored — Constitution of India — Art. 136 — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302. State of Kerala v. Bahuleyan, (1986) 4 SCC 124: 1986 SCC (Cri) 361: AIR 1987 SC 482: 1986 Cri LJ 1579.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.P. Thakkar and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision : 19-8-1986]

[4082] — Ss. 374 and 386 — High Court's order dismissing appeal against conviction without discussing the evidence not sustainable — Case remanded for fresh decision in accordance with law. Ram Karan v. State of Rajasthan, 1990 Supp SCC 604: 1991 SCC (Cri) 162.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : A.P. Sen and L.M. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision : 18-4-1988]

[4083] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Offence under Prevention of Corruption Act — Since case not proved beyond reasonable doubt, High Court reversing the conviction — Appreciation of evidence — Case not proved beyond reasonable doubt — Accused police officer alleged to have demanded and taken bribe for releasing complainant — Special Judge convicting accused-respondent — Complainant turning hostile — Statement of prosecution witness that he went to the police station on request of complainant's father to find out how the complainant was detained, held, was not sufficient to establish the demand made by the accused — In absence of the necessary ingredients of the office under S. 5(1)(d) as well as under S. 161 IPC, order of acquittal not interfered with — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 5(1)(d) and Penal Code, 1860, S. 161. State of M.P. v. J.B. Singh, 2000 SCC (Cri) 1507: AIR 2000 SC 3562.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision : 27-4-2000]

[4084] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Proper approach of the High Court in first appeal against conviction and sentence — Failure to consider and discuss evidence and deal with arguments raised at the bar — Held, judgment in appeal not sustainable — Case remanded for fresh disposal

On a plain requirement of justice, the High Court while dealing with a first appeal against conviction and sentence is expected to, howsoever briefly depending upon the facts of the case, consider and discuss the evidence and deal with the submissions raised at the bar. If it fails to do so, it apparently fails in the discharge of one of its essential jurisdiction under its appellate powers. (Para 4). Ishvarbhai Fuljibhai Patni v. State of Gujarat, (1995) 1 SCC 178: 1995 SCC (Cri) 222: (1995) 1 GCD 401.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. A.S. Anand and M.K. Mukherjee, JJ. [Date of decision : 24-11-1994]

[4085] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Suspension of sentence — Application for, by the convict, rejected by High Court — Incarceration of convict for long pending appeal not desirable — But where conviction by trial court is under S. 302, High Court would normally presume that the convict is guilty, though even so, it can consider whether it is a fit case for suspending the sentence — Striking a balance, petitioner permitted to move the High Court again for suspension of the sentence (Para 2). Akhilesh Kumar Sinha v. State of Bihar, (2000) 6 SCC 461: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1126.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K.T. Thomas and R.P. Sethi, JJ. [Date of decision : 13-4-2000]

[4086] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Trial court convicting the accused by a reasoned judgment after carefully considering the testimony of all the witnesses and the circumstances of the case — High Court's decision reversing trial court's acquittal order by wrongly rejecting the consistent, straightforward and cogent testimony of the independent witnesses without adequate reasons — Held, on facts, prosecution case proved beyond reasonable doubt and High Court's approach perverse — Hence trial court's order of conviction restored — Constitution of India — Art. 136. Abdul Razaq v. Nanhey, 1984 Supp SCC 15: 1984 SCC (Cri) 384: AIR 1984 SC 452: 1984 Cri LJ 185.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, O. Chinnappa Reddy and E.S. Venkataramiah, JJ. [Date of decision : 22-11-1983]

[4087] — Ss. 374 and 386 — Appeal against acquittal by High Court — Accused charged under Ss. 498-A and 306 IPC convicted by trial court under S. 498-A IPC — High Court, not finding any sufficient material which could establish that the husband "treated his deceased wife with cruelty", acquitting the accused — In view of the absence of any complaint against the husband in the letters written by the deceased, held, oral evidence of the deceased's brother was not adequate to maintain the conviction, under S. 498-A, against the husband — Order of acquittal by High Court not interfered with — Penal Code, 1860, S. 498-A. State of Maharashtra v. Ashok Narayan Dandalwar, (2000) 9 SCC 257: AIR 2000 SC 3568 (2).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik and S.N. Variava, JJ. [Date of decision : 27-4-2000]

[4088] — Ss. 374 and 395 — Practice of making wild and unfounded allegations against the Judges strongly deprecated. Vinod Kumar v. State of U.P., (1987) 2 SCC 623: 1987 SCC (Cri) 423: AIR 1987 SC 1501.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : A.P. Sen and B.C. Ray, JJ. [Date of decision : 21-4-1987]

— S. 374(1) See also Ss. 221 and 374(1)

[4089] — Ss. 374(1), 379 and 384 — Criminal appeals under — Constitutionality of procedure for ex parte hearing and summary dismissal under Or. 21, R. 15(1)(c) of Supreme Court Rules, 1966 read with S. 384, CrPC, 1973 — Held, not violative of Art. 21 if the rule is read down and in serious cases (i) full records of the case are placed before the Court; (ii) notice given to the opposite party; (iii) both parties heard; and (iv) reason recorded in the ultimate order — Relevant criteria and considerations for such deserving cases pointed out — Supreme Court (Enlargement of Criminal Appellate Jurisdiction) Act, 1970, S. 2(a) — Art. 145(1)(b) — Constitution of India, Art. 134

Per Krishna Iyer, Shinghal and Desai, JJ.:

The vires of Or. 21, R. 15(1)(c) of the Supreme Court Rules and also S. 384 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 is upheld but in their application both the provisions shall be restricted by certain criteria as a permissible exercise in constitutionalisation.

A single right of appeal is more or less a universal requirement of the guarantee of life and liberty rooted in the conception that men are fallible, that judges are men and that making assurance doubly sure, before irrevocable deprivation of life or liberty comes to pass, a full-scale re-examination of the facts and the law is made an integral part of fundamental fairness or procedure. Order 21, R. 15(1)(c) is an enabling provision, not a compulsive one.

In consequence it is reasonable to hold that before hearing the appeal under Art. 134(1) or appeal under S. 2*(a)* of the Supreme Court (Enlargement of Criminal Appellate Jurisdiction) Act, 1970 under R. 15(1)(c) of Or. 21, (i) ordinarily the records be sent for and are available; (ii) in the common run of cases the Court must issue notice to the opposite party, namely, the State and afford a hearing in the presence of both and with the records on hand; and (iii) reasons be recorded in the ultimate order.

But every right of appeal does not carry with it all the length of getting the record, hearing both sides and giving full reasons for decisions. The cases to which ex parte summary procedure will still apply are: Where the point of law urged is already covered by an earlier ruling of the Supreme Court; where the accused has pleaded guilty; where there is only a minor procedural irregularity; where the grounds, taken at their face value, are frivolous, vexatious, malicious, wholly dilatory or blatantly mendacious, the prolongation of an appeal is a premium on abuse of the process of court, and other such instances. This exceptional category is where, in all conscience, there is no point at all. In cases of real doubt the benefit of doubt goes to the appellant and notice goes to the adversary — even if the chances of allowance of the appeal be not bright.

Per Kailasam and Koshal, JJ.:

A right of appeal does not mean that before an appeal is disposed of the records should be called for, notice ordered to the other side, the other side heard and reasons given for the disposal of the appeal. An appeal to the Supreme Court under S. 374, Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 is restricted by the provisions of S. 384. The impugned R. 15(1)(c), Or. 21 more or less incorporates the provisions found in the Criminal Procedure Code. When the provision in the Criminal Procedure Code enabling the Court to dismiss an appeal summarily is not challenged, the impugned rule is equally unassailable. The contention of the accused that the right conferred on him under Art. 134(1)(a) and (b) of the Constitution and under the Supreme Court (Enlargement of Criminal Appellate Jurisdiction) Act, 1970, is curtailed is therefore without substance.

The impugned Rule is neither ultra vires Art. 145(1)(b) nor of any other statute.

The Rule does not offend Art. 21. Procedure established by law means the ordinary well-established Criminal Procedure, that is, those settled usages and normal modes of procedure sanctioned by the Criminal Procedure Code, which are the general law of criminal procedure in our country. The impugned procedure being the procedure prescribed under the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be assailed. Nor can it be said that the procedure prescribed by the Criminal Procedure Code is no procedure at all.

In fact Art. 21 cannot be invoked since a person convicted of an offence has no right of appeal unless such a right is conferred by the statute. If the statute does not confer a right of appeal the person has no remedy. A right of appeal is a statutory right which has got to be recognised by the Courts, and the right of appeal, where one exists, cannot be denied in exercise of the discretionary power even of the High Court. An appeal is a creature of the statute and the powers and the jurisdiction of the appellate Court must be circumscribed by the words of the statute. The powers and the jurisdiction of the Appellate Court as prescribed by the Criminal Procedure Code and the rule cannot be said to deny a right of hearing to the appellant. Taking into account the fact that the duty to decide the question where there are no sufficient grounds for interfering placed on highly placed judicial officers after affording a due hearing, it cannot be stated that the very right of appeal has been taken away. Sita Ram v. State of U.P., (1979) 2 SCC 656: 1979 SCC (Cri) 576: AIR 1979 SC 745: 1979 Cri LJ 659.

Bench Strength 5. Coram : V.R. Krishna Iyer[1], P.N. Shinghal[1], P.S. Kailasam[2], D.A. Desai[1] and A.D. Koshal[2], JJ. [Date of decision : 24-1-1979]

— S. 374(2) See Ss. 378(1) and 374(2)
See also Ss. 386 & 374(2)
See also Ss. 386, 374(2) and 366
See also Ss. 386, 374(2) and 368(c)
See also Ss. 386, 378 and 374(2)
See also Ss. 386(b), 374(2) and 218
See also Ss. 386(b)(iii), 374(2) and 377
See also Ss. 401 and 374(2)
See also Ss. 437 and 374(2)
See also Ss. 482, 374(2), 386 and 397

[4090] — S. 374(2) — Appeal against acquittal — Where the prosecution failed to prove common intention on the part of the accused persons, held, their conviction rightly set aside by the High Court — Penal Code, 1860, S. 34 — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 9). Bhura Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2003) 9 SCC 205.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Y.K. Sabharwal and H.K. Sema, JJ. [Date of decision : 7-8-2002]

[4091] — S. 374(2) — High Court as the first appellate court must analyse the evidence of eyewitnesses and other materials on record — High Court not doing so — Supreme Court going through the entire evidence on record and setting aside judgment of High Court in part. Raja Ram v. State of M.P., 1997 SCC (Cri) 908.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision : 16-1-1997]

[4092] — S. 374(2) — Proof beyond reasonable doubt — Necessity of — Prosecution failing to prove the case against appellants beyond reasonable doubt — Impropriety — On facts, in view of improbabilities, serious omissions and infirmities, interested nature of the evidence and other circumstances, held, prosecution has failed to prove the case against appellants beyond reasonable doubt — High Court erred in brushing aside serious infirmity in the prosecution case regarding non-explanation of the injuries sustained by A-2 and his wife, DW 3 and also not accepting the plea of right of private defence of the accused on unconvincing premises — Courts below were not correct in holding that A-2 had no right of private defence to his body or to the person of his wife — The evidence of DW 3, corroborated by the medical evidence, was so clear and cogent, so independent and disinterested, so probable, consistent and creditworthy that it has to be relied upon and accepted vis-à-vis the evidence of prosecution — Hence, conviction of appellants set aside — Fine imposed by trial court, if realised, to be paid back — Penal Code, 1860 — S. 302

In a case of murder, the trial court, on appreciation of the evidence, held the appellants guilty of the murder of the deceased A and, accordingly, convicted and sentenced accused A-1 and A-2 under Section 302 read with Section 34 IPC and A-3 under Section 302 IPC, imposing life imprisonment and fine with default stipulation. The appellants preferred an appeal under Section 374(2) CrPC before the High Court in which the High Court confirmed the conviction and sentence imposed upon the appellants. Hence the present appeal.

Allowing the appeal,

Held :

The incident, which resulted in the death of the deceased A, is not in dispute. PWs 2 and 3, the alleged eyewitnesses of the occurrence, are interested witnesses. They are brother and nephew respectively of the deceased. The prosecution has not examined any other witness in support of its case though it has come in the evidence of PW 3 that large number of persons were present at the scene of occurrence, who witnessed the incident. The defence of the accused A-2 corroborated by the evidence of his wife DW 3 appears to be more plausible than the rival version of the evidence of PWs 2 and 3. Despite searching lengthy cross-examination, the prosecution has failed to elicit any material to shatter and discredit the testimony of DW 3, wife of accused A-2. (Paras 11, 13 and 17)

The evidence of DW 3, corroborated by the medical evidence, is more probable, satisfactory and convincing than the evidence of PWs 2 and 3 who are interested witnesses and who have not given true genesis and origin of the occurrence in their testimony. Thus, non-explanation of the injuries on the person of the accused A-2 and his wife DW 3 supports the version of the defence that the accused A-2 inflicted single blow with rambi on the person of the deceased A, in private defence of his body and also the person of his wife, who had suffered several injuries at the hands of A with a weapon called kapa, though the injury received by the deceased turned out to be fatal in nature but it was not inflicted by the accused with the intention of causing death of the deceased or with the intention or knowledge that the injury would, in all probability, cause his death. Courts below were not correct in holding that the accused A-2 had no right of private defence to his body or to the person of his wife. (Paras 20 and 21)

The injuries on the person of the accused A-2 were simple in nature, whereas one injury found on the person of his wife DW 3 by the doctor was grievous in nature. The evidence of DW 3, corroborated by the medical evidence, is so clear and cogent, so independent and disinterested, so probable, consistent and creditworthy that it has to be relied upon and accepted vis-à-vis the evidence of the prosecution. (Para 21)

In the light of the evidence and in the background of the well-settled proposition of law and in view of the improbabilities, the serious omissions and infirmities, the interested nature of the evidence and other circumstances, it is clear that the prosecution has failed to prove the case against the appellants beyond reasonable doubt. The High Court was in error in brushing aside serious infirmity in the prosecution case regarding non-explanation of the injuries sustained by the accused A-2 and his wife DW 3 and also not accepting the plea of the right of defence of the accused on unconvincing premises. (Para 22)

The conviction of the appellants are set aside and are, accordingly, acquitted. Fine imposed by the trial court, if realised from the appellants, shall be paid back to them. (Paras 23 and 24). Babu Ram v. State of Punjab, (2008) 3 SCC 709: (2008) 2 SCC (Cri) 727: AIR 2008 SC 1260: (2008) 63 AIC 47 (SC): 2008 Cri LJ 1651.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : P.P. Naolekar and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision : 15-2-2008]

[4093] — S. 374(2) — Circumstances against the accused — Where appellant and deceased, his sister-in-law leaving together to go to the jungle and appellant returning alone; upon return appellant telling daughter of deceased that her mother would return later; giving statement in custody leading to discovery of body; record also showing that appellant gave false information stating that he never went to the jungle with deceased and that he did not know what had happened to her — Held, the false information was an additional link in the chain of circumstances completing the chain — There was no reason to interfere with the order of the High Court confirming the conviction — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 302 and 201 (Paras 4 and 5). Birbal v. State of M.P., (2000) 10 SCC 212.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : G.B. Pattanaik, M. Srinivasan and S.N. Phukan, JJ. [Date of decision : 30-9-1999]

[4094] — S. 374(2) — Appeal against conviction — Appreciation of evidence by High Court — Seals intact or broken — Trial court found the seals intact as deposed by official witnesses — High Court's conclusion that there was no evidence to show that seals were intact, held, is abrupt and therefore, unsustainable — Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, S. 17

It is to be noted that the trial court found that the seals were intact as deposed by the official witnesses. The High Court came to an abrupt conclusion that there was no evidence to show that the seals were intact. No such question was raised and on the contrary the trial court found that the evidence of official witnesses clearly establishes that the seals were intact. (Paras 12 and 13). State of Haryana v. Mai Ram, (2008) 8 SCC 292: (2008) 69 AIC 95 (SC).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. Arijit Pasayat and Dr. M.K. Sharma, JJ. [Date of decision : 31-7-2008]

[4095] — S. 374(2) — Question of fact raised for the first time in appeal — Scope of interference with — Appeal against conviction — Question of fact — Scope of interference by High Court — Appellant-accused contending for the first time before High Court that the date written on complaint made to CBI was different from that claimed by the prosecution — Since that was a question of fact, High Court could not have made out a new case regarding correctness of the date — Mere suggestions made before the trial court that the document was not prepared at the time alleged, held, could not sustain the said plea as there is a lot of difference between "time" and "date" — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, S. 27

Accused 1 and 2, respondents herein were two senior officers of Visakhapatnam Port Trust. Both of them were members of the Tender Opening Committee and were associated with the processing of the tender file which dealt with placement of purchase order for Assam Salwood Sleepers during the period September-December 1991. PW 1 was the power-of-attorney holder of a firm. That firm submitted its quotation through PW 1. The prosecution's case was that on 28-12-1991, A-1 and A-2 demanded bribe from PW 1 for clearing the file in favour of the said firm. On 30-12-1991, A-1 asked PW 1 to hand over the bribe money to him and A-2 the same day at the specified time and place. At the instance of PW 1, CBI registered a case and took up investigation. Both the accused were caught red-handed after they had demanded and accepted bribe amount of Rs 5000 each from PW 1 as a motive or reward for clearing the tender file in favour of the said firm. The tainted currency notes amounting to Rs 10,000 were recovered immediately from the polythene carrybag which was available with A-1. After obtaining sanction under Section 19(1)(c) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 (in short "the Act") from the Chairman of the Port Trust, a charge-sheet was filed under Sections 7 and 13(1)(d) r/w Section 13(2) of the Act and Section 120-B IPC. The accused denied their guilt. PWs and DWs were examined. PW 2 who was taken as witness to prove the acceptance and recovery of the money from PW 1 resiled partially from the statement given during investigation. The trial court held the accused persons guilty and sentenced them to undergo two years' RI and to pay a fine of Rs 1000. It awarded similar custodial punishment and imposed a fine of Rs 2000 under Section 120-B IPC. However, the A.P. High Court set aside the conviction and directed acquittal. The High Court noticed that the so-called complaint before CBI was dated 20-12-1991 while the prosecution claimed the same to have been made on 30-12-1991. That PW 2 who was one of the mediators did not support the prosecution version completely. That there was no consistent evidence to substantiate the alleged demand. That the accused persons being only members of the Tender Committee, possibility of making a demand was not there. The State then filed the present appeals.

The appellant State contended that the High Court had failed to take into consideration the legal position regarding presumptions. That the High Court had made out a new case regarding the alleged discrepancy in the date of complaint which had not been even pleaded by the accused before the trial court. That evidence of PW 1 clearly established the demand and recovery of money. That direct evidence was not necessary to show the acceptance of money. However, in respect of the discrepancy in the date of the complaint the respondents submitted that suggestion to that effect had been made before the trial court.

The evidence of PW 1 coupled with that of PWs 3 and 5 is sufficient to bring home the accusations. Further, the High Court has made out a new case about the alleged date of complaint. A bare reading of the contents of the complaint and the date put in the complaint clearly shows that the High Court was not correct in saying that the date of the document was 20-12-1991. Additionally, this plea was not raised before the trial court. There was even no suggestion about that aspect. What was suggested was that the documents were not prepared at the time they were claimed to be. There is a gulf of difference between "time" and "date". In any event such a plea had not been taken before the courts below. It being essentially a question of fact, the High Court could not have made out a new case regarding correctness of the date. Besides, the views of the High Court were also not correct when the document is itself looked at. (Para 27)

Therefore, the High Court was not justified in directing acquittal. Custodial sentence of one year for each of the proved offences would meet the ends of justice, with the fine and default stipulation stipulated by the trial court. (Para 28). State of A.P. v. C. Uma Maheswara Rao, (2004) 4 SCC 399: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1276: AIR 2004 SC 2042: 2004 Cri LJ 2040.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Doraiswamy Raju and Arijit Pasayat, JJ. [Date of decision : 31-3-2004]

Chaturdas Bhagwandas Patel v. State of Gujarat, (1976) 3 SCC 46: 1976 SCC (Cri) 351, followed

[4096] — Ss. 374(2) and 26(a)(ii) — Appeal — Right to — In cases other than covered by S. 49-E(2), Electricity Act held, the accused has a right of appeal to High Court against the conviction recorded by Special Court — Electricity Act, 1910, Ss. 49-E(1) & (2) and 49-F (as ins. by A.P. Act 35 of 2000)

From Sections 49-C(1) & (2), 49-E and 49-F as inserted by the amending Act and Sections 374(2) and 26(a)(ii), CrPC, it follows that except for such category of cases which are covered by Section 49-E(2) of the amending Act, there would be a right of appeal to the High Court against a conviction recorded by the Special Court. (Para 16). Transmission Corpn. of A.P. v. Ch. Prabhakar, (2004) 5 SCC 551: 2004 SCC (Cri) 1681.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Rajendra Babu, C.J. and G.P. Mathur, J. [Date of decision : 26-5-2004]

[4097] — Ss. 374(2) and 386 — Appeal to High Court against conviction — Plea of self-defence main basis of the memorandum of appeal — High Court erred in not considering the said plea which went to the root of the matter (Para 13). Krishnan v. State of T.N., (2006) 11 SCC 304: AIR 2006 SC 3037: 2006 Cri LJ 3907.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : G.P. Mathur and R.V. Raveendran, JJ. [Date of decision : 14-8-2006]

[4098] — Ss. 374(2) and 386 — Sentencing — Applicability of statutory standard for, on appellate court as applicable to trial court — Reduction of sentence below the statutory minimum — Need for recording "adequate and special reasons" — Applicability to High Court — Held, what is applicable to trial courts regarding recording of reasons for a departure from minimum statutory sentence is equally applicable to High Court in reducing the sentence in appeal — Penal Code, 1860 — Ss. 376(1) & (2) provisos

What is applicable to the trial courts regarding recording reasons for a departure from minimum sentence is equally applicable to the High Court. The only reason indicated by the High Court in the present case is the young age of the accused and the fact that he belongs to a Scheduled Tribe. The same can by no stretch of imagination be considered either adequate or special. The requirement in law is cumulative. (Para 18). State of M.P. v. Santosh Kumar, (2006) 6 SCC 1: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 1: AIR 2006 SC 2648.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Arijit Pasayat and L.S. Panta, JJ. [Date of decision : 14-7-2006]

[4099] — S. 374(3) — Subsequent events taking place during the pendency of appeal — On facts, held, were to be taken into account by the appellate court while disposing of the appeal — Compromise — Settlement between parties during pendency of appeal in Sessions Court against conviction and sentence of imprisonment and fine under S. 138, NI Act, 1881 — Pursuant to such settlement the convicted party depositing the cheque amount with the trial court — Relief — In such circumstances, Supreme Court directing the Sessions Court to take the said events into account and pass such order as it may deem fit in the appeal — Moreover, in view of the complainant-respondent's statement before Supreme Court that if permitted to withdraw the said amount he would not press before the Sessions Court for conviction or sentence, Supreme Court permitting him to withdraw the said amount and directing the Sessions Court to consider whether in such circumstances, conviction was to be maintained or an order imposing fine was to be passed — Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 138 (Paras 7, 9 and 10). Cranex Ltd. v. Nagarjuna Finance Ltd., (2000) 7 SCC 388: 2000 SCC (Cri) 1388: AIR 2000 SC 3145.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M. Jagannadha Rao and M.B. Shah, JJ. [Date of decision : 14-9-2000]

[4100] — S. 374(3)(a) — Appeal against conviction — Mode of disposal of — Lower appellate court not applying mind to the factual aspects of the case and merely considering the question of quantum of sentence — Such disposal of appeal, held, resulted in denial of opportunity to the appellants to agitate their case on facts — Denial of statutory right of appeal offends Arts. 21 and 14 of the Constitution — Hence, matter rendered back to the said appellate court to hear and decide the appeals on merits — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 420, 477-A, 468, 109 & 409 — Constitution of India — Arts. 21 and 14 (Para 8). K. Pandurangan v. S.S.R. Velusamy, (2003) 8 SCC 625: AIR 2003 SC 3318.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : N. Santosh Hegde and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 18-9-2003]

A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, (1988) 2 SCC 602: 1988 SCC (Cri) 372, relied on

— S. 375 See Ss. 372 to 382

— S. 376 See Ss. 372 to 382

See also Ss. 386 and 376

[4101] — Ss. 376, 384 and 397 — Procedure regarding appeal under S. 11, Special Courts Act, has wider and more advantageous scope than that prescribed under CrPC, 1973 — Absence of any provision for revision does not create any procedural disadvantage — Special Courts Act, 1979, S. 11

An appeal being a creature of statute, an accused has no inherent right to appeal to a particular tribunal. The legislature may choose any tribunal for the purpose of giving a right of appeal. Moreover, an appeal to the High Court is less advantageous than an appeal to the Supreme Court as an appeal to the High Court under the Code of Criminal Procedure is attended with the risk of being summarily dismissed under S. 384. On the other hand, an appeal to the Supreme Court is governed by S. 11(1). Such an appeal lies as of right both on facts and on law. Thus, the right conferred on a convict by S. 11(1) is wider and less restricted than the right of appeal given by the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973.

Moreover, if the appeal is filed before the Supreme Court or is transferred thereto, the accused becomes entitled to a hearing of his case by the highest court in the country both on facts and on law and thus gets a far greater advantage than a right to move the court for grant of special leave which may or may not be granted, it being a matter of discretion to be exercised by the Supreme Court.

If the Sessions Judge were to try an accused and sentence him to fine or to imprisonment not exceeding three months, he would have no right of appeal at all, under S. 376 CrPC, 1973. On the other hand, if a Special Judge imposes the same sentence, an appeal lies to the Supreme Court as of right both on facts and on law.

In such circumstances the right of appeal provided by the Act cannot be said to be harsher or less advantageous to the accused. V.C. Shukla v. State (Delhi Admn.), 1980 Supp SCC 249: 1980 SCC (Cri) 849: AIR 1980 SC 1382 (Judgmen: 1980 Cri LJ 965.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : S. Murtaza Fazal Ali, P.S. Kailasam and A.D. Koshal, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-4-1980]

[4102] — Ss. 376 and 386 — Appeal before High Court against acquittal — When the view taken by trial court found by the High Court to be manifestly wrong and would lead to miscarriage of justice, High Court entitled to set aside the acquittal and convict the accused. Arun Kumar v. State of U.P., 1989 Supp (2) SCC 322: 1990 SCC (Cri) 173: AIR 1989 SC 1445: 1989 Cri LJ 1460.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Natarajan and Kuldip Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 13-4-1989]

— S. 377 See Ss. 354(3), 377 and 386

See also Ss. 372 to 382

See also Ss. 386 and 377

See also Ss. 386(b)(iii), 374(2) and 377

See also Ss. 397, 377 & 401

See also Ss. 397, 401, 374, 377 and 386

[4103] — S. 377 — Scope and nature

Section 377 does not exclude revisional jurisdiction of the High Court to act suo motu for enhancement of sentence in appropriate cases. What is an appropriate case has to be left to the discretion of the High Court.

The provisions under S. 401 read with S. 386(c)(iii) CrPC, 1973 are clearly supplemental to those under S. 377 whereby appeals are provided for against inadequacy of sentence at the instance of the State Government or Central Government, as the case may be. Nadir Khan v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1975) 2 SCC 406: 1975 SCC (Cri) 622: AIR 1976 SC 2205: 1976 Cri LJ 1721.

Bench Strength 1. Coram : P.K. Goswami, J. [Date of decision : 3-6-1975]

[4104] — S. 377 — Prosecution only entitled to urge for inadequacy of sentence and not for its enhancement on ground of the offence being of graver kind

In an appeal against inadequacy of sentence it is not permissible to alter the conviction to an aggravated category of offence for which the accused was not convicted. While the accused in such an appeal under S. 377, Criminal Procedure Code can show that he is innocent of the offence, the prosecution is not entitled to show that he is guilty of a graver offence and on that basis the sentence should be enhanced. The prosecution will only be able to urge that the sentence is inadequate on the charge as found or even on an altered less grave charge. Eknath Shankarrao Mukkawar v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 3 SCC 25: 1977 SCC (Cri) 410: AIR 1977 SC 1177: (1977) 3 SCR 513: 1977 MLJ (Cri) 421: 1977 Cri LJ 964.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : Y.V. Chandrachud, P.K. Goswami and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision : 12-4-1977]

[4105] — S. 377 — Appeal before High Court against unconscionably lenient or 'flea-bite' sentences — High Court's refusal to interfere with the sentences imposed by the trial court on ground of long pendency of the appeal causing mental agony to the accused, held, unjustified — Considerations of undue sympathy in such case will lead to miscarriage of justice and undermine conscience of the public in efficacy of criminal judicial system . State of Karnataka v. Krishna, (1987) 1 SCC 538: 1987 SCC (Cri) 198: AIR 1987 SC 861: 1987 Cri LJ 776.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : A.P. Sen and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision : 21-1-1987]

[4106] — S. 377 — Court's interference with sentence — When called for — Drastic reduction in sentence especially in murder cases not justified — Constitution of India — Art. 136

It is the duty of the court to impose a proper punishment. To allow the respondent to escape with payment of a fine of Rs 10,000 will deprive the law of its effectiveness and result in travesty of justice. Such drastic reduction to sentence in murder cases, apart from creating law and order problems, would be repugnant to the basic concepts of criminal justice. In dealing with a sentence which has been made the subject of an appeal, the court will interfere with a sentence only where it is erroneous in principle. The fact that the respondent acted in a heat of passion without any intention to cause the death of the deceased was a sufficient ground for a lesser punishment, but it could not be a ground for remitting the entire sentence and substituting it with a fine. The High Court failed to appreciate the desirability of imposing a proper punishment as a measure of social necessity, as a means of deterring other potential offenders. State of Haryana v. Prabhu, 1987 Supp SCC 177: 1988 SCC (Cri) 51(2).

Bench Strength 2. Coram : A.P. Sen and S. Natarajan, JJ. [Date of decision : 15-12-1986]

[4107] — S. 377 — Sentence — Accused, a bank employee, drawing a sum of Rs 8400 by utilising signed cheque leaves of co-accused — Sentence of imprisonment till rising of court and a fine of Rs 1000, held, inadequate — However, in view of long lapse of time no interference by Supreme Court called for — Constitution of India — Art. 136 — Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 5(2) and (1)(d). State of Karnataka v. M. Obanna, 1989 Supp (2) SCC 199: 1990 SCC (Cri) 49.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S. Natarajan and Kuldip Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 29-3-1989]

[4108] — S. 377 — Appeal against sentence — Where Magistrate releases accused on probation under S. 4 of U.P. First Offenders' Probation Act, 1938, appeal will lie before Sessions Court under S. 11(2) and not before High Court under S. 377(1) CrPC — Probation of Offenders Act, 1958, S. 11(2)

In a case where the conviction is recorded by the trial court but instead of awarding sentence of imprisonment the convict is released on probation under the provisions of the relevant special law then it is a case where no sentence at all has been awarded and as such S. 377(1) is not attracted. The respondent has been released on probation under S. 4 of the U.P. First Offenders' Probation Act. Section 11(2) specifically provides that an appeal against an order under S. 3 or 4 of the Act shall lie to the court to which the appeals ordinarily lie from the sentences of the trial court which obviously means the next superior court in the hierarchy. Ordinarily, appeals lie from the sentences awarded by the Magistrate to the Court of Session. Therefore, the appeal filed by State of U.P. before the High Court in this case was incompetent. (Para 5). State of U.P. v. Nand Kishore Misra, 1991 Supp (2) SCC 473: AIR 1991 SC 763: 1991 Cri LJ 456.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Kuldip Singh and K. Ramaswamy, JJ. [Date of decision : 14-11-1990]

[4109] — S. 377 — Enhancement of sentence by Supreme Court in appeal under — Even in absence of an appeal by Govt. specially for that purpose and in absence of revisional power such as that available to High Court and Sessions Court under CrPC, held, Supreme Court has power under Art. 142 r/w S. 19 to enhance the sentence for doing complete justice in the matter when in the circumstances of the case it appears it to be too inadequate — Constitution of India, Art. 142 — Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987, S. 19

It was contended that the Supreme Court has no power to enhance sentence in the absence of an appeal by the Government presented specifically for that purpose more so because the Supreme Court has no revisional powers which the High Court and Court of Session are conferred with by the Criminal Procedure Code.

Held :

Powers of the Supreme Court in appeals filed under Article 136 of the Constitution are not restricted by the appellate provisions enumerated under the Code of Criminal Procedure or any other statute. When exercising appellate jurisdiction, the Supreme Court has power to pass any order.

However, the present appeals have not been filed under Article 136 of the Constitution, but under Section 19 of TADA. Hence while dealing with a statutory appeal, plenary powers of the Supreme Court cannot be exercised. But even otherwise the Supreme Court has wide and residual powers to deal with a situation like this, which are well enclosed in Article 142 of the Constitution.

Supreme Court's powers under Article 142 of the Constitution are vastly broad-based. That power in its exercise is circumscribed only by two conditions, first is, that it can be exercised only when Supreme Court otherwise exercises its jurisdiction and the other is that the order which Supreme Court passes must be necessary for doing complete justice in the cause or matter pending before it. The first condition is satisfied here as the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is exercisable by virtue of Section 19 of TADA. Chandrakant Patil v. State, (1998) 3 SCC 38: 1998 SCC (Cri) 720: AIR 1998 SC 1165.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision : 2-2-1998]

[4110] — S. 377 — Sentence — Quantum of — Conviction of Manager of the factory for offence under — Sentence of six months' RI and a fine of Rs 75,000 imposed by the High Court in appeal against sentence is unduly harsh — Trial court was also not justified in imposing a fine Rs 750 only while convicting the appellant on his plea of guilt — Held, having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, particularly the fact that the appellant was Manager and not owner of the factory, substantive sentence set aside and fine reduced to Rs 20,000 which should be paid to the injured worker — Such payment shall be without prejudice to his right to claim other compensation to which he may be entitled — Factories Act, 1948, S. 92. Jivanbhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (1997) 10 SCC 329: 1997 SCC (L&S) 1695.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.K. Mukherjee and S.P. Kurdukar, JJ. [Date of decision : 4-4-1997]

[4111] — Ss. 377 and 386 — Quantum of sentence — Scope of interference in appeal — Wife committed suicide after a family quarrel — Trial court convicted appellant under Ss. 306 and 498-A IPC, sentenced to four years' imprisonment — High Court relying on two letters observed appellant's quarrelsome and aggressive nature — Sentence enhanced from four to six years — Held, enhancement was not justified on account of appellant's quarrelsome nature — Interference with quantum of sentence should be rare and only in exceptional cases — There was no misbehaviour on part of appellant over a period of time — Incident was a spontaneous one arising out of a family quarrel in the morning — Two letters written about a year before incident, have little value in light of dying declaration — Appellant had undergone about four years of sentence — Appeal allowed — Trial court's judgment restored — Penal Code, 1860, Ss. 306 and 498-A (Paras 2 to 8). Ravindra Tukaram Hiwale v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 13 SCC 253.

Bench Strength 2. Coram: H.S. Bedi and C.K. Prasad, JJ. [Date of decision: 2-8-2010]

[4112] — Ss. 377 and 386(c) — Enhancement of sentence — High Court's power to interfere with discretion of trial Court — Adequate reasons must be given and not merely the vague phrase 'ends of justice'

The High Court has the power to supersede the trial court's discretion with regard to sentence provided there is error in principle or there is perverse exercise or like faux pas is pointed out and the reasons are stated.

In the present case, except by referring to the vague term "ends of justice", the High Court's substantial enhancement of the sentence does not amount to a speaking order giving reasons, because, none of the reasons which have been stated by the trial Court have been expressly dissented from by the High Court, and the reasons given by the trial court are certainly pertinent to the question of sentence. Lingala Vijay Kumar v. Public Prosecutor, (1978) 4 SCC 196: 1978 SCC (Cri) 579: AIR 1978 SC 1485: 1978 Cri LJ 1527.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : V.R. Krishna Iyer, D.A. Desai and O. Chinnappa Reddy, JJ. [Date of decision : 2-8-1978]

[4113] — Ss. 377 and 386(c) — Appeal against sentence on ground of inadequacy — Power of High Court to enhance sentence from life imprisonment to death sentence — Trial court giving detailed reasons for not choosing to award capital punishment — Reasons given by trial court not perverse or unreasonable — High Court not justified in taking a different view and after five years of trial court's judgment enhancing the sentence from life imprisonment to that of death sentence

There is undoubtedly power of enhancement available with the High Court which, however, has to be sparingly exercised. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to in which case the High Court may enhance the sentence from life imprisonment to death. Each case depends on its own facts and on a variety of factors.

In the instant case the trial court dealt with the question of sentence elaborately and came to the conclusion that the sentence of imprisonment for life would meet the ends of justice. Therefore, the trial court did not merely, by a cursory order, impose the sentence of life imprisonment and used its discretion not to award the capital sentence of death for detailed reasons recorded by it. The reasons given by the trial court cannot be said to be wholly unsatisfactory or irrelevant much less perverse. The High Court differed with the reasoning of the trial court and almost five years after the judgment had been pronounced by the trial court proceeded to enhance the sentence from life imprisonment to that of death sentence. The High Court also gave its own reasons in support of its view on the question of sentence. The High Court, however, did not opine that the reasons given by the Sessions Judge were perverse or so unreasonable as no court could have advanced the same. It took a different view of the legislative policy as also of the law laid down by this Court and referred to some other judgments of the Supreme Court also in support of its "reasons" to impose the sentence of death. The view taken by the High Court, it can legitimately be said is also a possible view.

In the peculiar facts and circumstances of this case, when the occurrence took place almost 10 years ago and for the last more than 6 years the spectre of death has been hanging over the head of the appellant the High Court should not have enhanced the sentence from life imprisonment to death because for exercising its discretion in choosing the sentence the trial court had given elaborate reasons which it cannot be said no judicial mind could advance. Only because the High Court looked at those reasons differently did not justify the enhancement of sentence to death sentence. Jashubha Bharatsinh Gohil v. State of Gujarat, (1994) 4 SCC 353: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1193.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : K. Jayachandra Reddy and Dr. A.S. Anand, JJ. [Date of decision : 13-4-1994]

Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab, 1954 SCR 145: AIR 1953 SC 364: 1953 Cri LJ 1465, considered

[4114] — Ss. 377 and 386(c) — Appeal for enhancement of sentence — Power to enhance sentence of life imprisonment to death must be sparingly exercised in rarest of rare cases for special reasons to be recorded — On facts and in circumstances of the case, High Court not justified in enhancing the sentence of life imprisonment to death

The reasons given by the High Court to enhance the sentence of life imprisonment to death, without taking into account all circumstances and balancing the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances are neither 'special reasons' nor otherwise adequate and sufficient to impose the sentence of death on either of the three convicts. Anshad v. State of Karnataka, (1994) 4 SCC 381: 1994 SCC (Cri) 1204.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Dr. A.S. Anand and Faizan Uddin, JJ. [Date of decision : 22-4-1994]

— S. 377 r/w S. 386(c) See S. 397 r/w S. 401 and S. 377 r/w S. 386(c)

[4115] — Ss. 377(1) and (2) — State Government has power to file appeal against inadequacy of sentence for offences under Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, as Central Government has not empowered an agency to investigate as required by S. 377(2)

The Legislature has maintained a watertight dichotomy while dealing with the matter of appeal against inadequacy of sentence. In the absence of the word 'also' found in S. 378, it cannot be read with S. 377 and it cannot be held that both the State and Central Governments have a right of appeal against inadequacy of sentence in all matters.

But, in the absence of any express provision in the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, empowering some agency to make investigation under that Act, S. 377(2), Criminal Procedure Code is not attracted and therefore the appeal under S. 377(1), by the State Government is competent.

Under S. 377(1), by using the words 'Save as otherwise provided in sub-section (2)' the State Government has a right of appeal against inadequacy of sentence in all cases other than those referred to in sub-section (2). Section 377(2) confers a right of appeal on the Central Government against inadequacy of sentence in 2 cases, namely, (a) where investigation is conducted by the Delhi Special Police Establishment; and (b) where investigation is conducted by any other agency empowered to make investigation under any Central Act other than the Criminal Procedure Code. In other words, just like S. 3 of the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act, 1946, there should be an express provision in the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act empowering the making of investigation under the Act. But there is no such express provision in the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act. It is true that some powers exercised by the Food Inspectors under S. 10 of that Act, are included in the investigating powers of the police, but the Food Inspectors have no power of arrest of offenders unless such offenders refuse to give their names and addresse. It is only on receipt of the Analyst's report certifying that an article is adulterated that the Food Inspector can submit a report to the Magistrate, for taking cognizance of the offence and his report will have to be accompanied by the written consent of the appropriate authority under S. 20. Therefore, Food Inspectors are not empowered to make investigation under the Act. Eknath Shankarrao Mukkawar v. State of Maharashtra, (1977) 3 SCC 25: 1977 SCC (Cri) 410: AIR 1977 SC 1177: (1977) 3 SCR 513: 1977 MLJ (Cri) 421: 1977 Cri LJ 964.

Bench Strength 3. Coram : Y.V. Chandrachud, P.K. Goswami and P.N. Shinghal, JJ. [Date of decision : 12-4-1977]

— S. 377(2) See also Ss. 377(1) & (2)

[4116] — S. 377(2) — Any other agency — Scope — Officers of the Customs Department (Assistant Collector of Central Excise in this case) whether covered — Question left open. CCE v. V. Krishnamoorthy, (1997) 3 SCC 100: 1997 SCC (Cri) 430: AIR 1997 SC 1904: (1997) 90 ELT 285: (1997) 1 An LT (Cri) 526: 1997 Cri LJ 1930.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.M. Punchhi and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision : 20-2-1997]

[4117] — Ss. 377(2), 24(8) and 401 — Appeal by Government for enhancement of sentence — Maintainability — Conversion of non-maintainable appeal into revision — Permissibility — "Public Prosecutor" — Scope — Special Public Prosecutor, held, covered — Hence, High Court erred in holding that appeal under S. 377(2) was not maintainable merely because it was filed by Special Public Prosecutor and not by Public Prosecutor — However, since the Special Public Prosecutor, who had filed the said appeal, had not been empowered by the Central Government to file such an appeal, and taking into consideration the contentions raised, Supreme Court found the case to be a fit one for exercise of revisional jurisdiction — Hence, Supreme Court directing the High Court to treat the appeal filed by Special Public Prosecutor as a revision application and decide the same on merits (Paras 5 to 8). CCE v. Sabnife Power Systems Ltd., (2002) 9 SCC 389: (2002) 142 ELT 521.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.B. Shah and B.N. Agrawal, JJ. [Date of decision : 12-2-2002]

[4118] — Ss. 377(2) and 378(4) — Locus standi — Appeal under S. 377(2) filed on the ground of inadequacy of sentence by Central Government Public Prosecutor under direction from the complainant (Assistant Collector of Central Excise), held, incompetent — Although the complainant can maintain an appeal against acquittal under S. 378(4), direction to file an appeal under S. 377(2) can be given only by the Central Government and not by the complainant. CCE v. V. Krishnamoorthy, (1997) 3 SCC 100: 1997 SCC (Cri) 430: AIR 1997 SC 1904: (1997) 90 ELT 285: (1997) 1 An LT (Cri) 526: 1997 Cri LJ 1930.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.M. Punchhi and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision : 20-2-1997]

— S. 377(3) See also Ss. 401, 377(3), 397 & 386

[4119] — S. 377(3) — Appeal for enhancement of sentence — What constitutes an appeal for enhancement of sentence — Appeal preferred by State for setting aside the order passed by the High Court imposing a sentence which was less than the minimum sentence (7 years in this case) prescribed under the Act — Held, the said appeal in effect is for enhancement of the sentence of the accused because if the sentence is found to be illegal and set aside and appropriate sentence is imposed, it would result in the enhancement of the sentence — Constitution of India — Art. 136 (Para 6). State of Rajasthan v. Kishanlal, (2002) 5 SCC 424: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1149: AIR 2002 SC 2250: 2002 Cri LJ 2963.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Y.K. Sabharwal and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 10-5-2002]

[4120] — S. 377(3) — Extraordinary appellate jurisdiction of Supreme Court under Art. 136, in relation to criminal matters — Scope — Provisions of S. 377(3) CrPC do not apply to an appeal under Art. 136 — However, Supreme Court keeps in mind the principles analogous to those found in CrPC including those under S. 377(3), apart from Supreme Court Rules, in order to make the procedure a "fair procedure" — Constitution of India — Art. 136

It was contended that if the Supreme Court is inclined to go into the merits of the State appeal (in this case preferred under Article 136) then it should consider the effect of Section 377(3) read with Section 386(c)(iii) CrPC. It was argued that in the event of the appellate court entertaining an appeal of the State against sentence then it is open to the accused not only to show cause against the enhancement of such sentence but also to plead for his complete acquittal or for reduction of the sentence. It was also pointed out that in view of the provisions of Section 386 of the Code, it is open to the Supreme Court as an appellate court in an appeal for enhancement of sentence to alter the sentence also.

Rejecting the contention,

Held :

Section 377(3) CrPC is applicable only when the matter is before the High Court and the same is not applicable to the Supreme Court when an appeal for enhancement of sentence is made under Article 136 of the Constitution. An appeal to the Supreme Court in criminal matters is not provided under the Code except in cases covered by Section 379 CrPC. An appeal to the Supreme Court under Article 136 is not the same as a statutory appeal under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973. The Supreme Court under Article 136 is not a regular court of appeal which an accused can approach as of right. It is an extraordinary jurisdiction which is exercisable only in exceptional cases when the Supreme Court is satisfied that it should interfere to prevent a grave or serious miscarriage of justice, as distinguished from mere error in appreciation of evidence. While exercising this jurisdiction, the Supreme Court is not bound by the rules of procedure as applicable to the courts below. The Supreme Court's jurisdiction under Article 136 is limited only by its own discretion. Section 377(3) CrPC in terms does not apply to an appeal under Article 136. (Para 10)

However, this does not mean that the Supreme Court will be unmindful of the principles analogous to those found in the Criminal Procedure Code including those under Section 377(3) CrPC while moulding a procedure for the disposal of an appeal under Article 136. Apart from the Supreme Court Rules applicable for the disposal of the criminal appeals in the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court also adopts such analogous principles found in the Criminal Procedure Code so as to make the procedure a "fair procedure" depending on the facts and circumstances of the case. (Para 11)

In the instant case both the trial court and the High Court have considered the entire material on record and have concurrently found the respondents guilty of the offence they are charged of. As against the said conviction and sentence, the respondents had preferred a substantive special leave petition under Article 136 before the Supreme Court which was dismissed on merits, and the respondents have not chosen to prefer any review petition against the said dismissal order. In this background it is not appropriate to accede to this request of the respondents because neither the facts and circumstances of the case nor the public interest requires the Supreme Court to do so. (Para 12). State of U.P. v. Dharmendra Singh, (1999) 8 SCC 325: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1425: AIR 1999 SC 3789:

Bench Strength 2. Coram : S.S.M. Quadri and N. Santosh Hegde, JJ. [Date of decision : 21-9-1999]

Nihal Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1965 SC 26: (1965) 1 Cri LJ 105; Chandrakant Patil v. State through CBI, (1998) 3 SCC 38: 1998 SCC (Cri) 720, relied on

U.J.S. Chopra v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 633: 1955 Cri LJ 1410, distinguished [4121] — S. 377(3) — Applicability of, to an appeal under Art. 136 of the Constitution — Despite the provision being inapplicable, the court can allow the accused to argue for an acquittal in the appeal preferred by the State for enhancement of the sentence by adopting analogous provision found in S. 377(3) CrPC — Constitution of India — Art.136 (Paras 10 and 12). State of Rajasthan v. Kishanlal, (2002) 5 SCC 424: 2002 SCC (Cri) 1149: AIR 2002 SC 2250: 2002 Cri LJ 2963.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : Y.K. Sabharwal and B.P. Singh, JJ. [Date of decision : 10-5-2002]

State of U.P. v. Dharmendra Singh, (1999) 8 SCC 325: 1999 SCC (Cri) 1425, relied on

[4122] — S. 377(3) — Appeal by Government against inadequacy of sentence — Accused's right to plead for his acquittal — Held, available only at the stage of appeal preferred by Govt. to High Court — Once Supreme Court in appeal already confirmed the conviction of the accused under S. 5 of TADA after considering in detail the contentions raised by the accused and further dismissed the review petition filed by accused, no further opportunity can be afforded to the accused in appeal before Supreme Court under S. 19 of TADA to plead for his acquittal by reviewing the findings already made — Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987, Ss. 19 & 5

The right envisaged in Section 377(3) of the present Code shall be confined to appeals presented by the Government to the High Court against sentence on the ground of its inadequacy. There is no scope to afford a further opportunity in the appeal, at this stage, since the finding of the trial court has already been considered elaborately by re-evaluating the entire evidence in the light of the elaborate arguments canvassed on behalf of the parties. A repetition of the whole process over again is, apart from waste of time of this Court, unnecessary and unwarranted by law. Chandrakant Patil v. State, (1998) 3 SCC 38: 1998 SCC (Cri) 720: AIR 1998 SC 1165.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : M.K. Mukherjee and K.T. Thomas, JJ. [Date of decision : 2-2-1998]

[4123] — S. 377(3) — Appeal by State for enhancement of sentence — Right of accused in — Scope — Held, in said appeal, the accused is entitled to be heard for his acquittal (Para 3). Arun Balkrishna Nirmal v. State of Maharashtra, (2006) 6 SCC 429: (2006) 3 SCC (Cri) 175.

Bench Strength 2. Coram : B.N. Srikrishna and Tarun Chatterjee, JJ. [Date of decision : 11-5-2006]

End of Volume 1

Purchased:
Approval:
Gratis: 027191
Acc No.:
Price:
6300/-
"Narayan Rao Melgiri"
National Law Library
Bangalore

CHECKED
AS.

NATIONAL LAW SCHOOL OF INDIA
UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
NAGARABHAVI, BANGALORE - 560 072.
This book must be returned by the date stamped below

4/8/K-T689

587/10/11/13/

P.T.O.

Subscribe today!

Supreme Court Cases™ (Criminal)

Supreme Court Cases™ (Cri) provides extensive coverage of all reportable and non-reportable cases of the Supreme Court of India on criminal matters, including many cases not reported elsewhere. Supreme Court Cases™ (Cri) is widely regarded by both practitioners and academics as the most reliable source of reference for Supreme Court criminal cases.

Chief Editor:

Surendra Malik

B.Sc. (Hons.), LL.M. (Columbia), Gold Medallist,
Advocate, Supreme Court

Annual Subscription for 2011

Book Post† .. ₹ 1625
Regd. Post .. ₹ 1829

pply by Book-Post is at subscriber's risk

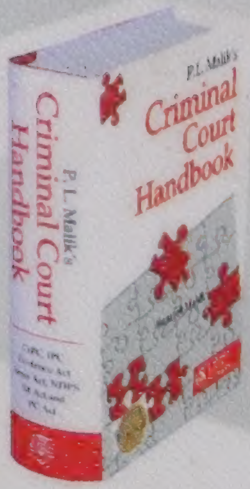
Back Volumes Available

Full set from 1970 to 2010 and
1 volume of 2011 (in 63 volumes)
Price on request

All prices quoted are subject to change without prior notice.

345.05
MAL-I
Cl. No.
Author MALIK
345.05
MAL-I
027141

BOOKS ON CRIMINAL LAW



P.L. Malik's
Criminal Court Handbook
Sumeet Malik
20th Edn., 2011 | ₹ 990

Cybercrimes
Dr. Talat Fatima
2011 Edition | ₹ 495

Supreme Court on
Bail, Anticipatory Bail and Quashment
Surendra Malik & Sudeep Malik
2011 Edition, Reprinted 2011 | ₹ 1150

General Principles of Criminal Law
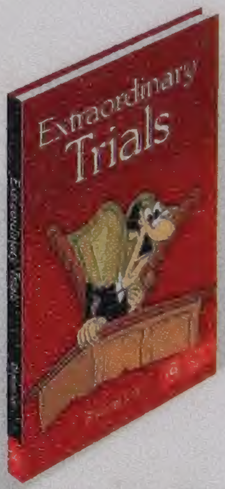
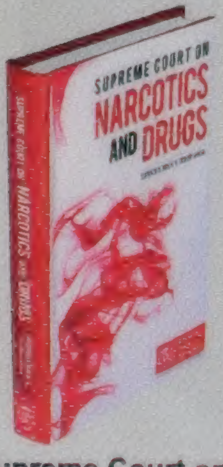
K.N.C. Pillai
2nd Edition, 2011 | ₹ 480

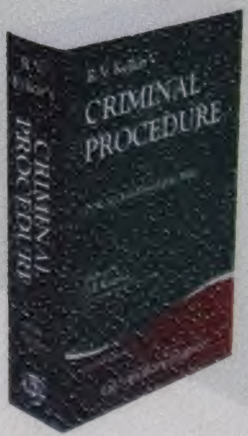


Extraordinary Trials
from Law Courts
Bhawani Lal
Reprinted 2011 | ₹ 265

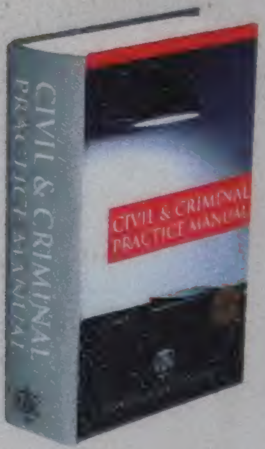
Principles of
The Law of Crimes
Shamsul Huda
Reprinted 2011 | ₹ 750



Supreme Court on
Narcotics and Drugs
Surendra Malik & Sudeep Malik
2011 Edition | ₹ 750



R.V. Kelkar's
Criminal Procedure
K.N.Chandrasekharan Pillai
5th Edn., Reprinted 2011 | ₹ 395



Civil and Criminal Practice Manual
2nd Edition, 2009 | ₹ 850

EBC
Eastern Book Company
India's leading law information provider

ebcwebstore.com
The largest number of legal titles online!

ISBN: 93-5028-168-6
EAN
AB/168
9 789350 281680